The New Consolidated Edition combines individual components of the Genealogy and Historical Notes of Spamer and Smith Families of Maryland, by Earle E. Spamer, produced on DVD and on paper first in 2008, and the New Edition Containing Additions and Corrections to June 2011 and with Illustrations, produced on DVD and on paper in 2011; these were distributed to family and institutional repositories and no separate copyright filing was made for these productions. The DVDs included ancillary materials that are omitted from this New Consolidated Edition.

Introduction to the New Consolidated Edition (2021)

THIS VOLUME comprises the principal components of Genealogy and Historical Notes of Spamer and Smith Families of Maryland, by Earle E. Spamer, first produced in 2008 on DVD, with a few copies on paper, followed by a greatly embellished New Edition Containing Additions and Corrections to June 2011 and with Illustrations, produced in 2011, also on DVD and a few copies on paper. Paper and DVD copies were shared with family and selected institutional repositories. The genealogy has not been updated since then. A very few additional notes were added in orange, in 2021; such comments are also noticeable by their being offset, like this.

The texts and illustrations pages in this New Consolidated Edition are taken directly from the 2011 "New Edition". Pagination is separate within each part (Part I, Part II, Appendices 1 and 2, and the Comprehensive Index. That "New Edition" appends to each part a series of "Additions and Corrections" pages, separately paginated by Roman numerals, that are cross-referenced by text page number and by boxed hyperlinks that are embedded at specific places in the original texts; these hyperlinks are operative in this New Consolidated Edition.

Also included within the "New Edition" of 2011 are interleaved pages of illustrations, each of which carries an alphnumerical suffix to its pertinent page number so that the Index is not affected. The Index does not include these illustration pages because it was prepared for the 2008 version.

In this New Consolidated Edition the principal components of the 2008/2011 texts are displayed as a single document, retaining all original paginations. In the PDF, users who browse by viewing page thumbnail images will be able to easily see where the breaks occur between these components by the insertion of a page with a large "X" and the alert to continue to "NEXT PAGE → " (see below for illustrations). These "X" pages embed digital bookmarks that are directly accessed by hyperlinks included in the New Consolidated Edition's Table of Contents page that follows herewith, such that users can jump immediately to the part of the document they wish. The Table of Contents also lists the PDF page number for each.

When printing from the digital document, use the PDF page numbers that appear at the top of the screen.

The family trees are basic diagrams, with individuals' names and dates inside boxes, linked to their respective parents and children by drawn lines. Each horizontal "row" on the charts represents one generation, so these charts can be quite broad.

The main-line trees for the Spamer and Smith families are drawn out on multiple pages in PDF format; they may be printed and pieced together to create a scroll. (When most of these trees were created from my genealogy database, an older program was used; a newer version does not create "one-page" views for large charts without cutting off part of the chart; so the multiple-page option was used for the large main-line trees.)

One decided disadvantage of the computer-generated trees is how the program uses the birth and death date fields. In the database, one may qualify a date as "before", "after", or "about" that date; but when the computer prepares a tree it uses just the year and thus may give the impression that the date range is certain when in fact it may not be precise. It is not a good idea to rely on the trees for authoritative dates for an individual; refer instead to the text of the main genealogy. A reminder note also appears on the first page of each tree.

When the original genealogy was distributed in 2008, several hard-copy versions of it were accompanied by pieced-together paper scrolls that depicted the family trees for the Spamer and Smith families. I had annotated these trees by hand to denote the unique numbers used in the genealogy text to identify direct-line descendants of these families (the numbers are generated automatically by the computer program). Unfortunately, the program does not include these numbers when a tree is drawn; so I had to do it by hand to the paper scrolls.

Indexes

Two indexes have been prepared for this genealogy. The first was a "Concise Index", which included only the names of principal persons of direct descendancy within each part of the genealogy. The second was a "Comprehensive Index", which includes everything that appears in the original (2008) release of the genealogy.

Since completing the original text of the genealogy in 2008, all additions, corrections and emendations have been compiled in separate "Additions and Corrections" documents, one for each part of the genealogy. An associated "Addendum to the Comprehensive Index" has been compiled, which is, like the "Additions and Corrections", continuously updated. The Addendum is restricted more to the names of individuals rather than to everything that appears in the "Additions and Corrections".

All indexes have been printed and distributed to early recipients of the genealogy, as appropriate to their needs. All indexes are included in the disk version of the genealogy.

Additions and Corrections

Each part of the genealogy (Parts I, II, and Appendices 1, 2) is accompanied by an "Additions and Corrections" document, which is continuously updated.
Users who have a printed copy of the genealogy should also have an updated copy of the Additions and Corrections.

Users who have digital copies of the genealogy on disk will also have the Additions and Corrections on the disk. Users who have older disks (distributed as CD-ROMs) will find the Additions and Corrections as separate files.

Users who have "Version 2" of the genealogy disk (distributed as DVDs) will find the Additions and Corrections appended to each pertinent part of the genealogy (Parts I and II, and Appendices 1 and 2). Each one is separately paginated with Roman numerals, to distinguish it more readily from the main text. The Additions and Corrections pages are also branded with an identifier, also to distinguish the pages from the main text.

Users who have "Version 2" will be able to open each part of the genealogy and automatically navigate, when necessary, to each pertinent addition, correction, or emendation. This is accomplished through hyperlinks that are embedded in the digital versions of the texts (in "Version 2" only). Clicking on a link will take the user immediately to the corresponding item(s) in the Additions and Corrections; and using the browser's "back" function will return the user to the point in the text from which they had left.

(1909–1955)

On an earlier occasion, in one of my formal publications, I availed myself of the opportunity to commemorate my mother, Jeannette Leda (Blouin) Spamer, and my father's sister, Katharine Seville Spamer, both deceased. They made possible my work and avocations. My father died when I was but three years of age, yet I have fallen in step with many of his aspirations and interests anyway. Family history, I had learned from my aunt, was one interest. As he was the son of a Spamer and a Smith, this is his story.

Preface
(Read Me)

THE very lengthy document presented here in separately paginated parts provides genealogical and ancillary historical information about branches of Spamer and Smith families of Maryland, and their extended relations. As the title indicates, this work comprises a genealogy, to which has been added a series of historical and informational notes; it is neither a narrative nor a historical text. This is a reference work in draft form but it may stand alone as it is; parts may be emended or expanded by other researchers.

Although earlier genealogies for each of these families were completed by family historians in 1963 and 1984 (now some 25–45 years ago), the relatively brief texts were never emended. The present work greatly expands those texts by exploring more generations and collateral lineages (groups who married into the principal families). Also added here are extensive explanations of facts and historical data. It may not be "fireside reading", but the overlying purpose is to document the facts and circumstances of lives and incidents that may have been muddled by time or forgotten in the collective family memory. Occasional corrections to the earlier histories are also included herein. With this information in hand a more sensible, readable history can be written; or it could be the seed for a work of historical fiction.

The broad geographic perspective of this genealogy increases the document's size, too. There was a time when, by and large, families remained where they were born, even within the same community or county; only occasionally did a family group migrate far to another locale. This genealogy shifts nationally as some family groups migrated away from Maryland. An international aspect comes into it from various sources, emigration and immigration alike. Thus, this is not a genealogy of families in Maryland, but of two greatly extended families from Maryland.

Substantial losses to our families' combined heritage have occurred through diminishing oral traditions, the deaths of family members, and the disappearance of primary resources such as correspondence, diaries, and memoirs. In this genealogy, some information has been established anew through the examination of publicly available records and publications. A few personal narrations that do survive from earlier family writers are, for the first time, collated into one place here. Information credited from other sources who have tapped into our family heritage is presented where it restores missing pieces or amplifies historically weak parts of our legacy. As much as possible has been documented so as to establish a broad historical understanding of the families and their unified heritage. Surely, future improvements in access to records, documents, and family traditions will contribute many more details.

Few people will find the entire genealogy of interest; some may find the volume of material overwhelming. However, one cannot underestimate the importance of a family's heritage; and what I have tried to do here is to collect as much as possible into one place. Information herein may answer questions or jog one's memory. But there will always be fresh readers, too, who will find all of it new. If from among these hundreds of pages a single answer is provided now; if one family group finds some information of its heritage; if the pages offer a century from now a key to continue the search for some pieces of information; if another family historian takes it apart to rebuild it, faults and facts alike—the value of this work will be equal to all.

My explanation of the formats used here is lengthy because I will not always be present to explain my methods or the reasons for compiling this material in the fashion seen here. Some readers may not be familiar with the nuances of genealogical conventions, which may seem a little peculiar. I have tried to make this document something that will be familiar to a researcher who seeks a conventional genealogy of names and dates, while at the same time I hope to attract those who seek facts and information with the promise of there being something more than "just" an account of names and dates. In any case, I expect that users of this document will use of it what they wish and ignore the rest.

I have tried to anticipate when a reader might not be informed about the significance of a person, place, or event. My extensive use of footnotes may be intimidating to some, too; others will follow them eagerly. Explanatory interjections are made as parenthetical comments and footnotes, sometimes lengthy ones. My guide on this matter was simple: if it raised a question for me, I had to find an answer, if possible, because for another reader it may raise the same question. Similarly, something familiar to me may not be familiar to someone else, and thus it may demand an explanation for their sake. Many notes also document my sources; they also serve as access points for further investigation should the reader wish, and have the means, to explore further.

Even the first glance at this document tells that it is much more than what most people consider to be a traditional "genealogy". A simple genealogical list of names and dates accomplishes the principal purpose of tracking individuals and generations. But such a list lacks an engaging, socially informative element, so I have made this as much as possible a genealogy of people's lives and livelihoods. Some parts are trivial facts; others are substantially important contributions to the family history. Still, I do not attend to the bias of historiography; there is very little here in the form of analysis and opinion. Neither have I written a narrative because I am not good enough of a writer that I can craft a socially enriching story. Instead, I provide notes. The job of composing that story, well written and reflectively informative, is a task better left to another writer. Here I present some facts with which to help write it.

Finding faults in this work will be easy. Some sub-branches of the families have a poor reporting of both genealogical and historical information. The wait for "more information" never ends. Truly comprehensive coverage has been elusive because of geographically far-flung and geneologically distant family and by the impositions of busy times; not to mention the brevity of life. It is time to collate what is in hand and to make it available to the family's researchers and the curious alike. Regardless of one's individual focus, the whole work has been a cumulative effort, one never ending (see my Acknowledgments). I may be afforded the opportunity to re-edit parts of this work. But I especially intend that this work be continued—by others, who will be able to expand it and fill the many gaps that I have left in it.

Please build upon and improve the part with which you are familiar. ☙

Disclaimer

THIS GENEALOGY is comprehensive only as far as information was available to me. It is most useful for understanding the individuals, genealogical structure, and historical incidents of the family tree between about the late 18th century to the middle of the 20th century. Beyond these limits it is less satisfactory, but nonetheless of interest and still useful.

There is plenty of room for growth and revision. Omissions or scant information for particular individuals or family groups are due to my not knowing about the information, or my having inquired about (or anticipated) facts that were not delivered. Surely other workers would have carried out this work differently, and presented it in a different format; each within their own areas of familiarity and expertise. What is given here will have to stand until the whole work is again taken apart for another purpose, by someone else. New insights and new resources will allow greater and better discussion of people, places, and events.

I have been disappointed on some occasions to have met or contacted people—each was a potential source—who are singularly disinterested in family history; some to the point of avoidance, others with focused interest in their most direct family line. This would be regretful if it were not so understandable; these are personal and private decisions. The dam of procrastination is also very effective in deterring communication, as are the distractions of daily life; but in fairness these, too, are blameless to the weaker components of this genealogy.

Sometimes family information is obtained from individuals who treat it as if it is proprietary knowledge; others have considered that my work may expose them to malicious individuals who seek out personal information for their nefarious activities. I have honored special requests to restrain personal information; but I have not placed any restrictions upon historical facts or information that is available through public records. Still, this document will not be disseminated by me either through the Internet or through publication. It is a manuscript, intended for the personal study of the heritage of the Spamer and Smith families. Nonetheless, I expect someday it will also be useful for general genealogical investigations by independent researchers.

Early in 2007 I decided to pause the endless process of compilation in order to make available what is at hand. Although it is complete enough as it stands, slow progress could have continued to add to this work for years. There are many additions that current and future users may look forward to—as I, too, will welcome them. This is, in any case, a start; something to build upon.

Errors must be attributed to me, even if I have repeated them from another source. Mistakes that may exist were of course due to my being inattentive, careless, or unknowledgable of facts. This work is meant to be edited, corrected, and expanded, which for the sake of future members of the family I hope will be done.

General Introduction

THE SURNAMES SPAMER AND SMITH divide this genealogy into two principal parts. Although the Smith side of the family is by far the larger of the two, and more is known about them than for the Spamers, it is ungainly to be a "Spamer" author of a genealogy about "Smiths and Spamers"; so the Spamers comprise Part I. Then, too, there is the convention of placing paternal ancestry before that of the maternal lineage. The convention is mostly followed herein even though, honestly, it makes little practical sense because we each are descended from two parents and their families. And inasmuch as this is a personal work, for the most part I write in the first person, where it is appropriate to do so.

The SPAMER family has its roots in Germany, some members of whom emigrated to Baltimore, Maryland. (This is my paternal line.)

The SMITH family has its roots in England or Ireland, and some members of the family emigrated to the Eastern Shore of Maryland, perhaps on more than one occasion. (Smith is my father's maternal line.)

These Spamers and Smiths join through the 1901 marriage of my grandparents, John Ward Spamer and Lora Seville Smith, in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Both families were then members of the Church of the New Jerusalem, a faith also known as the New Church, its congregations sometimes called Swedenborgians. The Spamers resided in Baltimore at the time. Lora Smith's family originally hailed from the Eastern Shore of Maryland, but were then in Philadelphia. Her father, a minister of the New Church, remained a missionary to the Eastern Shore even while he resided in Philadelphia.

The MARTEL and BLOUIN lineages are collateral to the Spamer lineage. Since they are my mother's immediate relations (maternal and paternal, respectively), their genealogies are relegated to their own appendix herein (Appendix 1). The Martel family (my mother's maternal line) has its roots with French emigrants to colonial Québec, in the 17th century. During the 19th and 20th centuries, both the Blouins and the Martels emigrated to Massachusetts and New Hampshire. The Blouin family (my mother's paternal line) has its roots in Québec, Canada; of course they were earlier from France, but the lineage has not been found. Regretfully, very little is now known to the family about the Blouins who were even my mother's immediate relations.

PURPOSE

The Genealogy and Historical Notes of Spamer and Smith Families of Maryland has been prepared at this time because most of the essential data are at hand. I was discouraged to realize that the previous genealogists of the family worked on their manuscripts during the closing years of their lives, often as declining health stole good progress; while other family historians never got to the point of preparing a manuscript. More work could have been done by all of them had they been availed the time to complete it. By producing this document now, I may have the luxury of re-editing it in the future, which I do understand it will need. But more importantly, completing it at this time makes the information that I have accumulated—rough and polished alike—available to everyone now rather than through promise or good intention.

The reader will realize that this lengthy genealogy comprises sets of facts, sometimes with long quotations. This was an intentional design. The purposes of this genealogy are: 1) to provide genealogical data on family lineages, as best as I have determined or trusted from acquired data; and 2) to provide historical information that relates to individuals, places, and events. These are series of notes rather than narratives, although in some places where explanatory texts are inserted I have tried to assemble them in a sensible and interesting way. In other places, narratives or correspondence that were written by earlier family members are transcribed. As for myself, I write for family members of all relations who are interested in connections and history; and I write for the random genealogical researcher who seeks specific facts and connections about individuals or other associations.

Because this is a reference work first for the use of the family, it is all the more important to rely on original documents when such exist; this avoids ambiguity that may be caused by summarizing or paraphrasing. By quoting as much as I have, I consolidate into one place numerous primary source materials[1] to which most users of this genealogy may not have access. Quotations from secondary sources (like books or Internet websites) that relate directly to the lives of individual members of the family are used to preserve (and sometimes restore) a portion of the family heritage while at the same time not detract from the originality of those authors. In a fashion, these are my working notes, which allow me to point the reader to my original sources, and which I leave to the next generations who may devise a more proper family history.

Genealogy is, to some, as if it were like stamp collecting—to fill an album page or to delight in the historical rarity. Often, the genealogy is nothing more than a documentation (however reliable) of names and dates and children through numerous generations. But genealogy by definition means “to study” the generations; it is an opportunity to glimpse lives. The subjects are people who lived in neighborhoods, they went to work and to war, they married, they had families joyous and sad, they hoped and despaired, and they died full of accomplishment or alone. Some were lost to age, some lost at sea; others were simply, inexplicably, lost to memory.

Thanks to modern research methods and resources, some individuals now have more information known about them than any of our recent generations knew, at least since the time that these people were alive. In some cases, a passing comment about a person, place, or event revealed a new, perhaps unexpected perspective; or sometimes it generated a haze of disappointing ambiguity. In the present genealogy I diverge into some of these stories because they are interesting; occasionally just for fun, and sometimes because a little explanation brings new life to a family member. In some instances, I probably overwhelm the reader with transcribed accounts and records, which may not be as interesting to more distant relations. After all, the beloved “Aunt Lizzie” may not be of much interest to her 2nd cousin three times removed. But were I to omit some information or record, it may be rediscovered later, deemed important to a task at hand—and I then reprimanded for having thought it was not of any useful interest. I feel that it is far more important that a future researcher be able to by-pass information than to want it. I will repeat the essence of my disclaimer: if people or facts about people are not in this genealogy, I did not know about them.

Aside from my sister and my wife, I am the last of a line, with only distantly related living relatives—my closest other relations are first cousins once removed. So I find myself ignorant of the personalities of many of the relations listed in this genealogy. My opportunities to provide insightful comments or anecdotes about individuals are few. I include such things where I can, but I am at a loss for many potentially informative comments that would come from parts of the family about which I know little.

For all of these reasons, I have crafted a document that uses a standarized genealogical report for its skeleton. This is to document the generations in a uniformly applied manner; specifically, the National Genealogical Society Quarterly format, a report arrangement style widely used by genealogists. It is one of the styles used by reports generated by the Family Tree Maker software, which is the database I have used for my genealogical records. I have slightly modified the NGS format, though, for ease of readability; for example, I spell out abbreviations that may seem to be cumbersome to the reader who is not familiar with standard genealogical methods.

To the “skeletal”, standardized genealogy I insert series of notes containing information about individuals, places, and events; some brief, some extensive. If personal information, such as correspondence, is available and pertinent, it is included, too. Information about places or historical events are mentioned where I have thought them to be informative or of passing interest. Those who wish to read through the clerical facts of residences and occupations, or read specific commentaries, may do so at their leisure. Skipping over information will not generally hinder an understanding of another part of the genealogy. Some of this information will surely be of interest to one reader but not another; but the important thing is that the information is available if needed.

If any part of this work is useful to one person who seeks corroboration of an anecdote, or if it is useful to a family group who wishes to understand more about its immediate lineage, then this genealogy will have served its main purpose. If it inspires someone to begin a new investigation about places, people, or events—or for that matter even a wholly new family genealogy—then this work will have been useful in that regard, too.

PREVIOUS WORK

Only two earlier genealogical works relate to the families who are the principal subjects here. Both are unpublished and are in draft form even though work on them had ended. Nevertheless, they serve as the core of the present genealogy, which has been rechecked against public records and greatly expanded through continued research. Descriptives summaries of these two earlier documents are as follows:

"Genealogy of the Spamer Families of Baltimore"
compiled by Adolph Milton "Andy" Spamer (1914-1986)

This document was distributed by A. M. Spamer[2] in 1984. There is no narrative other than a brief foreword. It is a conventional genealogical list—principally names and dates only, with occasional, cursory notes. It is subdivided according to various branches of the family based upon original German ancestors and American descendant progenitors. The result is a 20-page typescript outlining the American descendency, to which is attached 46 appendix pages of mixed typescript and xerographic data. The appendix pages include the genealogical lineages for the German ancestral groups. Also presented in the appendix pages are some facsimile reproductions of original German church records, some of which pertain to immigrant members of the family; and some other primary documents. A. M. Spamer also provided translations in English for the German facsimiles. There are some tables and fold-out charts depicting genealogies, but there are no other diagrams or illustrations in this document.

In the present genealogy, A. M. Spamer's typescript is referred to as the "Spamer Families of Baltimore".[3]

[2] A. M. Spamer preferred not to use his given name; he instead used his initials or the familiar "Andy".

[3] A. M. Spamer distributed xerographic copies of this manuscript; how many were produced is not known. He deposited one copy in the Library of Congress, Washington, D.C.; another copy in the library of the Maryland Historical Society, Baltimore. He also distributed copies to some of his genealogical correspondents. Appendix pages A-8 through A-19 of this work comprise facsimile reproductions of some original German church records, which A. M. Spamer had obtained from microfilm copies in the genealogical archives of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints. For each facsimile reproduction in the original copy of this genealogy, the page that follows it includes a transcription of the German text and

"Smith Genealogy and Some Reminiscences"

by Edward Seville Smith (1880-1963)

Work on this narrative form of genealogy ended in 1963 when Edward S. Smith distributed carbon copies of the 107-page typescript. It includes a few lists of family members but does not follow the conventional form of a genealogy. It was meant to be used with a large genealogical scroll on which the family tree was drawn out. The typescript is approximately in order by family generations, and it includes many personal anecdotes and observations either by E. S. Smith himself or by contributors. However, information relating to some individuals is scattered to several different places in the typescript, which the reader would not know until the entire typescript was read. There are no diagrams, charts, or illustrations in this document.

Edward Seville Smith, ca. 1910

E. S. Smith had also prepared a large paper scroll, about 3 × 6 feet in size, on which he roughly drew out the family tree, with occasional annotations. Over the years some copies of this scroll have been mechanically reproduced on rolls and distributed to family members, who in turn may have inscribed their own emendations. Some of the Smith scroll's annotations were not included in his typescript narrative, but which are included in the present genealogy.

In the present genealogy, Edward S. Smith's typescript is referred to as the "Smith Genealogy".[4] The scroll is cited only when annotations on it are referenced.

an English translation. A. M. Spamer did not indicate the source of the translations, but in the present genealogy I present evidence that it was he who did the translations himself.

[4] The disposition of the original typescript has not been determined. From at least one of the carbon copies, more copies were reproduced xerographically and distributed to family members. How many copies have been made is not known, but it was not many. The text of the "Smith Genealogy" was transcribed electronically by someone in the family (they did not include their name on the document). That "reset" version was printed in numerous copies and distributed at about the time of the 1994 Smith Family reunion in Chestertown, Maryland. In 2005, I prepared a new transcription, retaining E. S. Smith's original pagination so that I could prepare an index to the document. The index may be used also with any of the existing carbon or photocopies of Smith's original typescript. My retyped version was intended to serve as an accessible version of the family history—either electronically searchable as a disk copy, or manually searchable with a printed copy and its index. I still intended to move ahead with work on the present genealogy, but I expected it to continue for many years, perhaps even until "retirement", God willing. Early in 2007 I realized the folly of "hoarding" so much information at the risk of never having the opportunity to compile it into a useful format; so I set about to producing the present document. When the 2008 Smith Family reunion was conceived in mid-2007, it provided an impetus for me to move ahead more immediately, with hope that a presentable draft could be completed by the time of the reunion in Tucson, Arizona, in July 2008.

The works cited here were based wholly upon first-hand information and correspondence with family members. Oddly enough, family reunions have not factored into the data-gathering process. The Spamer family (at least the Baltimore branches of the family) have never held a family reunion. The Gilbert and Nora Smith descendants—admittedly a very large extended family—held reunions in 1994 in Chestertown, Maryland, and in 2008 in Tucson, Arizona. However, the truth be told, reunion attendees often embrace just a few specific lineages of a far more expansive family; not everyone present can be informative about more extended relations. By far the most productive sources are those who are contacted individually.

A. M. Spamer's genealogy was based on work begun by his sister, Frances D. Spamer. She reached a point where she decided that she could no longer continue the work, and turned it over to her brother, who also worked on the family genealogy. He combined her work with his own and shortly later produced the typescript, "Spamer Families of Baltimore", which he mailed to some of the Spamer relatives with whom he had corresponded. He also had the presence of mind to deposit copies with the Maryland Historical Society and with the Library of Congress (the latter perhaps originating through a copyright application). Other than the genealogical listing, what is especially valuable in A. M. Spamer's document is the inclusion of xerographic copies of original documents from German church records (that is, reproduced from microfilm copies of the originals). A. M. Spamer also included some translations of these German documents, and transcriptions of some original letters. Almost all of that material is incorporated into the present genealogy.

Roberta Smith Mack and J. Lathrop Mack
ca. 1930

Edward S. Smith's narrative embraced the earlier genealogical research by J. Lathrop Mack and his wife, Roberta (Smith) Mack, who had begun their work in the early 1920s. To this early work Ed Smith added more material, which he included in his typescript narrative of the Smith family. Most of the original records that the Macks had held were those that later were in the possesion by the Macks' daughter, Elizabeth Munger. After Elizabeth's death the documents were sent to Nadine Synnestvedt. That much is evident from the paper trail with those documents, although inexplicably many of the documents Nadine holds are photocopies. Many of these records are incorporated into the present genealogy.

The disposition of Edward S. Smith's records is less certain, although I received copies of some of these through both Helen McCarraher and Nadine Synnestvedt. The documents I have are at least second- or third-generation copies; the original trails of ownership are fairly muddled if not now completely obscured. My set of reference copies includes material from other family members, too, which I collected from about the 1970s to early 2000s. In fairness, I must interject that all of my early acquisitions were received and kept, but never acted upon; perhaps it was the budding archivist in me, but more certainly my packrat nature.

Additional, ancillary materials have come from other sources. One specially illuminating example is the Potts family, the maternal lineage of Nadine Smith Synnestvedt. A tremendous amount of useful information was read in the Potts family papers, which are held in the Archives of the Academy of the New Church, in Bryn Athyn, Pennsylvania. Much from this material is incorporated into the present genealogy.

As for the Martels and Blouins, there is a substantial Internet presence for numerous branches of Martels, but to my knowledge no single authoritative genealogy exists; and there is virtually no information on the Blouins, at least of the branches that relate here. For the Martel and Blouin branches of the family, I have relied mostly on the genealogical work and first-hand family information of others.

The manuscripts by A. M. Spamer and Edward Smith (mentioned above), and information provided in communications with other genealogists and family members, have established the framework for the present genealogy. For the Spamers and Smiths I have reformulated data from the two manuscripts for use in the present genealogy. The Smith narrative in particular includes extensive personal remembrances, which are likewise re-edited and quoted in the present genealogy. I have also greatly expanded upon the work of A. M. Spamer and Edward Smith using resources that were not nearly as readily available to them as they are to me. I include additional family members as well as a substantial set of historical and cultural information that relates to these individuals, places, and events.

SCOPE OF THE PRESENT WORK

This genealogy collates facts about people from as many sources as possible. The main lineages are those that were reported by A. M. Spamer and Edward S. Smith, to which I add much more. Some parts are very comprehensive; other parts are fragmentary. This reflects the fortune of resources and the scattered losses of information due to attrition or to lack of access to those who could provide more information. This is as much a complete work as it is one still in progress—if some future worker will take it, expand upon it, and correct it.

As I have already noted, the present work is not a narrative; it is meant to be a basic reference work, one which also depends upon the written records of earlier family members (where such records exist). I include explanatory notes that discuss places, events, and people who are otherwise mentioned casually in the text. The overall work is presented first for the use of families whose understanding of their history is either meager or interrupted by gaps. Second, this genealogy presents basic genealogical information about families who lived mostly in Maryland, Delaware, Pennsylvania, and New England, but about whom little has previously been recorded; in some cases, the information here is the first such compilation.

This is not a comprehensive work. Whereas the core is as exhaustive as I can make it at this time—thanks in good measure to the hard work of earlier family historians—the erosion of family memory and the loss of records over time have taken their toll. Some individuals have a great deal of information that is known about them, some even including their own written records. Other individuals have just a few jots written about them. This has resulted in a "lop-sided" genealogy, with large amounts of information about some individuals, and little or no information about others. Some of the omissions, particularly amongst the most recent generations, may be surprising to one part of the family or another whose members are poorly represented with information here. These fragments of information, or outright omissions, are due only to my not having had the information at hand. For older generations, much information has been restored from public records, such as the U.S. Census and large digital databases accessible through the Internet, which have helped tremendously in ways that were unimaginable even a generation ago.

In an analytical treatment, such as an historiographical essay, convention expects that the writer will formulate a narrative, and will rely on quotations only for historically or documentary important reasons. I have, when possible, preferred to let as many quotations as possible speak for the individuals who are the moment of discussion. Some individuals left considerable records of correspondence or diaries; others (in fact, most) left nothing that survives today. In many cases I must resort to paraphrase or newly created text, although I have preferred to let as much contemporary material speak for itself through quotation.

The typescript genealogies by A. M. Spamer and E. S. Smith, noted above, contain important facts and contributed narratives. All of these are incorporated into the present genealogy; the Smith genealogy more so than the Spamer genealogy because it is a much richer source. The Spamers left almost no primary documents; and a few documents about which information is known cannot now be located. Because of the manner in which the earlier Spamer and Smith typescripts were assembled by their compilers, passages about one person or another may appear in several places throughout the typescript. In the present genealogy, these displaced passages are consolidated, usually in the principal entry for a person under discussion, so that all of the first-hand information about a person is presented in one pertinent place. And to this I have added much more extensive notes.

In some instances I have quoted even from published obituaries, but usually only in those cases where the source material is not easy to obtain by the casual family researcher; for example, from 18th- or 19th-century publications. Similarly, I have quoted from sources that are more modern, but only in those instances that refer specifically to our family members and which I deemed to be a critical source that restores pieces of the family heritage. True, all published materials are "available elsewhere", and a researcher should seek out those sources. And among the very valuable source materials are manuscripts and diaries, scarce few of which survive in our families; some are still held privately, a few are in publicly accessible repositories. But pragmatically, the family researcher may be daunted by the need, or may be unable, to travel to special-collections libraries or reference collections—who do not loan as a matter of prudent business and archival practice. Moreover, these institutions may be geographically far removed from the family investigator, who may not have the luxury of the same kind of travel as would, for example, a historical scholar who is researching a book. Some hopeful investigators may also be intimidated by the perceived "airs" of special-collections libraries and their rules and regulations of admission and materials use. Having worked in such collections most of my professional life, I am selfimmunized from intimidation, but I am conscious of the unfortunate perspective that such collections and their institutions may hold for some people.

I have considered the restoration of the family heritage to be the driving force behind this entire work. Regarding family history, many inquiries made by individual members of the family are made casually, not as the process of in-depth research. In such instances citations to sources that will provide that information will not suffice; the citations are likely to be ignored as impractical demands. Inquires or curiosity about family history and culture should be handily answered for the family members; otherwise disinterest quickly accrues. Many people have not the time or temperament to indulge in painstakingly detailed research; in fact, the process may be seen as one of drudgery, or the task of those who are perceived to be more scholarly. This is an unfortunate perception; but still, it is unreasonable to demand the inquirer hold such an interest when the object is simply to gain some facts about one's family. Accordingly, this genealogy will, for most readers, be most useful in small and selective pieces—one person or small family group at a time. The remainder of the genealogy will be glossed over or bypassed altogether. But one cannot anticipate in advance just who those individuals of interest will be.

It is very important to maintain a family's heritage by gathering information about it, from as many original and reliable sources as possible. I am struck by a parallel example in my professional work as an archivist. Native American groups, now in the process of recovering, restoring and preserving as much as is possible of their heritage, are acquiring copies of primary source materials that relate to their peoples and cultures; most especially their languages, of which the native speakers are dying off. These people use the documentation to reassert and advance their historical record, sometimes to document that which has already been lost amongst themselves. In the same fashion I have crafted this genealogy to collate and repatriate—in one place—as much information as possible that relates to the history and culture of our family.

Were I to pare down the size of this document by referring readers to other sources—or worse, to refer them to things "on file"—does not make information immediately available. Such methodology is bound to frustrate future researchers who may not have access to those records. In some cases, records referred to may subsequently be lost; this is no place more evident than in the medium of the Internet. For this reason alone, as much information as possible is transcribed into the present document, so as to preserve the family culture. There already are a few such instances of utterly lost data that are noted in the present genealogy, much to my dismay.

COLLATERAL GENEALOGIES

This genealogy is greatly expanded by the exploration of collateral genealogies—family groups who married into the principal families. One may wonder why the collateral genealogies are necessary to the Spamer–Smith family genealogy overall. They are presented for their informational value, first for the use of the family, secondarily as genealogical references. They are not meant to be, nor are they, comprehensive lineages for the whole family in question; rather, they follow the ancestors of the person or persons who married into the Spamer or Smith family. (One example is the Hollyday family of Queen Anne's County, which is well understood genealogically. Herein there is a separate Hollyday family collateral genealogy, which itemizes only that part of the extended Hollyday family that more immediately relates to the Smith genealogy.)

The advantage of the collateral sketches is that they touch upon lineages that often are overlooked in genealogies. They may host individuals about whom there are family recollections, particularly the constellation of distant cousins. Other collateral sketches bring surprising facts to the family, which otherwise would be unnoticed. Whereas one will hear, from time to time, of the distant relationship of a historical figure, one might wonder just how that relationship is figured, if indeed the relationship is a truthful one. I hope that the collateral sketches here provide some answers to such questions. These are not usually matters of "descendency", but of "association" and history. Usually there are several intervening marriages between the present generations and the historical figures to which reference (or claim) is made. The sketches further outline how our families have interacted with others of their time, and how family lines are connected in surprising ways.

Sometimes a collateral sketch embraces connections to historical American settlers. One family anecdote repeats the supposed descendancy of Rebecca Price Smith (1777–1819) from Thomas Price, an immigrant who arrived in 1634 with the ships Ark and Dove of Maryland settlement history. The connection is as yet unproved due to the missing information of one or two generations, demonstrating the inherrently unreliable nature of "family tradition". On the other hand, Marion Spamer (1896–after 1941) married Sherman Willard Eddy (1877–1952), a documented descendant of three Plymouth Plantation immigrants who had arrived aboard the Mayflower in 1620.

Other examples embrace historical people; for example, Benjamin Franklin is very distantly related to our Smith family through the Emory and Watson collateral genealogies. The family of George Washington (through his mother, Mary Ball) is very distantly related to the Spamer family through the marriage of W. Dale Wassell and Margaret Karner, daughter of Frederick Karner and Susan Spamer. Still other examples include the genealogies of families who have generations of notable public and community service—like the Emorys of Spaniard Neck and the Lloyds of Wye, relations of the Smiths of the Eastern Shore through various marriages.

Specific individuals in the collateral genealogies played important roles in the history of our nation, or in regional or local affairs. While they may be distant genealogical relations, many of our family of the day may have recognized them as "cousins" and distant "family". The accomplishments of these historical figures are noted herein neither as boast nor direct genealogical claim, but to place these people and their work in the context of what was—then—current affairs. It is a manner of reliving history through the eyes of our family members. Most importantly, such sketches are a means by which family claims can be checked; corroborated or determined either to be unfounded or uncertain. The directness of genealogical relations can likewise be ascertained. And in the end, it shows just how closely related most people can be to each other without realizing it. Just one example is summarized as follows.

The Lloyd family of Wye manor in Talbot County lived there for many generations; they intermarried frequently with the Tilghman family, and they in turn through other families ever closer in association with our direct Smith lineage. The Lloyds especially had a long history of generational involvement in the political affairs of Maryland. Rather as a point of dismay to the family historian, successive generations repeated the use of given names—Edward Lloyd was a popular one—adding a layer of confusion for those who are not keenly in tune with that family. One of the Lloyds—one of the Elizabeth Lloyds—in turn married John Cadwalader, a notable officer with General Washington during the Revolutionary War. He belonged to an equally well-established family in early Pennsylvania, whose family in turn intermarried with other well-established families of the area. The Cadwaladers were involved in the political and economic affairs of Pennsylvania from its earliest times, who included a Provincial Councilor of the commonwealth.[5] John and Elizabeth Cadwalader had a daughter, Elizabeth, who married Archibald McCall, who was of a well-established merchant family similarly well founded in the affairs of Pennsylvania. Archibald McCall's mother, Judith Kemble McCall, was the daughter of Peter Kemble, President of the Provincial Council of New Jersey. By this point, even the liberally organized genealogies presented in the current document cut off further records of relations. Nonetheless, beyond the connections mentioned here an additional set of notable relations continues in the lineage of Peter Kemble—another daughter married General Thomas Gage, who commanded the British Army in Boston at the beginning of the Revolution.

As one can see from this short example, replications of similar sets of marriages produce a profusion of complexly intertwined genealogies; the same scenario repeats through many of the collateral genealogies presented in Appendix 2. However, only some of the more prominent lineages are mentioned in the present genealogy. Rather than being substantive contributions to our main family genealogies, they aid in setting the historical context for our more closely-bound lineages. Despite their genealogical and temporal remoteness, what today are very distant relations to us were, to some of our ancestors, distant cousins; some may actually have met, while others may have known of each other only through family talk.

If nothing else, these partial lineages should bring some enjoyment to the reader about the broader history of our very extended family. They are, moreover, a very good example of the essence of social networking theory, which many readers may recognize as the idea conveyed by "six degrees of separation" (or, sometimes, "seven degrees of separation") that demonstrates just what a socially small world it is we live in.[6] The premise of "six degrees of separation" is that everyone in the world is connected through a chain of no more than six acquaintances; that is, "someone who knows someone who knows someone" will within six connections return to someone who knows the originator. That within just a few such connections members of our family can be unexpectedly attached to very famous lineages (like those of Benjamin Franklin in the Smith genealogy, and the mother of George Washington in the Spamer genealogy) is ample demonstration of the six-degrees premise. Even so, not every lineage is a tenuous connection to notable individuals; some may trace descendancies that are, in fact, direct.

[6] The theme has been repeated so often in modern cultural venues that the phrase has become muddled, overused, and misused. It has been applied to all kinds of human affairs, not just genealogical connections. The phrase comes from the title of a 1990 play by John Guare that was based on the real-life experience of confidence-man David Hampton, who managed to convince a gullible contingent of people that he was the son of actor Sydney Poitier. The play also was made into a film in 1993 by director Fred Schepisi. Of course, the premise is not social law, nor restricted to six steps, but the coincidence is demonstrated rather well even in the present genealogy.

SOURCES AND RELIABILITY OF DATA

The information that is provided in this genealogy is as complete as is known to me. This means that I did not selectively overlook facts or individuals. The absence, or incompleteness, of information is because I did not find the information or it was not supplied to me. This is most noticeable among the generations who are alive today. Some individuals and their children and grandchildren may be absent because there are so many of them. Most likely they are absent from this genealogy because family members were not able to, or did not, provide all of the information to make the list complete. This is always a work in progress. All of my sources are in my files, which are professionally arranged (in archival parlance), the boxes for which now occupy an entire large bookcase.

Data relating to my immediate family, back to my great-great grandparents, is of course wholly reliable based on first-hand information as well as the anecdotal information given to me by members of the family. Some facts about them were added from public records, which are inferentially reliable.

I have traced many families through the U.S. censuses and other public records, such as immigration records, wartime draft registrations, and so on, which are available today on Internet websites, particularly Ancestry.com. But much extended family information—especially the large collateral genealogical sketches that are included as appendices to this series of sketches—are provided by independent genealogical researchers. Regretfully, my earliest forays into these resources are now undocumented, but I provide my sources where I retained file copies of the data. In any case, I treat these lineages as working documents, with which facts can be verified or traced anew in public records.

Some information has been derived from searches of indexed newspapers found on Internet websites. While such sources have proven to be invaluable, many of them rely upon images that are digitally captured and indexed with optical character-recognition (OCR) software. While this is as yet an imperfect technology, its benefits greatly outweigh its problems. Because of mis-identified characters, a name or word so recorded will be missed in online searches. Contrived, purposefully misspelled names were also used in searches, which enable me to "stumble upon" additional useful sources. Other times, a useful record is discovered serendipitously, while searching for someone or something else.

As with many genealogical studies, a large number of sources are relied upon; the level of reliability of the data can vary substantially. This is especially true with the huge amount of unreviewed genealogical data that are now available through electronic media, on Internet websites. I have relied upon subjective evaluations of the reliability of all data from secondary sources. In the case of the earlier genealogical researchers of the family, I accept most of their findings. I believe that these researchers were capable, and just as prone to error as I am, but I rely upon their (now largely undocumented) correspondences with family members who provided first-hand and anecdotal information about various lineages. Some of the correspondents of the earlier researchers likewise provided a great service by searching through archived public records, such as through legal documents of real estate transactions; decedents' birth and marriage records, immigration records, and wills and probate records; and contractual agreements when such come to light.

With regard to the data obtained from Internet websites, these are potentially very unreliable. I tested many of these informational lists, especially those with data from the 19th and 20th centuries. For example, if I could corroborate the names and relations of individuals, their families, and marriages in successive census records, I was confident that I could accept the data as reasonably reliable. I also checked similar informational lists as posted to Internet databases by different people, to different websites. If the data could be corroborated through cross-checking, particularly if lineages had also been published in family genealogies that are available now in libraries, I accepted the data that I found.

In the case of famous families (their fame usually due to political and social prominence), widely available documentary evidence is available for them, which I have accepted accordingly; much of it is from credible scholarly sources. In general, it is of course ideal to corroborate facts through the examination of original birth, marriage, and death records; but today this is no longer practical within the scope of a large genealogy. The constraints of modern privacy issues imposed by governments and by the elective and official declarations of individuals, and the steeply rising costs of requesting documents that are publicly available, impose increasing hardships on researchers today.

I have taken the view that data are obtained from sources that are deemed to be reliable. These data are collated to create a working document, with which future researchers may elaborate upon or emend. Only first-hand family information is the most reliable—but at that, sometimes family information is faulty, as is occasionally revealed herein.

I incorporated Internet-derived data to my genealogical database (Family Tree Maker) by hand; I have not accepted computer-generated "gedcom" files (genealogical communication files) unless my source was known to me and confident; there were only one or two such cases. By hand-entering the information about individuals, the database program allowed me to check for obvious clerical errors; occasionally, the database would flag an error automatically. Whenever data were encountered that contained more than one or two unexplained inconsistencies, or peculiar errors, no part of the database was trusted and it was discarded. For example, one source included jumps between generations, such that a child would have been born when the putative parent would have been 150 years old! In many cases I was able to corroborate web-posted data against published genealogies, which if the printed works are not inherently reliable they are at least available to other researchers and thus open to documentation and corroboration.

As such, I have treated my data-gathering methods as a first-pass filter when unverified data were taken into the database. In some cases, though, some data can be accepted out of hand because of the great amount of reliably documented research already available, such as in the connections to notable individuals.

I repeat that this is a working document, portions of which future researchers can build upon or discard as needed. At this time it fulfills a more immediate family need to understand its history as best as possible, made more interesting with historical anecdotes, clearly revealing hearsay when such is suspected.

These primary Spamer and Smith genealogies serve as a foundation for future researchers who inquire about these Maryland families—about whom virtually no information is available from other sources.

Format

THE DESCRIPTIONS that follow are provided partly to document the methods that are used in the creation of this genealogy. Users of this genealogy may not be familiar with some of the processes, procedures, and formats that are used in standard genealogies, which I have tried to follow. Here I also explain the non-standard formats that I contrived specifically for this work. Furthermore, I may not be present to explain my methods and purposes, so this must speak on my behalf.

DIVISIONS OF THE GENEALOGY

The SPAMERS recorded here are my paternal lineage. They are descended from ancestors in Germany, whose ancestry there has been traced (by other researchers) to Schotten of the early 1400s; but the focus of the present genealogy is on the descendants of those Spamers who emigrated to Baltimore. The earliest family unit of our Spamers who immigrated into the U.S. arrived in 1832. Other families who married into the Spamers trace their ancestors to immigrants who arrived in Baltimore also in the early- to mid-19th century..

The SMITHS recorded here are my father's maternal lineage, said to descend from James Smith, patentee of "Smith's Delight" in old Talbot County (Queen Anne's Co. today) in November 1683. He was already a landowner at that time, holding the adjacent "Smith's Beginning", but otherwise nothing is documented of his ancestry.[7] However, as explained in the introductory material to Part II of this genealogy, one member of the fourth generation, also named James Smith and from whom our later Smiths are descended, might have been attributed to incorrect parents. The apparent discrepancy remains unresolved. And despite the potential error, this James may yet be related to James of "Smith's Delight" after all, so the relationships as originally established by earlier family historians are provisionally retained here, with suitable explanations and discussions of the issues.

[7] The family is not related to Capt. John Smith (1580-1631), the English colonialist leader from Jamestown, Virginia, who first explored the Chesapeake Bay in 1608.

The MARTELS recorded here are from Québec, Canada. They are my mother's maternal lineage, which ultimately traces ancestry to Honoré Martel dit Lamontagne, a French soldier who emigrated from France in 1665.

The BLOUINS recorded here are also from Québec, Canada. They are my mother's paternal lineage. However, nothing more known of them than a direct lineage no earlier than the mid-19th century.

In the late 19th and early 20th centuries, the Martels and Blouins of my family independently emigrated from Québec to the textile mill city of Lowell, Massachusetts. Because these families are collateral to this Maryland-focused Spamer–Smith genealogy, they are relegated to Appendix 1 herein.

In this genealogy I have added collateral lineages that trace some of the more remote branches of the family—only a selection of them—which are the result of marriages. These occur throughout the Spamer and Smith lineages. Some collateral lines, while distantly related to my own direct lineage, are included because of strong historical connections that will be of interest to those in the extended family who are, in fact, more closely related to those branches.

Within the Smith Family, many of the collateral genealogies are very strongly interconnected by marriages. Rather than repeating various lines as collateral genealogies in several places in the main text, they are relegated to Appendix 2.

PRESENTATION OF GENEALOGICAL DATA

The format of each genealogical sketch is built upon a "descendants' report" generated by Family Tree Maker software. The descendants-ordered National Genealogical Society Quarterly format is used. Every individual is sequentially numbered in the report. To the report I have added notes—sometimes very extensive notes—that pertain to specific individuals; these notes appear within the same enumerated entry as that for the individual in question. When appropriate, or when information is available, a collateral genealogical line—introduced by a marriage or with reference to a maternal line of one of the principals—is added to a section of the report (about which see more below).

PRINCIPALS AND THEIR CHILDREN

Information about the principal and his or her spouses (if any) appears first. The general format is shown in this example:

> 41. Peter Heinrich Christian[4] Spamer [Henry Spamer] (Johann Conrad[3], Johann Conrad[2], Johannes[1]) was born 10 December 1827 in Oberschmitten, Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, and died 05 March 1910 in Baltimore, Maryland. He married (1) Susannah Ross 20 January 1850 in Baltimore, Maryland, daughter of James Ross and Sarah. She was born 01 January 1832 in England, and died 08 July 1859. He married (2) Catharina Elisabeth Heinzerling 09 September 1860, daughter of Johannes Heinzerling and Anna Hofmann. She was born 30 May 1836 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen, and died 17 February 1905.

I highlight the name of the principal so as to make its location stand out more clearly when browsing through the entire document. To this a list of children (if any) is added (see examples farther below).

These data are produced automatically from the Family Treemaker program, although I have slightly modified the format for aesthetic reasons (such as spelling out the names of months and certain abbreviations). I make these minor changes because I am aware that not all users of this genealogy will be familiar with the protocols dictated by the National Genealogical Society (NGS) format.

In most cases, the list of children for a set of parents first displays those for whom no birth dates are known, in alphabetical order, then followed by children for whom birth dates are known, in chronological order. Thus the order of children is not necessarily in birth order. For example, in the following list of children only Anna Spamer's birth date is known; the other children are listed first, in alphabetical order:

Children of Conrad Spamer and Anna Mueller are:

134	i.	Elisa[6] Spamer, born in Eichelsachsen, Germany. She married Klehn.
135	ii.	Emma Spamer, born in Eichelsachsen, Germany. She married Weber.
136	iii.	Otto Spamer, born in Eichelsachsen, Germany.
137	iv.	Anna Spamer, born 19 May 1871.

The order of children are entirely chronological if all of their birthdates are known at least to year or approximate year:

Children of Charles Spamer and Margaret Spengler are:

117	i.	Lorenda[5] Spamer, born August 1861 in Maryland.
118	ii.	Charles Spamer, born between 1862–1865 in Maryland.
119	iii.	Lydia Spamer, born about 1865 in Pennsylvania.
120	iv.	Edward Spamer, born about 1867 in Pennsylvania.
121	v.	Willie Spamer, born about 1869 in Pennsylvania.
122	vi.	George W. Spamer, born June 1872 in Pennsylvania.

In the NGS format, generations are automatically enumerated; superscript numerals are used next to a person's name.[8] For example:

[8] Superscript numerals used for the footnotes throughout this genealogy are set off in bold italics to help avoid confusion with the generational superscript numerals. For example, here the superscript "2" refers to a second generation, while the superscript "435" is a footnoted comment:

Children of Daniel Wells and Anna Sharp are:

2	i.	Ann[2] Wells.
3	ii.	Mary Wells.[435]

41. Peter Heinrich Christian[4] Spamer [Henry Spamer] (Johann Conrad[3], Johann Conrad[2], Johannes[1])

Children of Peter Spamer [Henry Spamer] and Susannah Ross are:

106 i. Sarah Elizabeth[5] Spamer, born 24 May 1852 in Maryland; died 17 November 1911.

107 ii. James Conrad Spamer, born 30 July 1855 in Maryland; died 3 March 1884 in Baltimore, Maryland.

In the example above, Peter Heinrich Christian Spamer (descendant no. 41 in the Spamer genealogy), who in America was known as Henry Spamer, is a member of the fourth generation descended through the paternal lineage shown by the names in parentheses, thus:

Peter Heinrich Christian[4] Spamer	subject
Johann Conrad[3] Spamer	father
Johann Conrad[2] Spamer	grandfather
Johannes[1] Spamer	great-grandfather

His first child: Sarah Elizabeth[5] Spamer [generation no. 5]

When a surname differs from that of the main lineage, such as through a different spelling or through a maternal connection, the appropriate surname is inserted with the first such occurring person in the list as it is read from youngest to oldest. In the following example from the Wassell Family collateral genealogy, this maternal lineage is outlined:

Frank Lloyd[6] Wassell (Emma[5] Rowswell, Mary Ann[4] Rhoudesbush, Mary Ann[3] Sailor, Joseph[2], Joseph[1])

Note how the surnames Rowswell, Rhoudesbush, and Sailor appear, which is interpreted as follows:

Frank Lloyd[6] Wassell	subject
Emma[5] Rowswell	mother
Mary Ann[4] Rhodesbush	maternal grandmother
Mary Ann[3] Sailor	maternal great-grandmother
Joseph[2] Sailor	maternal great great-grandfather
Joseph[1] Sailor	maternal great great great-grandfather

The formats as shown are dictated by the NGS convention, which is automatically produced by the genealogical reports of the database that was used.

In each collateral genealogy separately cited throughout this Spamer–Smith genealogy, generations are enumerated separately within each collateral lineage. (See farther below for information about collateral genealogies.)

In the main parts of this genealogy, all known children are listed for a set of parents. Omissions are not arbitrary, but may reveal instances where children were not known to me or my source. This is particularly evident in more modern generations. This genealogy is as comprehensive as possible for the main branches of the family.

In some of the collateral genealogies presented herein, only direct lines of descendency are recorded; in such cases only the children who follow in those descendency lines are listed. For this reason, parents could be shown as having just one child, although others might have existed. In the following example from a collateral genealogy (not in a main branch of the family), of those children who survived to adulthood only one of them is traced through descendants in the present genealogy; the other siblings are listed for informational purposes but without any information about their descendants. For example:

Children of Hannah Cadwalader and Samuel Morris are:

	49	i.	Phoebe[7] Morris, born 12 Oct; died 25 July 1785.
	50	ii.	Anthony Morris, born 07 January 1737/38 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; died 09 April 1738.
	51	iii.	John C. Morris, born 14 April 1739; died 05 March 1785. He married (Mrs.) Meininger.
	52	iv.	Samuel C. Morris, born 15 April 1739; died 05 March 1785.
+	53	v.	Cadwalader Morris, born 19 February 1740/41; died 25 January 1795.
	54	vi.	Anthony Morris, born 23 May 1742; died 13 June 1742.
	55	vii.	Samuel Cadwalader Morris, born 29 March 1743; died February 1820.
	56	viii.	Anthony Cadwalader Morris, born 04 October 1745; died 28 September 1798. He married Mary Jones 12 April 1770.
	57	ix.	Martha Morris, born 12 February 1748/49; died 26 January 1815. She married James Milligan 25 July 1787.
	58	x.	Thomas Morris, born 06 December 1753; died 18 February 1829. He married Mary Gadsden 26 July 1787.
	59	xi.	Benjamin Morris, born 03 September 1760; died 1841. He married Frances Strettell.

In this example collateral genealogy, only the lineage from no. 53, Cadwalader Morris, is followed farther, although many of the other children had families of their own. (See below for the special significance of the plus sign, +.) However, in the principal parts of the present genealogy (the Spamer and Smith main stems), all children and their descendants are followed until the information about the line runs out.

HOW CHILDREN ARE LISTED

If a child does have a further genealogical record that includes offspring of his or her own, the child is marked in the list of siblings with + at the left side of the page. The + sign means “go to”. For example:

	113	iv.	Edward Otis Hinkley Spamer, born March 1867 in Maryland; died 07 October 1946. He married Amelia H. Otto 9 October 1895; born 1869 in Maryland; died January 1954.
+	114	v.	John Ward Spamer, born 05 September 1869 in Baltimore, Maryland; died 15 April 1960 at 65 Prospect St., Apt. 6K, Stamford, Fairfield Co., Connecticut.

Here, Edward O. H. Spamer, fourth child of his parents (iv.), did marry but had no children. Information about him and his wife will be found in the same sketch in which his parents are listed. On the other hand, John W. Spamer, fifth child of his parents (v.), did marry and have children, as indicated by the + sign; go to No. 114 for more information about him, his wife, and his descendants. (The + symbol means, “go to”.)

A typical example of a man with children by two marriages, with some children having children of their own (as further registered herein) is as shown next. This example also shows the general format of the NGS format, except that I have edited abbreviations and the names of months to be spelled out.

41. Peter Heinrich Christian[4] Spamer [Henry Spamer] (Johann Conrad[3], Johann Conrad[2], Johannes[1]) was born 10 December 1827 in Oberschmitten, Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, and died 05 March 1910 in Baltimore, Maryland. He married (1) Susannah Ross 20 January 1850 in Baltimore, Maryland, daughter of James Ross and Sarah. She was born 01 January 1832 in England, and died 08 July 1859. He married (2) Catharina Elisabeth Heinzerling 09 September 1860, daughter of Johannes Heinzerling and Anna Hofmann. She was born 30 May 1836 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen, and died 17 February 1905.

Children of Peter Spamer [Henry Spamer] and Susannah Ross are:

+	106	i.	Sarah Elizabeth[5] Spamer, born 24 May 1852 in Maryland; died 17 November 1911.
+	107	ii.	James Conrad Spamer, born 30 July 1855 in Maryland; died 3 March 1884 in Baltimore, Maryland.
+	108	iii.	George Peabody Spamer, born 12 May 1857 in Maryland; died 29 June 1943 in Maryland.
	109	iv.	Henry Spamer, born 01 February 1859; died 26 May 1859.

Children of Peter Spamer [Henry Spamer] and Catharina Heinzerling are:

	110	i.	Cecelia[5] Spamer, born 18 November 1861 in Maryland; died 15 July 1881 in Baltimore, Maryland.
	111	ii.	Henry Spamer, born 11 January 1864 in Maryland; died 31 January 1864 in Baltimore, Maryland.
	112	iii.	Henry Christian Spamer, born 05 April 1865 in Maryland; died 11 June 1865 in Baltimore, Maryland.
	113	iv.	Edward Otis Hinkley Spamer, born March 1867 in Maryland; died 07 October 1946. He married Amelia H. Otto 09 October 1895; born 1869 in Maryland; died January 1954.
+	114	v.	John Ward Spamer, born 05 September 1869 in Baltimore, Maryland; died 15 April 1960 at 65 Prospect St., Apt. 6K, Stamford, Fairfield Co., Connecticut.
	115	vi.	Anna E. Spamer, born 1872 in Maryland; died 01 November 1878 in Maryland.
+	116	vii.	Susan Mae Spamer, born 18 June 1875 in Maryland; died 09 August 1949.

In this example from the family of Peter Heinrich Christian Spamer (also known as Henry Spamer), Nos. 106–108, 114, and 116 (+) each have children of their own, so they have separate genealogical entries later in this document. Go to those numbers for information about them. The other children—if any information is to be had about them—will have notes that appear shortly later in this genealogical sketch of the family of Henry Spamer. Similarly, if notes are to be had about his wives, they too will have notes accompanying this sketch about Henry's family.

NOTES

Many genealogical sketches have a "NOTES" section. Here appears information that relates to individuals listed in a primary entry; that is, the notes will pertain to parent and his/her spouse(s), and childless children. The order of persons with notes follows this sequence:

Principal (that is, the person whose name is highlighted)
Spouse 1 of the principal
Spouse 2 of the principal (if any), etc.
Children (in numerical order) who themselves have no children listed in this genealogy:
    Child 1
    Spouse of Child 1 (if any)
    Child 2
    Spouse of Child 2 (if any) etc.

As noted, children who do have children of their own that are cited in this genealogy are indicated by "+" and information about them will be found under the appropriate number later in the genealogy.

Within the "Notes" section, names of individuals may be underscored in the line of text, or presented as an underscored and italicized heading; that is, they may appear in one of two formats depending upon aesthetic criteria:

[No.] Name of Person Underscored and Italicized and Centered (dates) ("familiar" or "nick-name" if any) or

The Name of a Person (dates) [No.] ("familiar" name) may instead be made more prominent in a brief section of text if there is little information to be had and there are no more, or few, individuals to be separately listed.

These are only typographical distinctions, for the sake of more appealing presentation in balancing the amount of white space that appears adjacent to the lines. When little information is had about an individual, using the centered head leaves an unattractive amount of white space on the page. By using the underscored name in the regular text remedies this problem. If this second format is used consistently, if the text is long it is difficult to pick out where the notes and discussion of one person ends and the next one begins; thus the use of the name as a centered heading avoids that problem.

Occupations and residences are listed for many individuals, but it appears only when this information was located. Such information is lacking for many individuals because it has not been found. Where the information is scant, it is mentioned in a sentence. Where multiple years are cited, they are usually in a list. Residential information is usually given only for a person's adult years, when they would have had a residence of their own. In cases where a person, as an adult, is still living with family members, this is usually noted. Occupational information, however, is listed whenever it is known, regardless of whether the individual resided with parents. In some cases, child labor is revealed.

QUOTATIONS

When the occasion arises, I quote from the manuscript family histories that already exist—from "The Spamer Families of Baltimore", by A. M. Spamer, and "Smith Genealogy and Some Reminiscences", by Edward S. Smith. Inasmuch as there are no published genealogies of the Spamer and Smith families, some of the information in these manuscripts is unique; so it is all the more important in the present genealogy to associate critical and anecdotal information with certain individuals. I also quote from a variety of primary (manuscript) and secondary (published) sources.

All quotations in the principal entries are

> Indented and reduced one point in type size. Quotation marks are not used inasmuch as they are superfluous in this traditional form of quotation. If the quoted material in itself includes material that is quoted, "quotation marks will appear as they are used in the original source." But also note that in the collateral genealogies everything is in one font size, so in those instances all quotations are placed inside quotation marks.

ANCILLARY INFORMATION

In the sketches, there is sometimes the opportunity to take note of specific places, events, or people unrelated to the family. Some ancillary subjects are noted by earlier family genealogists simply in passing, which may leave people of later generations (like myself) wanting to understand more about these subjects. Thus I have researched many of these ancillary subjects, as well as others that came to my attention while working on these sketches. Including this kind of information in the sketches is a means to place individuals in a more luminous light, geographically and historically speaking. Most often this information is presented in footnotes.[9] These provide specific explanations or comments about points raised in the text. In many cases, they provide a brief explanation of events, places, or people who are otherwise casually mentioned, but about which or whom the reader may wish to know more. In a few cases, they remedy some family misconceptions or reveal misinformation. For most of these explanations I provide my sources, partly to document them, but also to provide a gateway to additional resources should a reader wish to follow up with additional inquiries. The footnotes are not in any way intended to be exhaustive—except where I indicate that nothing more is known. Perhaps these will, in turn, inspire a future investigator to investigate the matter more deeply.

LANGUAGE AND PUNCTUATION

Some users will note that I have preferred (or tried) to use correct grammar in using certain words or terms. For example, "data" are plural; the singular (such as when used in the phrase "… data is obtained …") is a contrivance of modern business, which conflicts with the proper grammatical usage that has been in use for a long time.

I use quotation marks in the British form, where punctuation follows the closing quotation mark, rather than precedes it, not "like this," but "like this". This form makes more sense, inasmuch as enclosing punctuation inside the quotation marks implies that it is part of the quotation even if it is not. However, when quoting material, the original uses of punctuation are preserved. I note that both A. M. Spamer and Edward Smith likewise had used almost exclusively the British form of closure in their respective manuscripts, so usually their punctuation in a quoted passage will follow the same format as that used by me.

REPETITIOUS INFORMATION

Throughout this document, some information is repeated even in successive data lines; for example, the use of city, county, and state spelled out several times on the same page, or similarly from page to page. This is done intentionally, partly for the sake of consistency, but also with the idea that selected portions of this manuscript may be copied from time to time. Editorially disassociated information, inferentially referencing fuller information already given in a sketch, may become ambiguous if the information is not repeated.

INDEX

All of this information is very difficult to use without an index. The sandstorm of names of people and places in these documents—particularly the repetitious use of the same names through several generations, such as the many James Smiths—can easily cause confusion. The plan of the index is designed to be comprehensive. Of course, the index by necessity must be the last thing to be compiled.

FORMAT OF COLLATERAL GENEALOGIES

This genealogy includes information about collateral lineages; that is, those genealogical lines that marry into the principal Spamer and Smith lineages. Sometimes there is sparse information about the collateral lineage; other times the collateral lineage yields an exhaustive genealogy unto itself.

In the main Spamer and Smith genealogies, the collateral genealogical sketches appear immediately after the genealogical sketch for the person who connects the collateral line to the main Spamer or Smith line. The collateral genealogies are not segregated to a separate section so as to retain the ease of reference to them when the associated main genealogy is being used. Further, if this text is used for copying, by keeping a collateral genealogy close to its connecting person in the main genealogy, the consecutive, genealogically associated pages may be copied as a single block., without concern of overlooking associated information that is physically segregated.

The collateral genealogies are typographically set off from the form used in the main genealogy. When there is only sparse information, comments are set off in the regular run of text, denoted by a smaller type size and two vertical parallel lines indented on the left margin, thus:

> Specific comments about a collateral lineage will be inserted within the text, denoted in a fashion such as this.

A larger collateral genealogy is first set off from the main text by a notice of continuation, as in the example below. (To continue with this explanation, read through the example that follows.)

. . . the preceding text will come to an end.

[Name] Family genealogy continues after the following collateral genealogy

Example Family
Collateral Genealogy

A collateral genealogical sketch is typographically distinct from the main text so as not to be confused with the principal Spamer–Smith genealogy; it is presented in a smaller type size, indented, and delimited by double rules on the left margin.

Each collateral genealogy follows its own enumeration scheme, thus when following enumerated individuals it is important to distinguish between the main family genealogy versus one of the collateral genealogies. (The collateral genealogy is always noticed by the double rule on the left margin.) The names of individuals in principal entries of the main genealogy are highlighted; those in collateral genealogies are not.

Within the collateral genealogies:

> "Quotations appear in the same type size (not smaller) for readability, but they are indented further to the right and enclosed in quotation marks."

And with collateral genealogies, occasionally there may be some further ancillary information; for example, that which relates to the parents and siblings, or immediate family lineage, of the person who married into the Example Family. In these cases, the information is embraced within additional, dotted rules that surround the block of information; and the text is reduced slightly, as follows:

> This is an example of the text that is used to include an ancillary lineage within one of the collateral genealogies. It is in slightly smaller type, and it is surrounded by dotted rules on the remaining three sides so as to set it apart from the remainder of the Example Family collateral genealogy.

If the ancillary lineage includes generational information, it follows the same format as that used elsewhere in this genealogy.

End of Example ancillary lineage

Example Family collateral genealogy continues:

If the Example Family collateral genealogy continues from this point, it maintains the same format as for the parts previously used.

End of Example Family collateral genealogy

A collateral family genealogy usually follows its associated primary relation within the Spamer or Smith genealogy. A few collateral genealogies, however, pertain repeatedly to many individuals in the main lineage, due to numerous intermarriages in family groups. This is prevalent in the Smith genealogy, whose families of Queen Anne's Co. frequently intermarried, especially during the 18th and 19th centuries. Furthermore, even within these collateral genealogies there are frequent intermarriages; thus there is a significant overlay of descendants between several of these collateral lines. Rather than repeat the collateral genealogies unnecessarily in the main Smith family genealogy, those that strongly interconnect are sequestered in Appendix 2.

Appendix 1 embraces the Blouin and Martel lines, who represent my maternal ancestry. They are listed separately from the main text because they do not relate to the Maryland focus of the Spamers and Smiths. Because of the great length of these collateral genealogies, they are not situated as collateral genealogies in the main Spamer and Smith genealogies, but are relegated to their own appendix.

Appendix 2 comprises collateral genealogies that are interrelated complexly through many marriages within the Smith Family main genealogy. They cannot be placed conveniently as collateral genealogies in the main text.

ILLUSTRATIONS

Inasmuch as illustrations "make" most any report, I endeavor to include many photographs of individuals and places, and maps. As this is a manuscript and a work continuously in progress, it is not convenient to place illustrations within the text without continually altering the page layout of the text. Accordingly, the illustrations that I select are composed as separate pages, which are inserted where appropriate; they are paginated with alphabetical suffixes to the page numbers where they are to be placed (e.g., II-250A). In this fashion, additional illustrations may continue to be added to the text without affecting the pagination or the utility of the index.

The arrangement of the illustration pages allows for legends and commentary. In some cases, the dicussion provided on the illustration pages is in addition to the material presented in the main text; in other cases, it graphically recapitulates information from the text.

Acknowledgments

FOREMOST among my acknowledgments must be those who have preceded me. Were it not for these pioneer family historians, the present undertaking would not exist—and without their work the attempt may never have been made.

A. M. "Andy" Spamer and Edward "Ed" Seville Smith each prepared the only typescripts that record members of their respective families. Andy's work was based on extensive work conducted by his sister, Frances D. Spamer, which work she had ceased in 1983. Shortly after receiving his sister's files, Andy compiled the information with his own work and distributed a typescript in 1984, two years before his death. This is the sole genealogy of any kind that relates to the Spamers of Baltimore, Maryland. Frances and Andy Spamer's research is the foundation of the Spamer genealogy presented in the present document.

Beginning in the early 1920s, Joseph Lathrop Mack and his wife, Roberta Smith Mack, laid the groundwork for the Smith family genealogy. They invested years of effort, enlisted the assistance of other genealogical researchers, and asked for contributions from many members of the immediate family. The Macks amassed a fair number of working papers relating to various branches of the Smith family, but the Macks never assembled a comprehensive genealogy synthesizing their collected data.

After the Macks' deaths, Roberta's brother, Edward S. Smith, continued the genealogical work. By around 1960, he began to write a narrative that included his own genealogical and historical research. He added personal recollections of his own upbringing while his family moved from the Eastern Shore of Maryland, to Florida, to Pennsylvania. With his sister, Elouise Smith Montgomery, and his niece, Helen Montgomery Mummert (now McCarraher), they conducted field work on the family history, traveling throughout the Delmarva peninsula, southeastern Pennsylvania, and southern New Jersey. With only a little exaggeration, Helen said that they visited "every" cemetery on the Eastern Shore. Helen likewise must be singled out as having always been the Smith family Oracle—even when she had said to ask others, those others usually said to ask Helen!

Ed Smith also drew out a family tree on a large scroll, which measures about 3-by-6 feet unrolled. Together, Ed Smith's narrative and family tree had been the sole genealogy of any kind that relates to the Smiths of the Eastern Shore of Maryland, much of which is represented in the present genealogy.

Elizabeth Mack Munger, daughter of Lathrop and Roberta Mack, continued some of the genealogical work after Ed Smith's death. Regretfully, she never got to write an expanded or emended Smith family history. Some of her work is likewise included in the present genealogy.

In turn, the acknowledgments made by Andy Spamer, Lathrop Mack, and Ed Smith are reproduced in the introductions to respective parts of the present genealogy. One should read those acknowledgments anew; but the names of the individuals cited therein are listed here as a means to acknowledge their work, which in fact contributed to the scope of the present work.

Andy Spamer acknowledged, in addition to his sister, Frances, Lilly Agatha Spamer, Velmore Spamer, and Katharine S. Spamer.[10]

Lathrop Mack, also on behalf of his wife, Roberta Smith Mack, acknowledged Mina Smith Newman, Julia Ann Baynard Martin, Edwina Martin Hoyt, Samuel Howard Holding, Emerson Bryan Roberts, Edward Slaughter Graham, James Jesse Thomas Graham, Margaret Slaughter Smith, Cooper Tarbutton, Sanford E. Spry, Eva Spry Hunter, Mollie Price Tucker, Cornelia Reeves Price, Nellie Temple Carmine, Carroll Fisher Leverage, Elizabeth Starkey, Kate Tarbutton Battis, Edward Walls, Mrs. W. K. Benson, Mrs. Aaron Tarbutton, Emma Moore Beck, J. Fletcher Rolph, "and hope none have been omitted"[11]; also Mrs. Hiram Goodhand Tarbutton, Edwina Martin Hoyt, and unspecified members of the Graham family.[12]

Edward S. Smith's acknowledgements in his "Smith Genealogy and Some Reminiscences" do more than thank people by name; they are specific enough to make it worth quoting him: [13]

> Our cousin, Emerson Bryan Roberts, in addition to family Bibles and other family sources, did much searching of Land Records and Wills, which resulted in the establishment of our Progenitor to be James Smith and Margaret, his wife mentioned....[14]
> Julia Baynard Martin contributed much information and family tradition, as did her daughter, Edwina Martin Hoyt.
> Samuel Howard Holding gave much encouragement, as did Mr. John McKenney, owner of "Upper Heathworth".
> Mrs. Hiram Goodhand Tarbutton (Mrs. Mary L. Himmelwright) supplied the names and dates and contributed to the proper placing of the Tarbutton and Graham descendants and their collaterals and showed marked interest in this work.
> Mrs. William K. Benson supplied information of the Fisher family.
> Mina (Elmina-Wilhelmina) Newman, Anna Cacy Smith, and Margaret Slaughter Smith were very, very helpful.
> Mother [Ella Seville Smith] and her brother, Abel Sevil, aided in many ways from varied sources; and so did Gilbert [Smith] and Nora [Potts Smith], with information of the Potts family and of their lovely family. Mr. Willard Saulsbury contributed as to his family.
> A. Coopman Bryan gave much helpful information.

All of these earlier contributors provided the foundation for the present genealogy.

Naturally, family traditions were passed down to me, mostly when I cared about the family history less than I do now. Indeed, there were numerous people who were just names talked about while I was growing up, but who today, although they are deceased, are much more personable and vibrant thanks to the research collated here. Still, I was attentive enough to recall some of the things that were said. My mother, Jeannette Blouin Spamer, and her mother, Palmina Martel Kears, offered many traditions while they were alive. In the 1970s they tried to identify for me numerous people in photographs from the Martel and Blouin families of New England, mostly without success given the passage of time, but often providing significant ancillary information. My aunt, Katharine Seville Spamer was a flowing fount of information; some of her recollections remained with me for years, upon which I drew for the sketches included herein. Her school-teacher's memory and attention to detail were keen to her last days. My sister, Carol Ann Spamer, six years my senior, has helped tie together some of the things upon which I was too young to remember; and recalled with me some of the stories and reminiscences.

Several more recent contacts in the Spamer family have been a great boon for this work. Among the descendants of Baltimore Spamers I thank my new-found extended family members Linda Watters Amoss, Phyllis "Phyll" Eddy Beach, Sara Whiteford Giles, Nancy Spamer MicKey, Charles "Chuck" V. Pierpont, and Kathleen Sheldon. Each has opened up Spamer and collateral lineages in ways I had not expected; and their willingness to share their information is greatly appreciated. I am particularly indebted to Nancy MicKey, one of the "Rockland" Spamers, for so generously sharing her family's traditions and many interesting records and photos. And Linda Amoss offered up her own family history, which she had compiled for a family reunion in 2000, which served greatly in the compilation of this genealogy.

John Frederick Albert "Al" Fischer, III, provided much information about the Rehberger branch of the Spamer family, and I had the pleasure also of talking with him at length about his family when he visited my office in Philadelphia one day in 2004.

Sherry Marshall contributed a wealth of information relating to the American branch of the Tafel family, a collateral genealogy to the Smith side of the family.

James vonWaldeck Price informed me of an extensive Norwegian genealogy relating to the Borchsenius family, collateral to the Synnestvedt line that is a part of the extended Smith family. Similarly serendipitous connections from both within and outside of the extended family have contributed information and links to valuable data. Each person has added immeasurably to the understanding of our more extended relations.

Philip Gant shared his database relating to the thor Straten family, related collaterally to the Spamer family.

I particularly thank Anton "Ton" Spamer of The Netherlands. He was a contact known to Andy Spamer during the 1970s, whom I fortuitously located again through the Internet in 2007. Some of Ton's research on the Spamer ancestors of 15th- to 18th-century Germany he generously shared with me, and he has been an engaging correspondent whose English is so comfortably colloquial that I have never feared for ambiguity or misstatement from him. Ton is related to our American Spamers through ancestors of the 15th and 16th centuries.

Other very distant family relations have been helpful, too. Bonnie Spamer of California and Carl Spamer of Wisconsin, each unrelated to the Baltimore Spamers except through ancestors in Germany, have contributed information relating to our Spamer heritage, all of which plays an important role in understanding our history. Karla Kellner of Germany has contributed likewise; and an acquaintance of hers, Manfred Thon also of Germany, a distant relation to the wife of one of our Baltimore Spamers, has provided useful information.

The late Coenrad "Coen" Spamer of South Africa, whom I had not even known about until after his death, left a remarkable accounting of his modern-day visit to the ancestral Spamer homeland in Germany. His generosity through public postings of information on websites has provided new perspectives of our German relations. Our family's own Carl Ober Spamer had likewise visited the Spamer hometowns, in 1911, and he left a priceless accounting of that visit that is quoted herein.

On the Smith side of the family, quite a lot of information—including numerous photographs and documents—were obtained from Nadia "Nadine" Smith Synnestvedt and her niece, Jacqueline "Jackie" Ross Kline. Nadine similarly was a primary source of information on the Potts, Watson, and Faulkner families of England, including their American-immigrant members. Jackie has been the indefatigable documenter of the Smiths closest to her family. She introduced me to Raymond "Hap" Halloran, the navigator of a bomber that was commanded by Jackie's uncle, Edmund Gilbert Smith, who were shot down over Tokyo and held prisoners of war. Hap has written about their experiences and has so very generously shared his records with both Jackie and me—even to the point of entrusting some of those records through the mail to me (and safely returned to him). Hap likewise has revisited Japan, even meeting the pilot who shot them down. Hap's experiences have been widely noticed in the media in both nations, and are documented in his book, Hap's War.

Wilbur Edward "Ed" Smith, a descendant of our great-grandparent Smiths of the Eastern Shore, is a Colorado native who has lived in Washington State since World War II. He has provided me with an invigorating series of correspondences about his family history and his own experiences serving our country in the U.S. Navy during World War II. His expertise in photography—conventional and digital alike—provided me with many useful references.

Elisabeth "Bess" Smith Dewing, daughter of Earle Covington Smith, recently passed away at the age of 90. She had professed that family history was "past" and thus of less importance than present concerns. Of course she was pragmatically correct, but her effects produced a trove of family information—that I observe she kept very carefully. These included important pieces of evidence that offered details about family that, to me and others now alive, were little more than undocumented and unspecific anecdotes. Bess was a career Army woman from the earliest days of the Women's Army Corps (WACs), rising to the rank of Chief Warrant Officer 4. Her organizational and procedural spirit shines in the materials she left: carefully organized papers, photographs marked with exact dates and places, and preserving the many pieces of evidence of what was "only" the past. She was embittered by not having been raised by her father, who like her worked far afield, but she had not distanced herself from him—and she kept many of his records and artifacts. Some of these I received from her while she was alive. As for the things from Bess's effects, I am grateful beyond words to Nancy Dewing, Bess's daughter-in-law, for having had the presence of mind to set aside these family treasures for me. What was given to me opened up parts of the family history in ways that no one now alive has been able to do.

I am indebted to André Martel of Montréal for his investigations of the Martels and some of the Blouins. Without his assistance I would know nothing of the Blouin family earlier than my mother's father, Arthur Blouin, and of the Martel family earlier than her maternal grandfather, Joseph Martel. The entire Martel genealogy earlier than Joseph Martel is attributable to André, with great thanks. Additional Martel information, particularly the Labrie family, was passed along to me by Sharon Martel Latture of Dover, New Hampshire.

For information on the Watson and Faulkner families of England, I acknowledge the kindness and perseverance of Alan Misson of London. Without his research, very little would be known to our family about these branches. The Archives of the Academy of the New Church, Bryn Athyn, Pennsylvania, contains some of the family and ecclesiastical papers of Rev. John Faulkner Potts and members of his family and the Watson family, which were drawn upon heavily for parts of this genealogy.

Clay McQueen is a good example of where things can unexpectedly lead. I had first contacted him through the suggestion of one of the Smith family, whom I had asked for assistance with the Van Zyverden family, collateral relations of the Smiths. Clay provided me with access to his online database, which in turn led to additional information about other collateral branches of this family. One wholly unexpected turn was the discovery that the Worden family was associated through the Tafels—and I had for years been friends with Gretchen Worden, curator of a medical museum in Philadelphia. A few years ago, Gretchen had died unexpectedly—precisely at the time when I discovered that she had been associated with the New Jerusalem Church at 22nd and Chestnut Streets, which had been the church of many of our family members. I had sent her an email inquiring about her connection to the church, but she passed while my message awaited her attention, so in this life she never knew of our connection. Then, through Clay McQueen's database I discovered that the Worden family was distantly related to ours. To my fortune, Clay put me in touch with Gretchen's sister in Iceland, Muff Worden, who in turn delivered important details of the Worden family and some other relations—just weeks before her sudden, untimely death of natural causes while traveling in the Faroe Islands.

Other, scattered family members offered bursts of information, often on the fly, of which as much as possible was captured before I forgot it. A few of these people, not already mentioned, are from all branches of our far-flung family, including Neva Gladish Asplundh, Roland Chretien, Dottie English, Gerry Bacon King, and Constance "Connie" Gyllenhaal Smith.

A few people not in any way related to the family also graciously assisted. In addition to Hap Halloran, already mentioned, there is Domenic "Dom" Gabrielle, who as an Army captain was the physician in the engineers unit to which my father was attached during World War II; and Edward L. Hughes, who informed me of the fate of the grave markers at Bryn Zion Cemetery.

Finally, and very importantly, my companion and wife, Jane Anderson, was the inspiration for this genealogy. Jane's sister, Bonnie Baumgartner, who is a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, had prompted Jane to work on the genealogy of their family. With the momentum thus begun, Jane took notice that my own files contained a trove of information about my family—the Spamer and Smith typescripts by Andy Spamer and Ed Smith, and a copy of the large genealogical scroll on which Ed Smith had scribbled his extensive family tree. Jane took the initiative to enter the basic family data from the typescripts into a genealogical database; then both of us systematically cross-checked the complicated and difficult-to-read Smith scroll against Ed Smith's typescript, eventually with success. Thus armed with a genealogical database and access to far greater resources than I had imagined were available today, I picked up on Jane's work and expanded upon many branches of the Spamer and Smith families. Inspired and infatuated, I followed numerous collateral genealogies through marriages, too. To follow these paths I used public records, published works, and Internet resources that I evaluated to be reliable. Jane sat with me through many meetings with family members, where we gathered copies of photos and collected information.

Jane and I traveled to many places of family interest—several times each to the Eastern Shore, to Baltimore, Washington D.C., and Gettysburg and other locales of family interest in Pennsylvania. We extended our genealogical travels into New England, passing through Vermont on the way home from a vacation trip to Niagara Falls. On another trip, in the historic mill town of Lowell, Massachusetts, my mother's home town, Jane had the presence of mind to suggest we stop at the public library to examine the city directories—the very library, incidentally, that my mother surely visited, the wealthy architecture of which is designed for inspiration. Fortunately, the library's "genealogy room", with infrequent hours, was open on the day of our visit, and the resources there yielded some hitherto unknown information about my mother's family. Jane and I also walked and drove untold miles through Philadelphia, visiting and photographing locales of significance to my immediate family and extended relations alike. On two occasions we went to Hoover Dam, astride the Arizona–Nevada border in the Colorado River, and nearby Boulder City, where we visited the historical sites relating to the work of Earle Covington Smith.

In the process of this genealogical research, bookshelves and boxes of organized documentation and reference materials accumulated, and thousands of photographs organized and documented, paralyzing an already crowded situation in our study, a difficulty that we jokingly attribute to Jane's sister, Bonnie. Occasionally, Jane objects to certain claims of distantly removed collateral lines, that they are "only related by marriage"—to which I as easily reply that so are we!

While it might be desirable to cut off research at some arbitrary point closer to the main family line, so much interesting material was coming to light that I felt bound to share it with present and future generations. I also felt that this task was not likely to be one repeated any time in the foreseeable future. The work has been simply a service with no gain beyond its intellectual pleasure and the thought that spuriously stray facts, one or the other, may be of use to someone today or generations from now. I have no pretention that anyone other than an impulsive family historian will sit down and "read" this document through, probably in some distant time. I have compiled these bits and pieces so that a few of them at a time can be sought out. The preponderate number of pages simply means that it is all in one place. Were it not for the kind assistance of so many people (not to fail mentioning also the marvelous research resources and tools that seem so modern today), we still would be limited to the laudable but limited typescripts of Andy Spamer and Ed Smith—and to them again, thank you.

Only one grateful thought is really sufficient for all of my contributors: thank you.

And to those whom I should have remembered to acknowledge: thank you.

About the Compiler

GENEALOGY comes relatively recently to my life, but it continues my professional and avocational preoccupations as kind of a messenger—an archivist and bibliographer. I have had access to the family histories for years, and I have heard many stories since childhood, but only during the past five years have I indulged myself in them. My wife, Jane Anderson, began compiling data using the commercially available computer software, Family Tree Maker. Once I took over from Jane's initial work, I used my professional experiences for the design and execution of this document. I offer here a description of my experience and credentials for carrying out detailed research of records and facts such as that required in genealogy.

For about forty years I have been a compiler and distributor of information, having worked as a museum technician, research collections manager, technical writer, editor, bibliographer, reference librarian, and archivist. Also during this time I have enjoyed the luxury of writing dozens of publications of my own; most of them, written for professional audiences, are not fireside reading, but a few were crafted for the enjoyment of casual readers. I had been a manager in several natural history specimen research collections in the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia; in that capacity for some 18 years, preceded by another 15 years during which I was a volunteer, and luckily but very infrequently paid, student research assistant. I earned my undergraduate degree in geology, but much of my practical experience was learned in all fields of natural history. The Academy of Natural Sciences is the oldest natural history research institution in continuous operation in America, since 1812; its public "museum" function was inspired later. There I also was editor and managing editor of the Scientific Publications department for seven years; it comprises the oldest natural history publications program in America, uninterrupted since 1817. I was privileged to oversee that program through the transition of the year 2000 coinciding with the 150th volume of its mainstream journal, and also in producing the Academy's first electronic publications. And for the last five years of my employment at the Academy I was the Archivist of the institution. To earn the credentials needed for that position I completed graduate courses in Archives and Manuscripts. During all this time I witnessed (admittedly with some trepidation) the transition from records that were exclusively on paper to those now exclusively in electronic media.

My time at the Academy found work in many collections that have scientific and historical importance. All of this work constantly required of me to undertake research in the Academy's library, one of the finest natural history libraries in the western hemisphere, which led me down many historical paths. During my final position as Archivist of the Academy, I again inherited the use of and responsibility for magnificent collections; this time, collections of paper and art, a broad documentary palate spanning centuries.

After leaving the Academy of Natural Sciences I first worked as a Reference Librarian in the American Philosophical Society, in Philadelphia. Presently I am Reference Archivist in this institution. The Society was founded by Benjamin Franklin in 1743 to serve somewhat as an American analog of the Royal Society, but it did not come into its own, internationally, until it published the astronomical observations of the Transit of Venus[15] made by David Rittenhouse in 1769. (He, incidentally, succeeded Franklin as President of the Society after the founder's death in 1790). Today the American Philosophical Society makes available to scholars tremendously significant research collections in a broad range of disciplines in history, science, and medicine—in fact, everything under the sun, including the sun. The membership of the Society comprises men and women around the world, elected by their peers, in diverse fields including mathematical and physical sciences; biological sciences; social sciences; humanities; and professions, arts, and affairs. The Society's mission statement, written by Benjamin Franklin more than 260 years ago—still unchanged and wholly applicable—is simply, "For Promoting Useful Knowledge." I have been privileged—and amazed beyond words—to have been associated with some of the greatest collections in the world.

Since the mid-1970s I have researched and compiled the Bibliography of the Grand Canyon and the Lower Colorado River, which is hosted by the Grand Canyon Association. The bibliography went through two print editions, in 1981 and 1993, and is now continuously updated on the Internet (website http://www.grandcanyonbiblio.org). As far as I have been able to determine, its 35,000 citations (as of 2008) make it by far the most comprehensive bibliographical tool for any area overseen by the National Park Service and the U.S. Department of the Interior. This probably is more remarkable given the number of significant historical sites—like Independence National Historical Park, or Gettysburg National Military Park, for example. One would assume that these and other sites would have prominent reference tools for the use of the public and government alike; but there seems to be nothing of the kind.

Weaned on library card catalogues and writing drafts of papers by pen, I recall countless hours at a typewriter, too—first a manual one, then an electric one, although much to my disappointment I never could afford for myself one of the futuristic IBM Selectric typewriters. I did have a portable typewriter for which I could purchase individual special-symbol font hammers (and their associated key caps for the keyboard), which allowed me the luxury of typing (for example) Greek letters or square brackets, instead of drawing them in by hand on the typed page. I rolled thousands of index cards through the typewriter, and even more thousands of paper pages, all to produce my own catalogues and manuscripts. And then it all began to change.

I recall my first encounters with computers. In college, I took a course in the computer processing language FORTRAN–IV, used mostly for scientific and technical applications. That was a good thing, as I was a geology major. The alternative, taught on alternate years, was COBOL, a business-applications program. I wonder how things would have turned out differently for me had COBOL been inflicted on me, rather than FORTRAN. Our assignments were prepared on IBM punch cards and submitted to the "Computer Center" for reading in a card reader. In those days, only "computer operators" got near computers, which themselves were in specialized rooms, isolated from the "end users". Sometime later I would return to pick up my results, printed out on oversized "green-bar" paper—much to my dismay, often with just a few terse pages of error messages rather than magnificent results. For several years afterward I worked at two of three competing publishers who produced monthly and periodical reports on computer technology. Mind you, this was precisely at the time when personal computers were being marketed for the first time. The first publisher for whom I worked still submitted its materials typewritten; the second publisher had invested in small computers with improbably small monitors. It was also the time when computerized spreadsheets were introduced—I recall going to an expensively catered pre-announcement affair for Lotus 1–2–3, whose inventors hosted the press and publishers in a restaurant at the top of one of the World Trade Center towers, then the world's tallest buildings, now a remembrance with sad irony. And I recall a couple of years later my first encounter with a mainstream word processing program—WordPerfect, then used in the DOS[16] environment. What a world-changing experience this was for me. By about 1988 I invested in my own, small computer, and a dot-matrix printer, rather than trying to do everything at work. Sometime later I was introduced to computerized databases, which often were cumbersome affairs if one wished to produced intricately designed printouts. The changing point for me was the introduction of Microsoft Access, which has infused every part of my life at work and at home. Now, this very genealogy is produced from a database, Family Tree Maker, the results of which I have imported into a word processing program to craft the printed pages.

Of course, none of this is possible without pressing all the keys on the keyboard to record the raw data in the first place. The magic is what comes of those data. What would have Andy Spamer, Lathrop and Roberta Mack, and Ed Smith have thought!

I hope that my background in research methodology and the responsibility for accurate evaluation of information are credible. In this genealogy there are bound to be unwitting errors, mistakes of interpretation, and unrecognized misconceptions. There are surely many omissions, too, which are due to ignorance rather than dismissal. Left to my own devices, this work would have been perpetually in the process of editing and revision; but unavailability does not make it useful. I may be afforded the opportunity to continue to emend this work. Eventually, it will have to pass to someone else. So the revision of this work and the remediation of oversights that escaped me will have to be the task—hopefully not a defeating one—of another family historian. This is as good a portrait as I have been able to draw with the time and resources given to me.

This acronym stands for Disk Operating System, an IBM-produced computer program that for years was a standard, long before Microsoft Windows and similar computer operating systems. I think it wise enough to let the reader personally investigate more about the subject.

Note

The "New Edition" includes hyperlinks embedded in boxes throughout the main genealogy. They will, when clicked in the computer's web-browser environment, automatically redirect the user to the pertinent additions, emendations and corrections that are compiled in the separate "Additions and Corrections" section.

Boxed hyperlink alerts look like this: Also see Additions & Corrections [In the event that the PDF hyperlink has become inoperative or misdirects, refer to the appropriate page number as listed in the Additions and Corrections section.

The "Additions and Corrections" document is appended to the end of the main text herein and is separately paginated using Roman numerals. With a web browser on the user's computer the hyperlinks are "live"; the user may switch back and forth between the main text and pertinent additions, corrections, or emendations. Each part of the genealogy (Parts I and II, and Appendices 1 and 2) has its own "Additions and Corrections" section.

The main text of the New Edition is exactly identical to the original edition of 2008; content and pagination are not changed. The difference is the presence of the boxed "Additions and Corrections" alerts, which are superimposed on the page and do not affect text layout or pagination. The reason why the text itself was not updated is because the Comprehensive Index, more than 300 pages, is keyed to the original edition.

The alert notices will print if you print from the main genealogy, which you may then use with a printed copy of the "Additions and Corrections".

The CD (or DVD) containing digital copies of this genealogy also includes documents that were not originally available when the genealogy was prepared in 2008. See the Disk Content Guide.

Special Note Regarding Pagination*: The boxed "Also see Additions & Corrections" alerts are placed where they are needed in the main text. Upon reading the "Additions and Corrections", however, the page number indicated for the emendation may (very infrequently) be off by one page as compared to where the boxed alert is placed. For example, a text comment in the "Additions & Corrections" may refer to page I-308, but the corresponding alert box, in its proper place in the text, may be on page I-309.

The cause of these minor offsets, when they do occur, is due to the fact that different versions of one word processing programs were used to create some of the new additions and corrections. These different versions occasionally altered page breaks and footnote placements that affected the page layout. The effect is not cumulative through the document; occurrences of offset page notations are very infrequent.

Introduction to Part I

OUR SPAMER FAMILY is first known in America with the arrival from Germany of most of the family of Johann Conrad and Johannetta (Heinzeberger) Spamer.[1] They entered in Baltimore, Maryland, on 1 October 1832, thereby founding the so-called "Baltimore Spamers". Their eldest son, Ludwig, followed them five years later. Of our earlier ancestors in Germany, only a direct paternal lineage from Johann's grandfather is known, which is traced back to the early 15th century. Amongst our collateral relations (those whom Spamers married), the earliest American immigrant was Julia Dorothea Martin, who arrived from Russia with her parents in 1830; she later married Ludwig Spamer.

Many of the Baltimore Spamers have populated other locales in Maryland, Virginia, and elsewhere nearby. There are at least two current clans elsewhere in the U.S. who trace their ancestry to Baltimore Spamers who left Maryland during the late 1800s; they are in the Bridgeport–Stratford area of Connecticut, and in the environs of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

There also are records of Spamer enclaves in New York, Michigan, and California particularly. Other clans are scattered in Texas, Pennsylvania[2], Ohio, Illinois, Wisconsin, Florida, and Georgia, with various individuals in other states including New Jersey, New Hampshire, Missouri, Colorado, Arizona, and Washington. No doubt there are others. With the exception of the Spamers in the greater Maryland area and the aforementioned clans of Baltimore Spamers who moved from the area, none of these American groups is related to the Baltimore Spamers; all of their ancestors arrived in America during the 18th to 20th centuries and settled in communities other than in Baltimore. None of these other groups is known to have intermarried with the Baltimore Spamers.

Elsewhere in the world there are Spamer enclaves that have no relation to the American Spamers, but do relate through early German ancestors. These other Spamers are in Mexico, The Netherlands, and South Africa, having emigrated to these places from Germany. Scattered groups are also known in South America, Australia, and England at least; and surely there are others.

(All individuals in direct descendancy in this genealogy are enumerated; those who marry into the main Spamer lineage are not enumerated. See the General Introduction for further remarks and explanations.)

[2] Some Spamers for a while resided in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Although I am from Philadelphia, my father's parents and his maternal grandparents (Smiths) removed to this city from Maryland, we are not related to those Philadelphia Spamers, nor is it known that any members of these families ever met. That Philadelphia line of Spamers seems to have either died out or moved to other locales. Aside from myself, there are no Baltimore Spamer descendants in the Philadelphia area.

Genealogical sources working in Europe have established a common ancestry of the world's Spamers originating in the German states of Hesse, Hesse-Darmstadt, and Hesse-Kassel, particularly in the vicinity of the Hessen city of Schotten, where the Spamers have roots known at least to the 15th century. Subsequently, the densest population of Spamers in Germany is found in the environs of the city of Darmstadt, from where our Baltimore Spamers emigrated.

When I knew my maiden aunt, Katharine S. Spamer (1901–1985)[3], she was the one person alive who knew most about our immediate family's history. She was a school teacher, steeped in the traditions of good research and documentation, and she was a reliable family historian. She informed us that we were descended from Spamers of Darmstadt, and that our German ancestors were publishers. We know now that many of our more immediate Spamer ancestors were farmers and potters, while more distant relations were professionals of various kinds and were also closely involved in civic affairs. I surmise that someone in the family had once told my aunt that we had publishers—or perhaps a publisher—in the family; certainly the information was not her own. I suspect that the story was informational, one that probably was corrupted by misinformation or misassociation amongst the collective of Darmstadt Spamers. I infer that my aunt's informant had referred to Otto Spamer, the renowned Darmstadt-born publisher in Leipsig, and the publishing and printing house of the same name, Verlag und Druck von Otto Spamer. Although Otto Spamer was born to a Darmstadt family, we Baltimore Spamers are in fact not related to him except through earlier German ancestors.[4]

One might expect that tracing a surname as uncommon as "Spamer" is easier than for very common names, at least in American vital records and legal documents. This is not always the case, due to misspellings and intentional changes to the name. The earlier family genealogists who documented the individuals of the family known to them produced an admirable body of work. Their work forms the core of the present genealogy. One should be mindful, however, that these earlier workers had undertaken their tasks before the advent of widely available electronic databases and similar research resources. They resorted to daunting rolls of microfilm; ponderous, handwritten ledgers; sparsely available published genealogies; the mercies of public Johannes Christian Gottlieb Franz Otto Spamer was born 29 Aug 1820 in Darmstadt, Germany, to Helfrich Christian Phillip Spamer and Henriette Christine Momberger Spamer. First working as a printer's apprentice, and afterward learning bookbinding, he established the Otto Spamer publishing house in 1847. The firm's productions include many well known and ambitious scholarly publications and series, including lithographs and maps, which launched Otto Spamer to a position as one of the foremost publishers in the world. At the twenty-fifth anniversary celebration of the firm in 1872, a laudatory essay (noted only in passing) envisioned the fiftieth anniversary year, referring to Otto Spamer in its title as "The Book-brewer". Otto Spamer did not live to see the fiftieth anniversary; he died in Leipzig on 27 Nov 1886. The Otto Spamer firm continued into the 20th century but ceased with the advent of World War II. (>> G. hours in libraries and public records offices; per-copy charges for the most modest of photostatic copies; and the eccentric good will of family members who may recall treasures or trash. The pace of genealogy then was leisurely, with far fewer conveniently accessible resources, which often confined the bounds set to be investigated.

Thanks to today's broadly more accessible resources—particularly the one great marvel of modern methodologies, the electronically searchable database—the present genealogy has turned into a document that would be itself a marvel to our earlier family historians. Be this as it may, while the task of genealogical research may be more expedient and pleasurable with modern methods, the end result is no more reliable than if it had been produced the longer, "old-fashioned" way. The result here is a guide, not gospel. Disappointing as this may sound, the present genealogy should always be treated as a working document, which future users may use as a baseline for further scrutiny. Much of the information here is reliable, but inasmuch as portions of it also rely upon data provided by family sources (that may not necessarily have been correct), or perhaps adopted from an unwitting misstep in the research of public records, the user should be alert to the possibility of error.

At the other end of genealogical research—the tips of the branches—there is a profusion of living individuals about whom only names and dates (and sometimes only names) are given here. The modern generations are the most troublesome for a current genealogy; they constantly grow, and the tree is forever outdated. The children, grandchildren, even great-grandchildren of living individuals are so numerous and far-flung that the very existence of some of them are not known to a genealogy's compiler. The task of making the genealogy "current" by ensuring that the present generations are complete, and by adding newer generations, will have to be another person's work, or that of several people. The current genealogy is more useful for understanding the individuals and structure of the family tree about through the mid-20th century.

What I have done here is to take what the earlier family genealogists have determined and check what I could of it or add to it in some measure. To this I greatly expanded the numerous branches of the family tree by tracing each branch and twig in a variety of resources, most notably the public records available on Internet websites, particularly U.S. census data. My additions are based on records searches made in some publications but take also substantially from Internet websites, which include public records as well as personal data provided by independent genealogical researchers. I discuss my sources more fully in the General Introduction.

Genealogical research, especially in the years prior to the development of the Internet that made available tremendous resources of the World Wide Web, was a painstaking process. It required exhaustive correspondence with relations and descendants, in addition to public records searches with the benefit only of published and card file indices. I do not know the extent of the public-records research that was conducted by A. M. "Andy" and Frances Spamer[5], but what they did accomplish was to capture a large portion of the family record at a critical time; they were the last of their generation who had a first-hand understanding of some of the individuals listed here. A few individuals were known personally to them; others through the family tradition of parents, grandparents, aunts, uncles, and cousins. Today, the number of first-hand accounts has diminished so appreciably that our understanding of the Spamers of a century or more ago is now relegated to a sparse collection of primary documents. To this may be added what can be culled from public records and from fortuitously discovered items in a virtual archipelago of newspaper articles, and the occasional recollection by descendants who repeat their own oral traditions.

In 1983, Frances Spamer in Baltimore sent her notes on the family genealogy to her brother, Andy, in Colorado. He in turn informed his cousin, Katharine Spamer, that Frances "was giving up on our genealogy", and that with her notes he now had much-needed complete lists of names from Baltimore city directories. From this statement it is clear that Andy Spamer had focused more on the German ancestors of the family, researching the microfilmed records of the U.S. censuses as well as the genealogical records kept in Salt Lake City (closer to Andy's Littleton, Colorado, residence) by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints; while on the other hand, Frances Spamer relied on local records available in Baltimore, to which Andy had less convenient (if any) access. Andy summarized: [6]

> Now that I have the location in the city for these "older" Spamers, I may be able to find some additional information in the various U.S. Census records. I looked into some of these several years ago but gave up trying to find a few names in the several hundreds of thousands in Baltimore. The names are collected according to election districts, and I can thus eliminate the districts where no Spamers lived.

Still, he was faced with the prospect of untold hours of hunting through reels of microfilmed census records. Ironically, now two decades later, his answers are available from searchable and indexed public records, genealogical databases, and newspaper files, accessed in minutes through Internet websites in the comfort of one's home. And this is, indeed, what made the scope of the present genealogy possible.

With the information that Andy Spamer received from his sister, and with his own translations of German documents, he had by January 1984 completed the "Genealogy of the Spamer Families of Baltimore".[7] He wrote to Katharine Spamer:[8]

> After many interruptions I have finally finished putting all of Frances' notes together. I have mailed you a copy by separate mail and you should get it in the next week or two. Even though more work is needed to find more about some of the Spamers at least what is known is now in one place.

A. M. Spamer had also been in touch with Anton "Ton" Spamer[9] in The Netherlands, whom Andy and his wife met there in 1978. In this regard Andy Spamer noted, "Ton . . . is still continuing his research into Spamers of the 15 and 1600's. He hopes to be able to show a connection of all present day Spamers with these."[10] Ton Spamer did publish a review, but unfortunately two years after Andy Spamer's death.[11] Thanks to Ton's research, in 2007 he informed me of the direct paternal ancestry of the Baltimore Spamers, tracing a direct lineage from Johann Spamer (grandfather of our immigrant progenitor, Johann Conrad Spamer), back to Heyntz Spanemer of the early 1400s.

The family members whom A. M. Spamer credited for assistance in the "Spamer Families of Baltimore" are just a few. In comparison to the Acknowledgments section of the present genealogy, his list might be taken to represent an inadequately researched genealogy. However, recall that he worked under conditions that were more casual and with data that were far more difficult to access than they are today. His original work, with that of his sister, Frances, is moreover focused on the immediate descendancy of the children of the immigrant, Johann Conrad Spamer. The present genealogy has greatly benefited with the luxury of electronic databases and access to public records from one's home. Nevertheless, Andy Spamer's acknowledgments bear repeating so as to document his sources since his data are used in the present genealogy: [12]

> The principal contributors were: myself Adolph M. (Andy) Spamer, my sister Frances D. Spamer—who gleaned church records, cemetery records and the Baltimore City Directories, Lilly Agatha Spamer who supplied information about the descendants of Heinrich Conrad Ludwig Spamer, Velmore Spamer who supplied information about the descendants of Ludwig's son Reuben, and Katharine S. Spamer who supplied some information about the descendants of Peter Heinrich Christian (Henry) Spamer.

In addition to these individuals, Andy Spamer gave additional credit for German ancestral information to Mrs. Hannie Spaamer of Eindoven in The Netherlands, Ton Spamer, and Karl-Heinz Spamer of Schotten in Hesse, Germany.

The "Spamer Families of Baltimore" is especially useful in that Andy Spamer included xerographic reproductions of German church records that relate to some of the ancestors who were born in Germany. The reproductions were made from microfilm copies of the originals. The microfilms probably were read in the collections of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (the Mormons). Andy Spamer also transcribed the handwriting of the many of the microfilmed texts, and he provided his own translations into English. I was not sure whether the translations were the work of Andy Spamer or someone else, but discovered the following explanation in a letter from Frances to Katharine S. Spamer: [13]

> My brother is translating from the German a Chronicle (circa 1901) by a Herman Spamer.[14] What connection Herman is to our family I don't know, but it will probably make interesting reading. How Andy does it, I'll never know. He never had a German lesson in his life.

From my cursory examination of his work, Andy Spamer's transcriptions and translations seem to be reliable. Accordingly, where appropriate herein Andy Spamer's translations are reproduced verbatim, without additional remarks.

What appears in the following pages, then, is a far more comprehensive compilation, with remarks, about the hundreds of descendants of our immigrant progenitor, Johann Conrad Spamer, and dozens of families who married into this broad constituency. It is not a perfect work, but one that can provide a foundation for more refined views of individual branches of the family; and that will be the work of other, future family researchers. I refer the reader to my General Introduction for more detailed comments on these issues.

Foreword from "Genealogy of the Spamer Families of Baltimore"

by* A. M. Spamer, 1984

[Inasmuch as A. M. Spamer's "Genealogy of the Spamer Families of Baltimore" has served as the core of the present genealogy, his brief foreword is reproduced here for its informational value and historical perspective.[15]]

This compilation is concerned primarily with the descendants of Conrad and Johanetta Magdalena (Heinzeberger) Spamer who came to the U.S.A. in 1832. It is convenient for me to refer to these families as the "Baltimore Spamers" even though I am aware that Spamers who do not belong to this family live and have lived in Baltimore.[16]

During the mid 1970's several members of the "Baltimore" Spamer families started to trace the relationship between their families. The information contained herein was supplied by many people. The principal contributors were: myself Adolph M. (Andy) Spamer my sister Frances D. Spamer—who gleaned church records, cemetery records and the Baltimore City Directories, Lilly Agatha Spamer who supplied information about the descendants of Heinrich Conrad Ludwig Spamer, Velmore Spamer who supplied information about the descendants of Ludwig's son Reuben, and Katharine S. Spamer who supplied some information about the descendants of Peter Heinrich Christian (Henry) Spamer.

While this research was in progress, several Spamers in Baltimore received letters from a Mrs. Hannie Spaamer of Eindhoven, The Netherlands, requesting information about themselves. (The branch of Spamers to which Hannie's husband is a member have used the double "a" when spelling their name since the late 1700's.) In tracing her husband's family she discovered that a Carl O. Spamer from Baltimore, Maryland was a U.S. Consul at Amsterdam in 1924. After obtaining some information from the U.S. State Department and the National Archives in Washington, she wrote to The Netherlands consulate in Baltimore and obtained a list of 15 names and addresses from the Baltimore telephone directory. Thus the letters [asking for information] received by the Spamers in Baltimore.

During her research Hannie also became acquainted with another Spamer, A.P.G. (Ton) Spamer who lived in Deurne, The Netherlands—less than 20 miles from her home. Ton, a professor in a small college, had been collecting information about Spamers for many years. Eventually contact was made with a Karl-Heinz Spamer of the town of Schotten in Hesse, Germany and an Otto Spamer of Mannheim, Germany. Through these sources we learned about the early, or perhaps ancient would be a better word, Spamer family and the origin of the Spamer name.

Origin of the Name Spamer [17]

All information so far available points to the fact that the name Spamer is derived from the name of the former countship of the Counts von Spanheim whose family died out in 1437. However no evidence has been found to prove the Spamers are descended from these Counts. The countship of Spanheim lay between the Nahe, Mosel and Rhine rivers. Spanheimer was probably used to designate a person who came from the Spanheim area. The name underwent a spelling transformation from Spanheimer–Spanemer–Spamer. The spelling Spamer seems to have originated in the Vogelsberg region of Hesse, specifically in the town of Schotten and the surrounding villages. So far the first appearance of the name in this region was found in a census of the town of Schotten for the year 1502 and the spelling Spanemer was used. To placed this in a more familiar time frame, this date is just 10 years after the first voyage made by Columbus to the new world. In church records of the town of Schotten for the 1600's, the spellings Spanemer and Spamer were sometimes interchanged between a father and a son—the farther or son using one spelling, the son or father the other. In the case of a clergyman Johann Heinrich Spamer (1643-1702) all three spellings were used in different references. In records of the Schotten church records of marriages and deaths go back only to the year 1629 and baptismal records only to 1647. The spelling Spamer appears in baptismal records for the first time in 1648 and in marriage records in 1661. During the last part of the 1600's the spelling Spanemer disappeared from the records. Even in more recent times the name has different spellings in records. For example, in records of the Baltimore Cemetery spellings Sparmer and Spammer appear in addition to Spamer.

[Family papers include a photocopy of an unsigned, undated summary of the origins of the Spamer name. Given the subject matter, I had thought that perhaps it was Anton "Ton" Spamer who created this document, but he informs me that he had not; he suspects instead that it might have been compiled by A.M. Spamer based upon information received from Hannie Spaamer of The Netherlands.[18] In any case, it reviews the status of understanding the origin of the Spamer family name, probably at about 1980. It is reproduced here for the historical position it holds in the documentary history of the family (spellings thus).[19]]

The Spamer family name originated in the town of Schotten, Hesse, Germany, located in the "Hoher Vogelsberg" region of the Nidda river valley about 40 miles (65km) NE of Frankfurt-am-Main. In the early 1900's a Mr. Münch of Schotten said that he had received letters from Spamers all over the world requesting him to determine if they were descended from Schotten ancestors—in all cases he was able to confirm that they were.

[21] This is Chronik der Schotten-Crainfelder Familie Spamer mit vorangehender Studie zur Chronik der Schottener Familie Spamer und mit nachfolgenden Gedichten und Aufzeichnungen seines Vaters, Christian Spamer, Pfarrer in Hermannstein, zusammengestelt von Hermann Spamer (Münchow'sche Hof- und Universitätsdruckerei (Otto Kindt), Gießen, 1904) [Chronicle of the Schotten-Crainfeld Family Spamer with Preceding Study to the Chronicle of the Schotten Family Spamer and with Following Poems and Annotations of His Father Christian Spamer, Clergyman in Hermannstein, Composed by Hermann Spamer]. It does not seem likely that Andy Spamer completed the prodigious task of translating this lengthy work. Chronik is a historical sketch, but most of the work transcribes the genealogical poems of Hermann Spamer. I received a copy, which had been only partly translated by A. M. Spamer, through Carl Spamer of Wisconsin [who is not directly related to A. M. Spamer or the other Baltimore Spamers].

[22] This is also reproduced in A. M. Spamer's "Spamer Families of Baltimore" (appendix p. A-5) as a xerographical copy, greatly reduced in size. The original holograph (hand-composed) document is titled, "Genealogisch-etymologische Uebersichtstafel für den Familiennamen Spamer"; it is credited, "Mainz (Heidelbergerfußgassel) den 18. Marz 1923", followed by a signature that is unreadable in the xerographic reproduction, but apparently must be Adam Spamer.

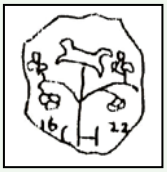
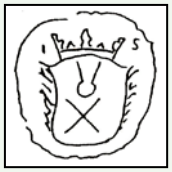
All available evidence points to the fact that the name Spamer is derived from the name of the former countship of the Counts von Spanheim. However no evidence has yet been found to prove that the Spamers are descended from these counts, who family died out in 1437. The first count chose his name from the village of Sponheim[23] (formerly Spanheim) situated near the town of Kreuznach on the Nahe river in the Rheinland-Pflaz region of Germany. The countship lay between the Nahe, Mosel and Rhine rivers. An abbey was built near the village of Sponheim and during the 15th century it contained one of the leading monastic libraries of Germany and was a high order educational institution.

During the 15th and 16th centuries a popular fashion was to choose a surname from one's birthplace, occupation or a dominant personal characteristic. In other instances a person was called by the name of the area from which he came. Thus someone from Spanheim became Spanheimer. Records of the church in Schotten show the name Spanheimer, which was pronounced with an explosive emphasis on the first syllable and a suppressed sound for the "h". The phonetic spelling was thus Span-e-mer, which was further contracted to Spamer. In the Schotten church, the records for marriages and deaths go back only to the year 1629, and the baptismal records only to 1647. Thus there is no record of the first Spanheimer who came to Schotten. The name Spamer appears in the baptismal records for the first time in 1648, and in the marriage records in 1661. One record for 1653 shows Joh. Konrad Spamer son of Joh. Spanemer, while in 1687 a record shows Joh. Nicolaus Spanemer son of Hans Casper Spamer. Some members of the family living today in Germany spell the name Spamer but pronounce it Span-e-mer. The spellings which appear in the church records are: Spanheimer, Sponheimer, Spanemer, Sponemer, Spamer, Spomer, and Spenemer. The writing of "o" instead of "a" was common in southern Germany, especially south of the river Main.

No record of a shield or coat-of-arms for the Spamer family has been found.[24]





[23] The name first comes from the Castle of Sponheim. "The castle was situated on the top of a steep hill, around which the village has come into existence later on, as usual." (Anton Spamer to Earle Spamer, 8 Jan 2008).

[24] The arms of Schotten town clerk Heinrich Spanemer (1613-1669) (above, left), preserved in a signet-ring impression made in 1653, were later located and illustrated by Anton Spamer ("Die Schottener Spanheimer-Spanemer-Spamer", Hessische Familienkunde, Band 18, Heft 4, December 1986, column 233). The 1622 date shown in the impression may have been added by his father when inherited the signet from his clerk father in turn, who died in 1621. An associated heraldic arms impression (above, right) remains a mystery; it may or may not be attributed to Spamer ancestry (ibid., column 234).

Spelling and Pronunciation of the Name "Spamer"[25]

THE SPELLING AND PRONUNCIATION of the family name, Spamer, has often been a source of ambiguity to those who are not familiar with the name. Even within the family there are variants; some of them intentional, others by clerical accident. In my own family we have pronounced it as if it were said spah-mer, much as like the word, "spa"; but this is of course our usage, several generations from the time of our immigrant ancestors.

There is evidence—some circumstantial and some empirical—that various members of the Baltimore Spamer families pronounced and occasionally spelled their name as "Spalmer" and "Sparmer". The "Spalmer" variant, however, has in every case been a matter of clerical transcription (such as on a registration card[26], city directory, or newspaper account) and not on a primary document of record; thus we may infer that it is a phonetic misinterpretation rather than actual usage. On the other hand, the spelling and pronunciation, "Sparmer", has been perpetuated even to modern times by some smaller branches of the family, although at least one younger family member has purposely reverted to the pronunciation without the "r", as the name is spelled.[27] The veteran's grave marker for George Spamer[28] spells his name "Sparmer" although other records seen for him spell his name without the "r".

I have thus far seen just one primary document that uses the "Sparmer" variant. George W. Spamer[29] of Allegheny, Pennsylvania signed a certificate on behalf of another man who sought naturalized citizenship. George W. Spamer's clerically inserted name—and his own signature—both are clearly spelled "Sparmer". And yet, in U.S. census records George's name is not spelled with the "r" (and in one census is misspelled "Spaner").

In another, peculiar case, a 1915 Baltimore County directory lists—on the same page—Edward O. H. Spamer[30] and Edward O. H. "Sparner" (note the double-letter variant, surely an error rather than usage).

[25] Newly written for this genealogy by Earle Spamer, based upon cited sources.

[26] In one case, the registration card from a cemetery lists George Washington Spamer (1845-1866) [No. 92; see under Christian Spamer, No. 38] as George W. Spalmer. Based on such records, a genealogist might inadvertantly perpetuate the misspelling, which presumably is attributed to a phonetic spelling.

[27] Linda Watters Amoss to Earle Spamer, 21 Jan 2008 (two messages).

[30] Edward Otis Hinkley Spamer (1867-1946) [No. 113].

As a matter of conjecture, a kind of Baltimore German dialect may be responsible for the Sparmer and Spalmer variants in American English. Both variants seem to have been created at the same time. There is, furthermore, a circumstantial example of the Spamer name being misunderstood by a clerical worker. Mrs. Morris A. Spamer's[31] name was in one document misinterpreted as "Barber", but the clerk subsequently corrected the name to "Spamer", also notably without an "r" or "l".

Newspapers likewise include variant spellings of Spamer, through misinformation, misinterpretation, or mistyping. One article, comprising a single paragraph that mentions William Otis Spamer[32], refers to him both as "William O. Spamer" and "Mr. Spooner".[33]

Were it not for the few examples of primary records using the name "Sparmer", one would attribute all such spellings to phonetic transcriptions of the name spoken in a local dialect. Although pronunciation does seem to be the underlying source of the variant spellings, the use or disuse of the "r" both in pronunciation and in primary documents casts light on family preferences. A pronunciation (with a Baltimore German accent such as might have been used by the first generations of immigrants) like "spawm-er" might be misconstrued as "spalmer", "sparmer", and similar phonyms, dropping or inserting sounds. Interestingly enough, never has the Spamer name been misprinted with the German-like "Sh" at the beginning of the name.

Anton Spamer of The Netherlands (related through distant German ancestors) took up the matter of variant spellings of the Spamer name during its earliest centuries, up through the 18th century.[34] In every case the spellings are matters of clerical record (as opposed to their appearance in correspondence); in some cases variant spellings for the same individual appear within the same document. Prior to the development of authoritative lexicons, the spellings of words in general were traditionally inconsistent. Casual use was eventually resolved through standardized dictionaries and guides to grammar created by educators and writers. So there is good reason that phonetic and even whimsical spellings of names encroached even into legal documents and official records before standarization. Accordingly, less significance should be attached to variant spellings of names when they are discovered in records earlier than about the mid-nineteenth century.

Indexing, whether manually by human interpreters or automatically by optical character-recognition devices, has similarly produced incorrect and fanciful spellings. These spurious occurrences should always never be accepted as documentary evidence. Locating names in printed sources (like newspapers) that have been digitized with optical-character technology miss a significant number of occurrences and contrive many false occurrences—one common example is where "Spencer" is located when "Spamer" is sought.

South African genealogist, the late Coenrad "Coen" Spamer (related through distant German ancestors), took note of additional variants—Spammer, Spaammer, and Spaumer, to which may also be added Spaamer, Spomer, Spannemer, and similar phonyms and epithets; even Spamerson can be noted. I do not know how these and other names are pronounced in the dialects of other languages.

In the matter of spellings of Spamer as they relate to Coen Spamer's extended relations in South Africa, his comments are as follows (spellings and punctuation are as used by Coen Spamer), which also serve as his historical perspective of the South African Spamers: [35]

> I have pondered on the name spelling issue for a long time. In my case the name Spamer also appears in the following forms in South Africa. Spammer, Sparmer, Spalmer, Spaamer, Spaammer, Spaumer etc.
> My research shows that all [of] these are descendants of Johannes Spamer a German soldier from Darmstadt in Hesse who came to Cape Town in 1778. The following incidents explain to [a] large extent the different spellings.
> A British officer in the early 1800's writing a petition on behalf of a Spamer spending time on Robben Island for stock theft could not get his mind around Spamer and spelt it differently.
> A dominee christening a child of a semi-literate Spamer family adding a few A's or m's as he saw fit at the time.
> Since Johannes Spamer's 1st 2 children were coloured and illegitimate and the next two children coloured most descendants who were later classified as white are/were highly sensitive about this and would prefer any time as long as it is not spelt Spamer. I have even found data in Salt Lake City with blatant omissions seemingly with the object of making our clan a bit whiter.
> In summary it seems to be that illiteracy, past criminal transgressions and racial issues had [a] lot to do with how you spelt your name.

Further discussion of Coen Spamer's remarks, either by him or by other researchers, have not been seen. It does not really seem likely that a later generation would attempt to disguise its name by feebly transspelling the name Spamer through the addition of a character or two, much less duplicating characters. Rather, a family name's changed spelling is more likely the result of conventional influences of clerical, phonetic, and transliterational aberrations that result from the daily and documentary activities of individuals.

The family in which I was raised pronounces its name "spah-mer" (like the word "spa"). When the name is pronounced by those who are not familiar with it, often it sounds as "spammer" (rhyming with "hammer"). I have not found evidence of Spamer families using the "spammer" pronunciation, although perhaps there are some. I have uncovered evidence of families living now in England who pronounce the name Spamer with a long "a", as "spay-mer" (like the word "spay"). This pronunciation, too, I occasionally meet among those who are not familiar with my family's pronunciation of the name.

In my experience, my own name has been ignorantly, fancifully, and creatively misspelled. Examples include "Spammer", "Spanner", "Palmer", and "Spencer". Ironically, the created name, "Bomber", is phonetically more similar to "Spamer" as it is pronounced by my family. This suggests that some errors originate during an oral transaction, and thereafter the error is preserved in a database and duly replicated. Some mistakes are understandably phonetic ones; others are mysterious. "Fpamer" appears in my mailbox from time to time! Surely "S" can sound like "F", but what was the person thinking who typed this name into a database?

I am, incidentally, all too aware of the coincidence of the first syllable of Spamer as a homonym of the trademarked meat product, Spam[36], which is pronounced as like rhyming with "ham". This has caused undesired effects. The product name, Spam, is the etymological origin of the modern term, "spam", which as a noun refers to unwanted electronic mail—the "junk" email sent en masse to thousands of recipients. This word, "spam", is also a verb (to spam); and those who send spam are called "spammers". The noun, "spammer", is also frequently misspelled "spamer". To this there is a misassociation of "spammer" and the name "Spamer"; exclusively when the first syllable of Spamer is mispronounced as like Spam, which is often the case. And I have witnessed, with some unsettled amusement, online comments by exasperated electronic junk-mail recipients who declare, with a misspelling, "death to spamers", sometimes even with a capital "S".[37] I have had my email messages refused by computer network servers, presumably because the name violates some condition tested for by their communications software. In one instance I received the terse (but correctly spelled) automatic reply, "Spammers not welcome here." Because of my name's similarity to "spammer", I have also experienced my emails summarily deleted, unread, by wary recipients. My plight even was noticed by a syndicated columnist, Reid Goldsborough, who writes about information technology. In a column he wrote in 2004 while I was with a former employer, he concluded: [38]

> Finally, take solace in the fact that things could be worse. Earle E. Spamer (his real name) is a librarian at the Academy of Natural Sciences in Philadelphia. Because his last name, which is part of his e-mail address, is so close to "spammer," his outgoing e-mail is regularly flagged by spam filters.
> Adding the initial of his first name to his e-mail address wouldn't work either. Then he would be seen as "e-spamer". [39]

Notes on the Baltimore Spamers' Ancestral Area of Germany [40]

THE DIRECT lineage of our Baltimore Spamers can be traced to the early 1400s in the German town of Schotten. This earliest information was not known to A. M. (Andy) Spamer when he prepared his "Spamer Families of Baltimore". The present genealogy was likewise not informed about the early lineage when its outline—the one used herein—was generated. To re-do the entire genealogy so as to account for these additional seven generations is not a simple matter. In fact, it is a moot point for the sake of a straight-line lineage only of fathers to sons. Instead, I reproduce this individually brief lineage spanning three centuries in a separate, short section farther below, "Descendants of Heyntz Spanemer (ca. 1430–)". That early lineage is the work of Anton "Ton" Spamer and researchers whom he cited in a 1986 paper on the subject.[41] Ton Spamer has investigated the German ancestry of many Spamers, but he has concentrated more on those from whom he is descended. His research nevertheless significantly advanced our (American) understanding of the lineage from whom many of the American Spamer clans are descended, including the Baltimore Spamers. And indeed, he enabled we Baltimore Spamers to connect our American and German heritages with greater certainty. What [40] A. M. Spamer, in his "Spamer Families of Baltimore", discussed and listed some of the ancestors of the Baltimore Spamers.

Frances D. Spamer mentioned in a 1976 letter to Katharine S. Spamer that she had "received about fifty pages of family tracings beginning in 1257 when the name first began to evolve and from 1508 a very detailed family lineage none of which is complete." The date 1257 is wholly erroneous, according to Anton "Ton" Spamer (to Earle Spamer, 8 Jan 2008). From the context of Frances Spamer's letter it seems that this material was received through a distant Spamer relative in The Netherlands, Mrs. Hannie Spaamer [spelling as used by that family]. (Both Frances Spamer and Hannie Spaamer are deceased.) Frances mentions "a very nice correspondence" with Hannie Spaamer. Hannie Spaamer also had "contacted a Karl Heinz Spamer, age 32, who lives in Schotten", through whom "we may be able to trace our own family line back past 1794". (Frances D. Spamer to Katharine S. Spamer, 23 Feb 1976.) The actual source was not Karl Heinz but Chief-Surveyor Adam Spamer in the 1920s, as shown in his hand-written charts (Anton Spamer to Earle Spamer, 8 Jan 2008). The eventual disposition of the genealogical materials and correspondence mentioned in Frances Spamer's letter is not known now. She had sent most or all of her research materials to her brother, Andy, in 1983, and in turn the ultimate disposition of those records after his death is not known. Frances Spamer had further indicated, ". . . I hope to put together a little pamphlet showing origin of name, description of the country side around Schotten, our family line from 1794 to the present." It appears that the work, as such, was never completed, although some information was included in A. M. Spamer's "Spamer Families of Baltimore" in 1984.

follows here are some explanatory notes about the ancestral area of Germany from which our family hails.

A Brief Geography

Several geographical names recur throughout this genealogy, which require at least a brief informational background sketch for each. Generally speaking, the country of Germany did not form as a nation-state until 1871. Between the 1814 fall of Napoleon Bonaparte and 1871 the nation was a confederation of 39 sovereign states under the Deutcher Bund, or German Confederation, which had formed in 1814. It was during this time that the Spamer families emigrated to America.

Hesse (in German, Hessen) is one of sixteen federal states in Germany; its capital is Wiesbaden. It is located in the west-central portion of Germany, most heavily populated in the south. In that southern region are where are located Darmstadt and (more to the center of Hesse) Schotten, between the Main and Rhine Rivers. At the time when many of the Spamers noted herein emigrated to the United States, Hesse was ruled by the Grand Duke of Hesse-Darmstadt. When the Baltimore Spamer emigrant family of Johann Conrad Spamer [No. 7 in this genealogy] left Hesse, the state was then under the rule of Grand Duke Louis II (1777-1848, ruled 1830-1848). In 1866, Hesse-Kassel, another important political entity, was annexed by Prussia; Hesse-Darmstadt continued until the end of the German monarchy in 1918.[42]

Schotten is a city centrally located in the German federal state of Hesse. Occupation is known from prehistoric times through archaeological evidence, but it is first mentioned in records in a charter from 778. From 1403, Schotten belonged to the Hessian Landgraves.[43] Regarding Schotten more specifically, Ton Spamer relates: [44]

> Schotten likely has been mentioned for the first time in a charter from 778, by which the abbott of the monastery Honau near Strasbourg donates 8 churches to his abbey. One of the churches is lying 'in Buchonia' (beech-region) and 'ad Scotis' (in the region of the Scottish monks). My German colleagues agree that this church could only be the church > of Schotten, as it is likely that the name of Schotten has been derived from Scotis. Besides Buchonia was lying in the heart of Hesse and Schotten in the heart of Buchonia. The 8 witnesses who signed the charter had all Scottish names.

Hesse-Darmstadt, was created in 1568, and in 1604 with Hesse-Kassel it was one of two Hessian states after the end of the Hesse–Marburg and Hesse–Rheinfels lines. Hesse-Kassel ecclesiastically converted to Calvinism, while Hesse-Darmstadt, under George II, aligned with Saxony and maintained strict Lutheran tenets.

Darmstadt is a city centrally located in Hesse-Darmstadt south of Frankfurt. The earliest portion of what became Darmstadt was noticed in records in 782, and by the end of the 11th century Darmundestat is first mentioned in documents. A charter for Darmstadt was received on 23 July 1330 from emperor Ludwig the Bavarian, given to the earls of Katzenelnbogen, and shortly later the city wall of Darmstadt was built. The city has been a part of Hesse since 1479. Today's pharmaceutical conglomerate, Merck, finds its origins in Darmstadt, when in 1668 Friedrich Jacob Merck acquired a pharmacy, "die Engel-Apotheke". On 12 December 1820, the Grand Duchy of Hesse received its constitution, with Darmstadt the state's capital. During World War II, the Old City of Darmstadt was entirely destroyed by Allied bombing, with great loss of life, and after the war the capital of Hesse was transferred to Weisbaden. Today, Darmstadt is revived as the "city of science", hosting international scientific institutes and associations.[45]

A. M. Spamer's Remarks on the Ancestry of the Baltimore Spamers

A. M. Spamer prefaced his genealogical summary about the Spamers of Baltimore with the following remark, which reflects the state of understanding of our German ancestry at that time, in 1984: [46]

[45] City of Darmstadt website, http://www.darmstadt.de/en/history/index.html (accessed 26 Jul 2006).

Of more dubious fame in the Darmstadt area is the ruined Frankenstein castle, which overlooks the plain of the Rhine and Main Rivers. First mentioned in records in 948, construction continued through the 16th century. In 1816, Mary Shelley published Frankenstein, which was probably inspired by a tale originating with Jacob Grimm, one of the Brothers Grimm. The tale centers on physician, theologian and alchemist Johann Conrad Dippel, who is said to have "attempted to construct a new human being out of body parts and virginal blood, using the castle's prison as a laboratory". In any event, Dippel is more credibly known as discoverer and first manufacturer of the color Prussian Blue. (>>"The Ruins of Frankenstein Castle near Darmstadt", City of Darmstadt website, http://www.darmstadt.de/en/sights/frankenstein/index.html; accessed 26 Jul 2006.) [46] "Spamer Families of Baltimore", p. 2.

> The ancestors of the "Baltimore Spamers" came from the village of Oberschmitten located about 40 miles northeast of Frankfort on the main in the Vogelsberg region of Hesse in West Germany. Oberschmitten is about 10 km southwest of the village of Schotten . . . . Prior to 1806 this village was part of the territory of the landgrave of Hesse-Darmstadt. After 1806 Hesse-Darmstadt became the Grand Dutchy of Hesse and its ruler took the title of Grand Duke of Hesse. Hesse-Darmstadt was a territory entirely separated politically from Hesse-Kassel. It was Friedrich II of Hesse-Kassel who supplied the Hessian mercenary troops to fight for England during the American Revolutionary War.

Regarding the German ancestors of the Baltimore Spamers, only basic information was known about them, of whom A. M. Spamer commented: [47]

> The ancestors of Conrad and Johanetta [are] proven from records of the church at Eichelsdorf . . . . At the time of this writing [1984] earlier Spamer ancestors are thought to be connected to the Spamers shown [in an appendix in the "Spamer Families of Baltimore"].

The chart that was xerographically reproduced as appendix page A-5 in A. M. Spamer's "Spamer Families of Baltimore" provides only a coarse, paternal lineage of names and dates. The reproduction quality of that table, reduced in size from the original that is hand-written in German, makes it more difficult to use. The original data were recorded from church books. Thus far, a comprehsneive genealogical chart for the ancestral group in Germany has not been devised.

Further regarding the chart just mentioned, A. M. Spamer commented that ancestors of immigrant Conrad Spamer [Johann Conrad Spamer; No. 7 in the present genealogy] "are thought to be connected to the Spamers shown in row D, columns 6 thru 12 in the chart on appendix page A-5."[48] These names are six of eleven children of Valentin Spamer (occupation and birth date, "Präzeptor Ober Hockstadt 1680").[49] Valentin Spamer, we now know, was the father of Johannes Spamer (1707–1776), who is No. 1 in the present genealogy.

[47] "Spamer Families of Baltimore", p. 2. Conrad and Johanetta are Johann Conrad Spamer (1794-1849) and his wife, Johanetta (Heinzeberger) Spamer, the first Spamers of this lineage to emigrate to America.

Carl Ober Spamer's Visit to the Spamer Ancestral Area Near Oberschmitten and Ulfa, 1911[50]

Carl Ober Spamer (1884-1957) [No. 145, see under Christian Augustus Emanuel Spamer, No. 81] and his wife, Frieda (Lorenz) Spamer (1880-1954), traveled widely during their lives. First they were in the Far East (where they may have married) in the service of American churches; Carl Ober[51] was a teacher, Frieda was a missionary whose exact duties are not known now. Later, Carl Ober studied law and pursued a successful career in the U.S. Consular Service (later called the U.S. Foreign Servic). He served as the American Consul in several locales, mostly in the Far East. Carl Ober kept detailed journals of his travels, which regretfully now are misplaced if not utterly lost.[52]

Also see Additions & Corrections

Returning from several years of teaching and missionary work the Far East, Carl Ober passed through Germany. He wrote a letter to his "homefolks" on 11 June 1911 describing his visit to the Spamer ancestral area near Oberschmitten and Ulfa. Although he had married shortly earlier, and presumably was travelling with his bride, there is no mention of her except perhaps through his usage of the third-person in recounting his travel. He also asked that he be sent some additional blank notebooks of the kind he preferred, which indicates a fastidious and meticulous method of record-keeping. A. M. Spamer transcribed this letter in his "Spamer Families of Baltimore":[53]

[50] "Spamer Families of Baltimore", appendix pp. A-33-A-37; A. M. Spamer did not cite the source of his copy of Carl Ober Spamer's letter, and the disposition of the original letter is now not known.

[51] Carl Ober Spamer signed his letter "Carl Ober", indicating preferred usage. In the present genealogy, when he is referred to in the familiar it is as Carl Ober.

[52] A. M. Spamer mentioned in his 1984 typescript that the location of Carl Ober's journals was not known to him (appendix p. A-33). It is apparent that Carl Ober had–as of July 1911–20 journals, uniform in appearance. One can surmise that he continued his journal-keeping throughout his life. If he did, an astounding accumulation of first-hand records of official business and personal affairs around the world would be preserved in this unique set of journals. Carl Ober Spamer retired in 1936. He lived until 1957, his wife, Frieda, preceding him in death in 1954. They had no children, and who handled his estate is not known at this time. One can only hope that his journals are unrecognized or overlooked in the collections of a society or library, or perhaps in the hands of a distant relation. Less likely they are interred in the archival records of the U.S. Department of State, which would be kept by the National Archives and Records Administration; but thus far to this end no indications of them have been found.

[53] Spellings are as presented in A. M. Spamer's transcription, which may or may not correctly reproduce Carl Ober Spamer's spellings. Some obvious typographical errors, such as absence of word spacing, is emended here.

Dear Homefolks,

The following letter will be extracts and enlargements from Notebook 20 in regard to the visit to Obershmitten [sic]. As Book 20 is half full and I have no more of the same kind please send two (2) more books as soon as possible so they may all be of uniform size and appearance.

Leaving Frankfurt am Main as the most convenient centre we follow the main Ry. North as far as Friedburg. Here we change and run East into the Vogelsberg region getting down at Nidda where we change again to a slow old fashioned Local, running along the side of the highroad. (A trip of 2 or 3 hours) By the time we had left Nidda we were out of the wide flat plain of the Frankfurt neighborhood and were winding in and out of the gently rolling hills, partly forested in fir and pine and partly under cultivation with wheat and rye now beginning to head. When Unterschmitten was reached we were all expectation. Five minutes later we drew up at a little box of a station in the neighborhood of a throbbing paper factory. This was Oberschmitten.[54] (400 inhabitants) While checking our grip at the station we inquired if any one by the name of Spamer lived in the village. No, they had never heard of the name. Our hearts sank. Next to the Post Office with the same question. No, there was no one living here by that name. They had heard of it but the family had all died out or moved away. A little more light but small hope of discovery. We then asked to be directed to the Burgermeister's home and a few minutes later we were walking down the Hamptstrasse of the village which was far different from the unsightly factory part of town. We crossed over a good sized brook and soon climbed the steps and knocked at the door of a comfortable and prosperous looking homestead. A stalwart looking farmer in his patched work-a-day clothes appeared around the corner, came up the steps, greeted us and bade us enter. Once more we stated our quest, and his first answer was "Ya, meine Mutter war eine geborene Spamer." He looked it. Save for the sandy color of the hair and the short bushy beard, he had the same broad forehead, projecting eyebrows, wide nostrils and high cheek bones as grandfather.[55] By the time we had made known who we were, the mother appeared, a rather active old lady of sixty-seven, dressed in an exceedingly plain bodice and short skirt. Over her head she had a black kerchief which was knotted under the chin.

She soon told us in queer country German that she was the daughter of Christian Spamer, an only son of Leonhardt who was a brother to my own great grandfather, Conrad, who left Germany for America in 1832. On the invitation of the Herr Burger-meister we accept his hospitality and lodge with him during our stay. After lunch we saunter over to Eichelsdorf a village just a mile farther up the valley. Here at the home of the Pfarrer[56] we examine the church records of 1818 showing Conrad's marriage to Annette Heinzenberger.[57] There were also records of the doings of other Spamers of the same family but the time being short and valuable we did not examine closely into them.

[54] Oberschmitten in Hesse has been a traditional place of papermaking since 1620, although the first documentary evidence is from 1828. One of the large manufacturers there today is SPO, Spezialpapierfabrik Oberschmitten GmbH (website http://www.spo-kopafilm.de/spo-historisches.en.html; accessed 7 Aug 2006).

It seems that Conrad came into Oberschmitten from Schotten a village[58] farther up in the mountains at the end of the present railway branch where other Spamers, descendants of an earlier generation still reside.

Leaving the Pfarrer, an interesting little old man with band of whiskers under his chin and his frau to putter about in their garden we climb the hill to the church were Conrad was married, and grandfather confirmed. The rear portion now containing the chancel dates back to the Reformation. The front is only 300 years. The two great fir trees which stand in front of the door nearly hide the little building which is scarcely 30 feet wide inclusive of the walls which are four feet thick. On the eastern side are two large windows which admit most of the light and also two small one[s] above and below the gallery. The west side is taken up with a rough stairway leading to the gallery. The roof is slated as is also the octagonal bell tower rising at the rear of the newer larger portion. The interior is large enough to contain over three hundred people, more than one-third of which sit in the narrow uncomfortable seats in the L-shaped gallery. Below is a central aisle with 18 benches numbered the same on each side. The high pulpit, on a level with the gallery is at the right. Behind in the old part is the chancel with seats for the choirboys, and above, the loft for the pipe organ, a new acquisition with a fine tone. The ropes for ringing the two bells hang down in the centre of the church. The interior was decorated with paper wreathes and bunches of artificial flowers for Pfingsten. The two or three acres of land surrounding the church are taken up with graves, none of which are older than 1870. This is due to a practice of disenterring [sic] after 30 or 40 years and putting the remains in a common grave.

On our return to Oberschmitten we notice a signboard pointing to Ulfa a village just over the hill where grandfather lived with his Uncle Heinzenberger for a few years before he came to America. Close by Herr Burgermeister Diehlmann's home runs the same Eichelsbach which turned the 3 wheels of the big mill which stood there in grandfather's youth and was torn down only in the last decade. Within 50 yards of the Diehlmann home and opposite the millsite is the plot of ground (now a garden) where the Spamer home stood till it was torn down in recent years. As the date 1804 is cut in the beam over the door of the Diehlmann dwelling it is without doubt that we slept and ate in a house that was quite familiar to Conrad and his children before he left for America in 1832. The Diehlmann homestead is a fine example of many in the neighborhood. The buildings are arranged about a nearly square court, the part facing the street being closed at night by wide gates.

The dwelling is on the left, with the main door facing the court and reached by a double flight of stone steps. Back of the house is an older building, half on the court side for the piggery and the other side toward the garden for the kitchen. At the rear of the court is a large barn, the upper portion for hay and grain and below, half for cattle and half for wagons. On the right side of the court by the barn is a commodious horse stable and next to it with side to the street a big wood shed with a room for farming implements. The Burgermeister had a fair collection of live stock. Besides a goodly flock of poultry, there was a sow with a dozen sucklings and two older relatives; two work mares, the one with a three-weeks old colt, and in the barn four cows, a heifer and a young calf all under the guardianship of a powerful ox, the pride of the neighborhood.

The farmers in the neighborhood use their cows for draught purposes, two to a cart, the traces being fastened to leatherbands over their foreheads instead of to a yoke over the neck. Out in the old millrace the ducks were swimming about, guzzling under water with their bills. Along the road a goosewoman followed her charges homeward with a long stick hastened [sic] to a wire hook.

On Sunday morning we attended service in the church at Eichelsdorf. All the men sat in the gallery and the women below. The old German songs dating several hundred years back, as old as the church itself[,] were sung in the same almost painfully slow fashion as they have been since the songs were written. The old fashioned little Pfarrer in black gown and white collar and bib spoke, as a suitable subject for Pfingsten[59], on the value of having Christ's spirit within us. At the close, the "Vaterunser" [60] was recited by the Pfarrer alone while the sexton slowly tolled one of the bells. The two main sections of the congregation came out about the same time and after them the Pfarrer leading his choir boys two by two.

The whole morning took me back 80 to 100 years. Pfarrer Rahn preached the Pfingsten sermon from this same pulpit. My own great-grandfather was one of the younger men that sat in the gallery and perhaps figited [sic] or went to sleep because of the sermon's length. Later it might have been my own grandfather that followed the pfarrer as he passed out between the thick church walls into the churchyard. Other places have changed, but here stands the same church with the same order of service; identical houses and surroundings, and people with the same customs as in the years gone by.

Sunday afternoon the Burgermeister with his two daughters and a friend take us for a drive through the forest to a [sic] neighboring village of Eichelsachsen to visit the only remaining relatives of Conrad's branch bearing the name Spamer. On the way over a hare scudded across our path and at another spot a young fawn sprang across an open field of grain from the cover a one [sic] dark green fir forest toward the one at the edge of which we were driving. Eichelsachsen we found to be just such another village like Oberschmitten, perhaps a little more backwoodsy. At a little dry-goods store we met Herr Conrad Ludwig Spamer a grandson of Hampeter (short for Johan [sic] Peter) who was a brother to my great grandfather Conrad. He is 66 years of age and not at present in the very best of health, having just returned from the hospital with his head still bound up, but he was in the best of spirits and more than glad to receive us and hear our story. His wife Frau Spamer, upon whom much of the work devolved on account of her husband's illness[,] was a tall businesslike woman with a tired but pleasant face and much abreviated [sic] woolen skirts. We also met their son Otto Spamer a tall young man of 35,

(as yet unmarried) and two married daughters with their babies. The old gentleman had a yet stronger Spamer characteristics [sic] than the Burgermeister. He resembled Uncle Elmer[61] very closely. The son Otto took more after his mother. Soon after our arrival all the Spamer relatives were sent for and the family circle listened with wide open eyes to a recital of the history of the Spamer kith and kin, in America as well as to our own personal world wide travels. A thunderstorm coming up held us over another enjoyable hour in their company before we had to take our leave and return to Oberschmitten, whence the next morning early we departed for Frankfurt and further travel. It was but a short visit from the outside world but it will make a lasting impression. The son Otto thinks of coming to America.

The next sheet of this letter contains the history of the two Spamer brothers who remained in Germany.[62] If Bona[63] sees fit she might make enough copies of this letter and the tree and send them to the various Spamer branches. I would also like to suggest that Father, Uncle Arthur[64] and Uncle Elmer[65] write letters of greeting (in German) with a short sketch of their personal family history and work to Conrad Ludwig Spamer who would immensely appreciate it.[66] His address is: Eichelsachsen, Kreis Schotten, Oberhessen, Germany. An appreciative letter to the Mayor of Oberschmitten who helped us ferret out the history would also go far to make the bounds of relationship stronger.[67]

With love to all the American Spamers

Sincerely,

Carl Ober

Coen Spamer's Account of His Visit to the Spamer Ancestral Region of Hesse, 1999

Coenrad "Coen" Spamer of Cape Town, South Africa, died on 21 December 2002. He was an indefatigable genealogist of the Spamer families, specifically those of South Africa and their German ancestors. He was not directly related to the Baltimore Spamers. He noted that he was a descendant of "Johannes Spamer a German soldier from Darmstadt in Hesse who came to Cape Town in 1778."[68] Several years before he died, Coen Spamer visited Hesse, and he reported upon his trip to an Internet discussion group. His account is of interest insofar as it provides our only present-day perspective of the cultural and physical geography of the Spamer homeland, in the eyes of a non-native Spamer, for those of us unable to travel there ourselves.

Information about Johannes Spamer was sent to Coen Spamer by "Annet" [no other identification], which was reposted by Coen to the SOUTH-AFRICA-L discussion list on the RootsWeb.com Internet website (C. D. Spamer, "VOC success", SOUTH-AFRICA-L Archives website on RootsWeb.com Internet website, http://archiver.rootsweb.com/th/read/south-africa/2000-02/0951331309, posted 23 Feb 2000 (accessed 23 Aug 2006). In summary, "Annet" reported that records of the East India Company (VOC) revealed the following data:

> "Today I had the time to go to the General State Archive in The Hague. I searched the Archive of the VOC (East India Company) and found what I was looking for
> "I found the name of Johannes Spamer in the 'General Land- and Sea muster roll' of VOC 'servants', as the people who worked there are called (inventory nr. 5226, year 1778). He came as a soldier on the ship 'Mentor', from Chamber Amsterdam. So now I could easily find the payroll of that ship (inv. nr. 6654), which has an index on surnames: Johannes Spamer, nr. 253 of the roll came from 'Schutte', which must be the Dutch name of Schotten. No other personal details about his age or parents. He mustered on October 13, 1777, and received 2 month pay, cash, 18 guilders. He borrowed the sum of 150 guilders from A. Bakker, by 'transport', which every soldier or mate used to do, to buy his outfit. That sum of money he had to pay back from the pay he received during his journey. I don't know if you already read the book 'Dutch Asiatic Shipping' , which I suggested. There you can read about the use of making a 'transport'. For his chest, where he could keep his belongings aboard, he paid 4 guilders and 5 pennies.
> "He arrived at Cape the Good Hope on January 13, 1778 and had to go to the hospital (as the payroll says). During his journey (3 months and 18 days) he earned 32 guilders and 12 pennies. He stayed at the Cape and earned 216 guilders a year until 1785. From that time he earned 264 guilders until 1790. That's all I could find in the payroll. Unfortunately it is not allowed to make photocopies of it.
> "In 'Dutch Asiatic Shipping part II' (outward voyages) I found details about the journey (nr. 4303.2). Captain was Johannes de Korte, from Delft. There were 292 men aboard, 8 of them died before they arrived at the Cape. They sailed in a fleet with 20 other VOC ships, with a total of 5400 men From that fleet a total of 418 seafarers, 33 soldiers and 29 craftsmen stayed at the Cape.
> "Johannes Spamer was very fortunate. The ship "Mentor" ran on a reef on his journey home from Batavia off Cape Agulhas in a heavy storm and was wrecked. No one survived. I already remembered the name of the ship. For my thesis I did research about orphans who made a career at the VOC. Johannes de Korte was one of those boys. He had a brilliant career, received a stipendium from a rich widow to study navigation and he ended at the bottom of the sea! If Johannes Spamer had stayed on the 'Mentor' you would not exist!"

Coen posted his detailed, delightful account to the HESSE-L online discussion list.[69] It is transcribed here without editorial comment, with the hope that it may provide some needed information for any Spamer who may travel to see our common homeland. The transcription is also a necessary precaution against losing this valuable perspective of our heritage, written in a Spamer's own words, given the precariously ephemeral nature of Internet resources. Coen's spellings and punctuation, including the use of extended ellipses, are left as he used them:[70]

> I would like to share with you some of the events of my recent journey from South Africa to Germany, in search of my Spamer ancestry. I arrived on 19 November 1999 at Frankfurt am Main airport, then traveled on to Darmstadt. Ernst Spamer, a real people-person, whom I discovered via the internet, met me at the train station, then drove me to my hotel.
> At the hotel he presented a street map of Darmstadt, which we carefully examined, marking my hotel, his home, the home of another Spamer relative, and other landmarks. I showed him the address of the Staatsarchiv, at Karolinenplatz. "We will walk," he boomed, and from that moment he led me over, under, around, and through the sites of Darmstadt, ending up after a GREAT walk at the State Archive, a most beautiful building, a photo of which is accessible from our Hessen web site. We passed an official-looking person at the front, moving quickly to the back of the building, where the Genealogical Society shares accommodation. My name was entered as a visitor, and then we were assisted by a German-speaking employee. It was obvious to me that unless one speaks German, this could become a frustrating experience, making me appreciate so much the presence of cousin Ernst.
> In no time at all our research assistant, working without benefit of a computer (there are none), introduced us to an article about my Spamer family, along with a family tree!! Eighty-four pages of family, at a cost of 50 German Marks, certainly worth it! Reveling in our success, we wound our way to a restaurant, then to his home for coffee. On 20 November Ernst picked me up and we were off to a Spamer home in Weiterstadt, where I met the entire family. They and their sons built adjoining homes. Then the exciting surprise! They had nearly 10,000 names all extremely well documented and catalogued!
> On 21 November Ernst came by again, and took me to his home, then on to Frankenstein Castle. A clear day with masses of snow and stunning views! I pondered the possibility that a Spamer relative had stood on this exact spot, hair white with snow! At a point where I thought there could be no further revelations, we returned to his home where he and his wife produced stacks of brochures and books about the village of Schotten, the hometown of the Spamers!

[69] This seems to be Coen Spamer's own edited version of a diary record. The text of the original dirary has been shared with other Spamer relations by Coen's cousin, Nancy Spamer Phildius. The original diary reads similarly to the online version, but it is much more outspoken and in places lapses into coarse language. Accordingly, Coen's public version, as posted to the discussion list, and which presumably he implied to be the public version, is referred to here. (Bonnie Spamer to Earle Spamer, 2007.)

[70] Coen Spamer, "Hessen Success Story!", HESSE-L Archives website on RootsWeb.com Internet website, http://archiver.rootsweb.com/th/read/hesse/1999-12/0946401896, posted 28 Dec 1999 (accessed 23 Aug 2006). At this time, nothing more is known about the genealogical information that Coen Spamer refers to in his message.

On 22 November I departed Darmstadt for Friedberg, where another Spamer relative picked me up, in the dark of night amidst an envelope of snow, huge flakes coming down, forming mountains. I thought, "The entire world is white and deep with snow." Under appalling circumstances, snow over ice and pelting the windshield, she drove well for the 45 minutes to Schotten. We arrive at the Spamer home in time for a delicious dinner, and a private bedroom for me, where I pour over the family papers they shared. Were there invisible Spamers in the room, gathered round-a-bout, smiling broadly at this visitor from South Africa?

23 November: Germans love "Kaltetisch" (cold cuts) for breakfast. There were 8 different kinds of sausages which they had made themselves, plus a variety of cheeses and rye bread, rolls and excellent coffee, honey ..... I spent the morning paging through the documents they had so graciously gathered for me. Most interesting, including a Dutch and USA connection! They telephoned a number in Holland and spoke to a Spamer who was researching the family, and she in turn gave us the number of another Spamer, who may know the Spamer family of South Africa! The most active local Spamer researcher, they told me, had died just last year. He had corresponded with the Spamer family in Holland, but another gentleman had taken up the research, and it will be made available to me!

I walked the town a bit in the afternoon, had some film developed, bought a dictionary, then strolled along a MASSIVE cemetery wall where .. you guessed it, many a Spamer had found a resting place! At 8.30 pm I was wending my way next to the cemetery through the snow, snow that was deep, and soft. The night air was crisp. I stopped for a shot of Kummel and a Pilz before retiring. "What is happening to me," I mused.... "Have I been here before?? It feels like ... home."

24 November: After a continental breakfast and six cups of lovely coffee, I immerse myself in an old-fashioned iron bath for one-half hour. Ahhhhh! In the afternoon, lunch at a hotel.... I find myself chatting with the owner. Guess what! The hotel is an inheritance from his wife's grandmother, who is a Spamer!

For 30 German Marks I had a personal guide take me on a tour of the town of Schotten. She is the author of several historical articles in the book "Schotten und seine Stadtteile im Wandel der Zeiten" (Schotten and its suburbs, through the changes of time), which Ernst gave me as a gift. Then to the main church where I took a photograph of the baptismal Font (1620) where my ancestors were christened. Then on to the Rathaus (City Hall), a beautiful building. Then 2 Castles, then some old houses, then the museum. I was breathless, awed by all the sights and sounds and love swirling around me! All of these were specially opened, just for me! I discovered later that Ernst Spamer, dear man, had phoned everybody to make sure that they were properly prepared for me. The church dates from circa 800 and was founded by Irish Monks on a venture to spread Christianity. The locals had no idea of Ireland and were more comfortable with the idea of dealing with Scottish monks, hence the village name, "Schotten" (Scots). For me the most interesting was the Heimat Museum. It was strange getting it specially opened and moving through the rooms with no one else present except my guide, who knew absolutely everything. What a marvelous surprise to see the walls plastered with diplomas to the Spamer meat-butchers, including special awards at the World Show in Vienna in the previous century. The wealth of information I am learning is simply overwhelming.....

After Dinner I was introduced to the Mayor of Schotten and his 10 Magistrates. They all wished me well and assured me that the Spamers are an honorable family, much respected by the community.

25 November: Window-shopping, walking all the tiny side-streets. In the evening I visit another family which has inherited a whole stack of old papers about the Spamer family. They live in a very old house that is beautifully kept with lots of handed-down antiques.

26 November: A birthday party. What an experience for me! The birthday boy is turning 50. He weighs in at more than 160 kilos (350 pounds)! About 40 guests all seated at two long tables. Every now and again someone would shout "Herr Spamer," and then deliver a message in German to me, which of course I did not understand a word. One said to me, in the dialectical German of the region, "Kann i nie vorstelle oi Spamer der nit Deitsch swetze kann!" (I cannot imagine a member of the Spamer family who cannot speak German!) There were huge dishes of braised pork, veal schnitzels, crumbed chicken pieces and cooked bacon. Masses of all kinds of potatoes, sauerkraut, and a medley of vegetables. Plates were piled up to sky and the guests ate at a very brisk pace. No conversation during the first 75 % of each plate! Then followed two fellows with piano, accordion, and guitar, playing ethnic music. There were short skits, a roasting of the birthday boy. The hall was filled with raucous laughter!

27 November: Going home. I leave for Frankfurt at 2:30 pm. The driving conditions are atrocious. Sight-seeing in Frankfurt before arriving at the airport. This is an incredible experience. It is the start of Weihnacht (the season of Christmas). All the church bells in Frankfurt are ringing. Millions of people. We have coffee and a wine in an expensive coffee house. Then we part. It is on to South Africa. Home. Strange tugging in my heart, as my eyes look forward, but my mind is still back there, with all the folk I've met, all the sights I've seen.....

I now have thousands upon thousands of names, 40 completely drawn family trees, data back before 1620, more information coming by regular mail, Spamer family meat-butcher diplomas.....

I am the first Spamer from Africa to go back to Hessen since Johannes came to South Africa in 1776. The extraordinary thing is that through it all the Spamer family of Hessen handled the whole affair as if I had only been away for a year or so.

Relationships established in Hessen are going to be long term. We are corresponding and telephoning each other continuously.

My life has changed. My future glows brighter. I have memories for a lifetime.

The disposition of Coen Spamer's records is not clear, and it seems that they may be lost or that they are not accessible. First, his death was noticed in the SOUTH-AFRICA-L discussion list online: [71]

> As a genealogist Coen researched on the Spamer family in South Africa and their antecedents in Germany. He traveled to Germany where he met with other Spamers. He had only a few research tasks left in the list he had set himself. During the past year he kept saying he would send them to me so that I could finish them before he died. Sadly it was not something he managed to do.
> In due time Eulalie will send me Coen's genealogy files so that I can complete those last few research tasks; then I'll catalogue everything and lodge his collection with one of the university libraries in his memory.

A follow-up message indicated problems in acquiring Coen Spamer's records: [72]

> Eulalie has sent me his files and diskettes so that I can bring his research up-to-date and catalogue his files etc. . . . .
> Unfortunately I have been unable to find a dataset later than 1999. Eulalie will bring in a technician to go through Coen's computer to see if we can locate anything later.
> Last year Coen bought a new computer and soon thereafter learned of his terminal illness. If the disease wasn't bad enough—the treatment made him feel like hell. It got bad quite quickly. He told me that he had downloaded all his genealogical files and data from the old computer but was struggling to get it onto the new machine. We don't know if he succeeded, and also, as of now where the files are from the old machine.

Nothing more has been ascertained about the fate of Coen Spamer's genealogical records. It is not clear how they may have related to the Baltimore Spamers' ancestors in Germany, although intuitively there must be some genealogical connections amongst those ancestors.

Genealogy of the Spamer Family of Baltimore

Heyntz Spanemer's (ca. 1430 –) Direct Descendants in Germany, 15th–18th Centuries

PRIOR TO April 2007, the German ancestral line of the Baltimore Spamers was essentially unknown to the American Spamers. The earliest relations then understood were three early 19th-century Spamer siblings whose parents had not been determined. The family of one of the grandsons of those undetermned parents were the original Spamer emigrants to Baltimore, Maryland. This was the beginning point of the genealogy compiled by A. M. "Andy" Spamer in the "Spamer Families of Baltimore". Reflecting Andy Spamer's arrangement, the three siblings just mentioned (Johann Conrad, Anna Katharina, and Philipp Spamer) comprise Generation No. 2 in the enumerated generations of the present genealogy; Generation No. 1 of course is represented by the parents, who now are known.

In 2007, Anton "Ton" Spamer of The Netherlands reported to me the parents of the three siblings just mentioned—Johannes and Margerethe (Venter) Spamer. He also added the direct paternal lineage of the seven generations earlier.[73] To retain a correlation with Andy Spamer's genealogy, I have begun the present genealogy with the same generation where Andy Spamer had begun; that is, with Johann and Margerethe Spamer, parents of Johann, Anna, and Philipp.

If the descendancy from Heyntz Spanemer is preferred over the standard descendancy established by Andy Spamer, one must remember to add seven generations to the enumeration of generations herein; but pragmatically the effort is superfluous because all what is presented here of those earliest generations is a strict, father-to-son linear descent.

The earliest ancestors thus far determined in the more extended Spamer lineage were from the town of Schotten, Germany. Ton Spamer summarized this information in a 1986 publication[74], which was published after the death of Andy Spamer. There Ton Spamer discussed genealogical research done by earlier workers, as well as his own work. His paper includes comments on the variant spellings of the Spamer ancestral names.

Ton Spamer's work reports the following direct paternal lineage of the German ancestors of the Baltimore Spamers who are the subject of the present genealogy:

1. Heyntz Spanemer was born about 1430.

   In 1502 he was a citizen of Schotten.

2. Cuntz Spanamer was born about 1460.

   In 1502 he was a citizen of Schotten, and in 1508 was mayor of Schotten. He also was a town councillor.

3. Seipel (or Sepil) Spanemer was born about 1490.

   He was a councillor in Schotten. In 1526 and 1532 he was alderman; and in 1521, 1527, and 1536 was mayor of Schotten.

4. Henn (or Heinrich) Spanemer was born about 1540 and died after 1610.

   In 1586 he was an inhabitant of Ulfa.

5. Henn Spanheimer was born about 1580.

   In 1640 he was an inhabitant of Stornfels.

6. Jacob Spanemer was born about 1630 in Ulfa.

7. Valentin Spamer was born 1680 in Ober-Mockstadt.

   He was a professor of Greek and Latin.

8. Johannes Spamer was born 1707 probably in Ulfa, and died 1776 in Ulfa. He married Margerethe Elisabeth Venter.

   Johannes Spamer represents Generation No. 1 in the Spamer Family genealogy that follows.

Anton "Ton" Spamer of The Netherlands sent this greeting to friends and family at Christmas, 2007. It depicts an "Altarpiece from the Rhineland, since 1470 in the possession of the Spamer-family". Ton indicated that this handsome relic had traditionally been passed down through the youngest male of the family.

Descendants of Johannes Spamer (1707–1776) [75]

(589 descendants[76])

HERE BEGINS the Spamer lineage as originally understood in A. M. Spamer's "Spamer Families of Baltimore". To maintain correlation with A. M. Spamer's work, his first-generation progenitor is retained as the first generation in this present genealogy.

A grandson of Johannes and Margerethe Spamer was Johann Conrad Spamer [No. 7]. In 1832, he, his wife, and all but their eldest child emigrated to Baltimore, Maryland, first establishing our line of Spamers in America. The eldest child, Heinrich Conrad Ludwig Spamer [No. 37, below], emigrated to Baltimore in 1837.

Generation No. 1

1. Johannes[1] Spamer was born 1707 probably in Ulfa, Germany, and died 1776. He married Margerethe Elisabeth Venter.

[75] This genealogy lists principally the descendants of Johannes Spamer's grandson, Johann Conrad [No 7]. The lineages of Johannes' [No. 1] descendants who did not emigrate from Germany are traced for a few generations only. By and large this genealogy follows the descendancy of the American immigrants. A. M. Spamer's "Spamer Families of Baltimore" began with the three siblings, Johann Conrad [No. 2], Anna Katharina [No. 3], and Philipp Spamer [No. 4], who were ascribed to parents not then known to A. M. Spamer. Now that we know the identity of those parents (as noted in the present text), it seems that the parents, Johannes and Margerethe Venter Spamer, should establish Generation No. 1 of this genealogy so as to correlate more effectively with A. M. Spamer's "Spamer Families of Baltimore".

Much of the basic genealogical framework for the early generations of the Baltimore Spamer family groups is based on the research by A. M. Spamer, as outlined in his "Spamer Families of Baltimore". Substantially more information is supplied here, derived largely on Internet resources, additional family information, and historical references.

A. M. Spamer referred to the "Spamer Families" (plural); the present genealogy prefers to refer to the Baltimore Spamers as a single family because the individuals listed here descend from, or married into, a lineage that begins with common ancestors.

Children of Johannes Spamer and Margerethe Venter are:

+ 2 i. Johann Conrad[2] Spamer, born 26 March 1757 in Ulfa, Germany; died 3 July 1825 in Oberschmitten, Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany.
+ 3 ii. Anna Katharina Spamer.
+ 4 iii. Philipp Spamer, born 16 November 1782; died 27 February 1834.

NOTES

A. M. Spamer referred to the Spamer lineage that begins here as, generally, "The potter (Häfner) Spamers".[77]

[77] "Spamer Families of Baltimore", appendix p. A-21.

Generation No. 2

2. Johann Conrad[2] Spamer (Johannes[1]) was born 26 March 1757 in Ulfa, Germany, and died 3 July 1825 in Oberschmitten, Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany. He married Anna Katharina Uhl. She was born 02 April 1753, and died 10 January 1832.

Children of Johann Spamer and Anna Uhl are:

+	5	i.	Johann Peter[3] Spamer, born about 1779; died 23 January 1847.
+	6	ii.	Leonhardt Spamer, born about 1788.
+	7	iii.	Johann Conrad Spamer, born 22 September 1794 in Oberschmitten, Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany; died 1849 in Baltimore, Maryland.

NOTES

Johann Conrad Spamer (1753–1825) [No. 2] was a potter and farmer; a citizen of Oberschmitten.

3. Anna Katharina[2] Spamer (Johannes[1]) She married Johann Conrad Freymann. He was born 13 July 1780, and died 22 April 1852.

Children of Anna Spamer and Johann Freymann are:

	8	i.	Anna Katharina[3] Freymann, born 07 July 1808.
	9	ii.	Ludwig Freymann, born 09 April 1810.
	10	iii.	Anna Elisabetha Freymann, born 14 June 1812.
	11	iv.	Anna Maria Freymann, born 29 December 1814.
	12	v.	Margretha Christina Freymann, born 09 April 1816. She married Peter Schatt 19 June 1839; born about 1815.
	13	vi.	Conrad Philipp Freymann, born 01 February 1819; died 15 June 1820.
	14	vii.	Anna Margretha Freymann, born 15 November 1821; died 12 May 1822.
	15	viii.	Conrad Ludwig Freymann, born 26 March 1823.

NOTES

The "Spamer Families of Baltimore" notes about Johann Conrad Freymann (1780–1852), husband of Anna Katharina Spamer [No. 3]: "Master cabinet maker of Oberschmitten. In later records he is listed as Grossherzoglichen Buergermeister (grand ducal mayor). In the text of records the name is spelled Freimann but the signature is Freÿmann."[78]

Peter Schatt (ca. 1815–), husband of Margretha Christina Freymann [No. 12], was a farmer; he was the son of Peter Schatt and Uhl [surname].

In the Eichelsdorf church records, a godparent of Margretha Christina Freymann is Christina Margretha Spamer.[79]

4. Philipp[2] Spamer (Johannes[1]) was born 16 November 1782, and died 27 February 1834. He married Margretha Elisabetha Merz. She was born 06 June 1787, and died 15 March 1858.

Children of Philipp Spamer and Margretha Merz are:

	16	i.	Christina Margretha[3] Spamer.
	17	ii.	Johann Peter Spamer.
+	18	iii.	Heinrich Ludwig Spamer, born 12 February 1816; died 08 August 1840 in Friedberg parish, Stammheim.
+	19	iv.	Elisabetha Katharina Spamer, born 24 October 1822.
+	20	v.	Konrad Philipp Spamer, born 15 May 1827.

NOTES

Philipp Spamer (1782–1834) [No. 4] was a godparent to Conrad Philipp Spamer of Oberschmitten.

Regarding the descendants of Philipp Spamer, A. M. Spamer comments: "Most of the records for this branch were found in the Nidda church records.[80] The L.D.S. Genealogical Library has microfilm copies of the Nidda records of marriages for years 1808 through 1875; birth records for years 1821, 1827, 1830 through 1875; death records for years 1822 through 1875."[81]

Generation No. 3

5. Johann Peter[3] Spamer (Johann Conrad[2], Johannes[1]) was born about 1779, and died 23 January 1847. He married Anna Margretha Freymann. She was born 12 October 1782, and died 26 June 1838.

Children of Johann Spamer and Anna Freymann are:

	21	i.	Elisabetha[4] Spamer, born 03 August 1808; died 25 October 1808.
+	22	ii.	Johann Leonhardt Spamer, born 16 September 1809; died before August 1872.
+	23	iii.	Anna Katharina Spamer, born 06 June 1812.
+	24	iv.	Conrad Philipp Spamer, born 27 February 1815; died 10 May 1869.
+	25	v.	Johannes Spamer, born 16 September 1817.

NOTES

Johann Peter Spamer (ca. 1779–1847) [No. 5] is referred to as Hampeter Spamer (a German contraction of Johann Peter). He was a potter and a farmer.

---

6. Leonhardt[3] Spamer (Johann Conrad[2], Johannes[1]) was born about 1788. He married (1) Anna Margaretha Schmitt 30 March 1815, daughter of Conrad Schmitt and Anna Katharina Uhl. She was born about 1787, and died 11 March 1816. He married (2) Anna Margaretha Merle 21 March 1817, daughter of Johann Merle and Anna Margaretha Uhl. She was born 11 September 1792, and died 27 July 1866.

Child of Leonhardt Spamer and Anna Schmitt is:

+	26	i.	Christian[4] Spamer, born 01 March 1816; died 29 October 1858.

Children of Leonhardt Spamer and Anna Merle are:

	27	i.	Leonhardt[4] Spamer, born 19 July 1818; died 03 August 1818.
	28	ii.	Anna Margretha Spamer, born 19 July 1818; died 22 November 1820.
	29	iii.	Anna Katharina Spamer, born 26 September 1819; died 17 August 1820.
	30	iv.	Johannes Spamer, born 01 November 1821; died 07 November 1821.
	31	v.	Johann Heinrich Spamer, born 03 December 1822; died 02 January 1823.
	32	vi.	Johann Peter Spamer, born 25 December 1823; died 22 January 1824.
	33	vii.	Johann Conrad Spamer, born 26 March 1825; died 04 April 1825.
	34	viii.	Ludwig Spamer, born 16 September 1826; died 15 October 1826.
	35	ix.	Spamer, stillborn 12 February 1828.
+	36	x.	Katharina Margaretha Spamer, born 07 September 1829.

NOTES

Leonhardt Spamer (senior) (ca. 1788–) [No. 6] was a potter.

Johann Merle (–before 1817), father of Anna Margaretha Merle (wife of Leonhardt Spamer), was deceased at the time when his daughter was married; he was a linen weaver.

7. Johann Conrad[3] Spamer [Conrad Spamer] (Johann Conrad[2], Johannes[1]) was born 22 September 1794 in Oberschmitten, Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, and died 1849 in Baltimore, Maryland. He married Johanetta Magdalena Heinzeberger 23 April 1818 in Oberschmitten, Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, daughter of Johann Heinzeberger and Anna Mueller. She was born 1798 in Oberschmitten, Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, and died 02 August 1883 in Baltimore, Maryland.

Children of Johann Spamer and Johanetta Heinzeberger are:

+	37	i.	Heinrich Conrad Ludwig[4] Spamer, born 12 September 1818 in Oberschmitten, Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany; died 07 May 1902 in Baltimore, Maryland.
+	38	ii.	Christian Spamer, born 07 September 1820 in Oberschmitten, Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany; died 20 March 1880 in Baltimore, Maryland.
+	39	iii.	Catharina Spamer, born 02 February 1823 in Oberschmitten, Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany; died 03 March 1890.
	40	iv.	Johannetta Magdalena Spamer, born 17 June 1825 in Oberschmitten, Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany; died 15 March 1828.
+	41	v.	Peter Heinrich Christian Spamer, born 10 December 1827 in Oberschmitten, Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany; died 05 March 1910 in Baltimore, Maryland.
	42	vi.	George Wilhelm Spamer, born 24 March 1831 in Oberschmitten, Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany.
+	43	vii.	Charles Spamer, born November 1833 in Baltimore, Maryland; died after 1900.
	44	viii.	George Spamer, born between June–October 1839 in Baltimore, Maryland; died 12 August 1896.

NOTES

The "Spamer Families of Baltimore" reproduces in facsimile (from microfilm) the marriage record of Johann Conrad Spamer and Johannetta Heinzeberger, and the baptismal records of their children. Each is followed by a typewritten transcription of the German text and an English translation.[82] Only the English translations are re-transcribed into the present document.

[82] "Spamer Families of Baltimore", appendix pp. A-7-A-20. The transcriptions of the German texts and the translations are not credited, although it seems that they were prepared by A. M. Spamer. They are accepted here without further remark because I am not able to read well the cursive German script, called Kurrentschrift, and its peculiar letter forms. It does seem that some of the signatures of the authorities of the original documents have not been transcribed. I was unaware of whether the translations were the work of A. M. Spamer or someone else, but discovered the following comment in a letter from his sister, Frances D. Spamer, to Katharine S. Spamer: "My brother is translating from the German a Chronicle (circa 1901) by a Herman Spamer. What connection Herman is to our family I don't know, but it will probably make interesting reading. How Andy does it, I'll never know. He never had a German lesson in his life." (Frances D. Spamer to Katharine S. Spamer, 27 Jun 1977). This suggests that it was he who also translated the microfilmed church records.

7. Johann Conrad Spamer (Conrad Spamer) (1794–1849)

A family Bible includes the following record (in English): [83]

> Born Conrad Spamer on the 22 day of September 1794 in Oberschmitten Gross Herzogthum Hessen in Germanay [sic].

He was a citizen of Oberschmitten, Germany. With his wife and all but the eldest one of his German-born children, he emigrated from Germany, arriving in Baltimore, Maryland, 1 October 1832.[84] Their emigration followed several months after the death of Johann's mother, Anna, his father (Johann Conrad Spamer [No. 2]) having died in 1825.

Johann Conrad Spamer became a naturalized U.S. citizen in Baltimore, Maryland, on 2 October 1843.[85]

The 1840 U.S. census for the 6th Ward of Baltimore city, Maryland, records the "Conrad Spamer" household with 5 males of ages 0-29, and 1 female of age 15-29 (in addition to who presumably are Conrad and Johannetta, listed in the age groups 40-49).

Residences and occupations of Johann Conrad Spamer (from Baltimore city directories):

1842 city directory: "Sparmer [sic] Conrad, w Falls avenue s of Lombard"

1845 Baltimore Wholesale Business Directory: "Spalmer [sic], Conrad, sexton German Luth. church, h[ome]. 27 Fawn st."[86]

The "Spamer Families of Baltimore" notes about Johann Conrad Spamer: [87]

> In the Eichelsdorf church records Conrad is referred to as a master potter (Häfnermeister) and farmer. In Baltimore he and his family lived in the general area of Baltimore St. between Fallsway and Caroline St.

In the Baltimore Sun for 24 April 1839, a mortal daliance for Conrad Spamer may have been reported in the "Watch Returns" (akin to today's "police blotters") for the Eastern District of Baltimore. Since no other Conrad Spamer is thus far known in Baltimore at this time, the report is noted here for its historical context: [88]

[83] As of 2008 the Bible is in the possession of Nancy Spamer MicKey. This notation is followed by several others, relating to Conrad Spamer's wife and their first three children, which are likewise quoted herein where pertinent. An inscription in the Bible seems to indicate that it originally belonged to Julia Martin, wife of Conrad's son, Ludwig (see more with Julia Spamer, under Ludwig Spamer [No. 37]).

[84] "A Supplemental Index to Passenger Lists of Vessels Arriving at Atlantic and Gulf Coast Ports (Excluding N.Y.) 1820-1874", microfilm roll 164, Smo-Spen; reproduced in facsimile in "Spamer Families of Baltimore", appendix pp. A-28-A-30. The eldest child, Ludwig Spamer, came to America some five years later.

[85] The witness on ConradSpamer's citizenship application was Peter Werning, about whom nothing is known.

[86] Baltimore had but one Lutheran church until 1823, which conducted all services in the traditional German language. At that time, the first English Lutheran Church was established for those who wished to worship in English. Today, the German Lutheran Church is the Zion Lutheran Church. > Quite a party next came up, severally charged with drunkenness, disorderly conduct and rioting. They were Joseph Wilson, Mrs. Collison, Conrad Spalmer [sic], and Henry Deans. They quietly received the kindly admonitions of the magistrate, and were released.

Johanetta (Heinzeberger) Spamer (Annetta Spamer, Annette Spamer) (1798–1883)
(wife of Johann Conrad Spamer)
"Netta"

Also see Additions & Corrections

Johannetta (Heinzeberger) Spamer was known as Annetta or Annette in America, as testified by her obituary notice, which gives both spellings.[89] A family Bible includes the following record (in English): "Born Annetta Spamer", without any further remarks.[90]

Regarding the family of Johanetta Heinzeberger, only her parents and siblings are known at this time; and about them nothing more is known:

> Johann Ludwig Heinzeberger. He married Anna Margretha Müller.
> Children of Johann Heinzeberger and Anna Müller are:
> i. Anna Christina Heinzeberger.
> ii. Heinrich Conrad Ludwig Heinzeberger.
> iii. Johanetta Magdalene Heinzeberger, born 1798 in Oberschmitten, Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany; died 02 August 1883 in Baltimore, Maryland.

The family name of Heinzebeger could also be Heinzenberger. On 16 September 1882, a Conrad Heinzenberger, formerly of Germany, became a naturalized U.S. citizen in Baltimore, Maryland. The witness on his application was "C. August E. Spamer" [sic], who is Christian Augustus Emanuel Spamer [No. 81]. It is possible that this Conrad Heinzenberger is Heinrich Conrad Ludwig Heinzeberger in the family list just above.

At the time of the 1870 U.S. census, Johanetta Heinzeberger Spamer, widow of Conrad Spamer, resided with her son, George (1839-1896) in the 4th Ward of Baltimore city, Maryland.

Johanetta Spamer's death is noted in a letter with postscript, from her grandson, Arthur Spamer, to his father, Ludwig Spamer, which is transcribed in the "Spamer Families of Baltimore":[91]

> Baltimore, August 2, 1883
> Dear Pap:
> I learned through Cousin Andrew this morning that Grandmother died this morning about 3 o'clock.
> Gus[92] is now out making arrangements for the funeral which the managers of the Infirmary desire to take place as soon as possible, and I suppose will probably be tomorrow.

(Conrad and Annetta Spamer)

The marriage record of Johann Conrad Spamer and Johanetta Magdalena Heinzeberger is transcribed in translation in the "Spamer Families of Baltimore": [94]

> In the year of Christ 1818, on the 23 April, in this parish church, with the consent of the parents of the groom and the mother of the bride, were legitimately married and consecrated: Johann Conrad Spamer, age 24 years, newly registered community member and master potter in (the village of) Oberschmitten affiliated with this parish, the legitimately procreated unmarried son of Johann Conrad Spamer, community member and master potter of the same (village), and his wife Anna Catharina born Uhl; and Johannetta Magdalena Heinzeberger, age 20 years, the legitimately procreated unmarried daughter of the deceased Johann Ludwig Heinzeberger, community member and master tailor (of the same village) and his wife Anna Margretha, born Müller. Witnesses were: 1) Anna Catharina (born Spamer), the wife of Johann Conrad Freimann, community member and master cabinet maker; 2) Anna Christina, unmarried daughter of Johann Ludwig Heinzeberger.

This record and the following baptismal records were reproduced in the "Spamer Families of Baltimore" in xerographic facsimile from microfilm, accompanied by typewritten transcriptions and translations into English. A.M. Spamer described his source only as follows (appendix p. A-1): "Copies of original church records of marriage of Johanetta and Conrad and baptismal records of their children born at Oberschmitten. A transcription and translation follows each original. The copies of original records were made from microfilm copies of church records available at the Morman [sic] Genealogical Library at Salt Lake City. It should be noted that these films [at least at the time A. M. Spamer was working] cover only the period from 1808 thru 1875." The filmed records he referred to were seen at the genealogical library of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

> Cemetery on 25 January 1849. In October 1975 this lot contained two graves without headstones. Since the cemetery kept no records of burials prior to 1874, it is probable that Conrad and Johanetta are in these two unmarked graves. Henry's daughter Sarah Elisabeth and her husband Andrew E. Holms [sic] are also buried in this lot.[95]

That Johannetta Heinzeberger Spamer is buried in Western Cemetery is corroborated in a letter by Arthur Spamer (see above), which mentions, "Her remains will be interred in the Western Cemetery." Thus the supposition that Johann Conrad Spamer, her husband, is buried in the same lot is probably correct. This is further substantiated by the fact that the lot was purchased by his son, Henry, immediately upon Conrad's death. Western Cemetery was newly opened at the time, and it may have been an attractive (or affordable) location, certainly one more suburban than it is today.

Regarding the family burial lot in Western Cemetery (Lot 189, Section C), J. P. Redifer(?), Superintendent of the cemetery, sent a sketch of the lot to A. M. Spamer, which was reproduced in the "Spamer Families of Baltimore".[96] The lot contains two unmarked graves, and the graves of Sarah Holm, Louisa Holm, and Andrew E. Holm.[97] Sarah is Sarah Elizabeth (Spamer) Holm (1852-1911) [No. 106], daughter of Henry Spamer and granddaughter of Johann Conrad Spamer; her second husband was Andrew E. Holm (1860-1924). (Also see the entry for Sarah Spamer Holm, No. 106.)

About Lot 189 in Western Cemetery's Section C, the cemetery superintendent wrote: [98]

> This Lot is 6 ft long and 10 ft wide. When Brick graves are noted only three would go in this width. This [arrow points to grave of Louisa Holm and Andrew E. Holm] was a brick grave.
> This lot was bought by Henry Spamer January 25 1849[.] When it shows old graves these people must have died between 1849 and 1874 we don't have any records of burials befor[e] 1874. I can not find any other Spamers in our records.

40. Johanetta Magdalena Spamer (1825–1828)

The birth, baptismal and death record of Johanetta Magdalene Spamer, daughter of Conrad and Johanetta Spamer, is transcribed in translation in the "Spamer Families of Baltimore":[99]

> Johannetta Magdalena Spamer was born 17 June 1825 about three o'clock in the morning, the fourth child and second daughter of Conrad Spamer—citizen and potter of Oberschmitten—and his wife Johannetta Magdalena (born Heinzeberger). Godparent was: Johannetta Magdalena Müller, the minor youngest of three daughters of Philipp Müller—master tailor and citizen of Oberschmitten. Her place at the baptism was taken by her mother Anna Margretha.

[97] The Superintendent of Western Cemetery recorded these names as "Holmes", probably from cemetery records. Someone has noted on the sketch that there is a monument on the lot, on which the only name is that of Sarah Holmes. In all other records, including census and immigration information, the name is written Holm; and since Andrew E. Holm was from Finland it is also probable that "Holmes" is Americanized or a clerical adjustment in favor of a more English-like spelling.

Here are buried the immigrant Baltimore Spamer parents, Johann Conrad Spamer (1794–1849) and Johanetta (Heinzeberger) Spamer (1798–1883) (two unmonumented graves to the right in photo). The large monument on the grave is that of a granddaughter, Sarah Elizabeth (Spamer) Holm (1852–1911); the smaller monuments are hers and her husband, Andrew E. Holm (1860–1924). Also buried here is Louisa Bruckner Holm (ca. 1857–1938), who is believed to have been a second wife of Andrew.

Original cemetery records no longer exist. The map at left was sent by the cemetery superintendent to A. M. Spamer ca. 1980. The superintendent did indicate that the lot was purchased by Henry Spamer (a son of Johann and Johanetta, and father of Sarah).

As noted in the margin of her baptism record, this child died 15 March 1828.[100]

42. George Wilhelm Spamer (1831–)

George Wilhelm Spamer's baptismal record is transcribed in translation in the "Spamer Families of Baltimore": [101]

> Georg Wilhelm Spamer was born 24 March 1831 the sixth child and fourth son of Conrad Spamer—citizen and potter of Oberschmitten—and his wife Johannetta Magdalena (born Heinzeberger).
> Godparents were
> 1) Wilhelm Schneider, oldest not confirmed son of citizen and papermaker Casper Schneider of Oberschmitten. Wilhelm's place at the baptism was represented by his father.
> 2) Georg Hofmann, second unmarried son of Conrad Hofmann—citizen and Merchant of Oberschmitten—and his wife Anna Catharina Wigand.

Nothing else is known of George Wilhelm Spamer. A. M. Spamer wrote in the "Spamer Families of Baltimore":[102]

> The only information we found about him is his date of birth. He was not in the passenger list with his parents and siblings, nor does his name appear in the city directories or in church records of the church attended by other family members.

44. George Spamer (1839–1896)

An advertisement in the Baltimore Sun for 1863 promotes the "Sixth Grand Soiree of the Maryland Quadrille Association", to be held at Central Hall, corner of Charles and Baltimore Sts., on 9 April; signers include "Ballet Master, George Spamer".[103]

During the Civil War, George Spamer (1839-1896) enlisted three times in the Union Army. He is recorded in some Army records as "George Sparmer" [sic],[104] and his grave marker in Loudon Park National Cemetery (a veterans' cemetery) likewise spells his name "Sparmer". Inasmuch as George Spamer and his brother, Charles, seem always to be registered as "Sparmer" in censuses (and, for George, in military records as well), it may indicate either an elective change in the spelling of their family name.

Indexed resources available from Internet websites consistently retrieve two Army enlistment records for George Spamer, which indicate a 7 June first enlistment date (conflicting with information provided below). The "Spamer Families of Baltimore", however, based on a review of microfilmed records from the National Archives, indicates that George Spamer enlisted three times, and that these records additionally contain some statistics about his physical appearance: [105]

> From his Civil War military records supplied by the National Archives we learn that he was 5′-11″ tall, dark complexioned, had black hair and hazel eyes and was born between June and October 1839. He enlisted three times. On his second enlistment papers his occupation was given as clerk and on his third enlistment papers it was salesman. The first enlistment was for six months, from 25 June 1863 to 29 January 1864 and he was a private in Co. G of the 10 Regiment Maryland Infantry. The second enlistment, which is age was given as 24 years, lasted from 1 June 1864 until 1 October 1864 and his rank was 2nd sergeant, Co. I, 11 Regement [sic] Md. Inf. His last enlistment where his age is given as 25 years, was from 19 October 1864 to 15 June 1865 and his rank was fourth Sgt. Co. C, 11 Reg. Md. Inf.

From the information about George Spamer's age, A. M. Spamer also ascertained the approximate months in which George's birthday falls; previously available information only provided his birth year.

Inasmuch as there are no other George Spamers known to have been in the military during the Civil War, the record of three enlistments is probably correct and are summarized as follows:[106] Also see Additions & Corrections

1863 Jun 7 (or Jun 25)–1864 Jan 29	Private, 10th Maryland Infantry Regiment, Co. G
1864 Jun 1–Oct 1	2nd Sgt., 11th Maryland Infantry Regiment, Co. I
1864 Oct 19–1865 Jun 15	4th Sgt., 11th Maryland Infantry Regiment, Co. C

The 10th Maryland Infantry Regiment was organized in Baltimore during June–July 1863, and served for six months. On 16 July, the regiment was sent to Harper's Ferry to serve on guard lines until January 1864. The unit was mustered out 29 January 1864.[107]

The 11th Maryland Infantry, according to the National Park Service Civil War Soldiers and Sailors System, was organized 16 June 1864. It performed guard duties at Monocacy Junction, Maryland, 1 July–1 October 1864, during which time it participated in the Battle of Monocacy on 9 July.[108] The unit was mustered out on 1 October 1864 but reorganized on 1 December 1864, mustering out on 15 June 1865. The third enlistment date for George Spamer, on 19 October 1864, coinciding with the 11th Maryland is contradictory, which may indicate he was in fact in another unit until the 11th Maryland was reorganized in October. During the service of the reorganized 11th Maryland, when George Spamer [108] The Battle of Monocacy was the "battle that saved Washington". A large force of 15,000 men under Confederate General Jubal Early there defeated a "ragtag" group of 2,300 men under Union Maj. Gen. Lew Wallace, but at the cost of a day's march by the Confederate forces. Not knowing whether the Confederate intentions were to move on Baltimore or on Washington, D.C., Wallace strung his troops out along six miles of the Monocacy River to protect two roadway bridges, a railroad bridge, and several fords. Nearly 1,300 casualties resulted in the Union forces during the battle. Although Early's forces did move into Washington, veteran reinforcements arrived there in time to prevent the Confederate army moving into the capital. served in Co. C, the company was on detached service at Relay House on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad.[109] During this time the company did not participate in any major combat action[110].

Residences of George Spamer (from U.S. censuses):

1870: 4th Ward, Baltimore city, Maryland (residing with his mother as a two-person household)
1890 (Special Schedule of Surviving Soldiers): 15 N. Frederick St., Baltimore, Maryland

The 1880 Baltimore city directory (probably prepared in 1879) lists a "Capt." George Spamer residing at 130 N. Carrollton Ave. [today Republican St.]. The address was the residence headed by Henry Spamer [No. 41]. In the 1880 U.S. census, the Henry Spamer household included Henry's son, George Peabody Spamer (elder), nephew of the George Spamer of discussion here, but G. P. Spamer was 22 years old and occupied as a mate on a tugboat. It is possible that the George Spamer of the present discussion had lived in the household of his brother, Henry, when the 1880 city directory was prepared, but that he was not there at the time of the 1880 census or was somehow omitted from the census. As is discussed more below, in 1878 George may have been involved in the death of a man as the result of an accident with the tugboat of which he was captain, which may contribute to the uncertainty we have about his occupations and residences during the remainder of his life.

George Spamer's obituary in the Baltimore Sun [111] noted only that he had died at noon, and requested the Pittsburgh and Washington newspapers to please copy. This indicated relationships in these cities. In Pittsburgh, the relations probably were the family of Charles Spamer [No. 43], who had moved there by 1880. The reference to Washington, D.C., may have been to alert Adolph Noble Spamer [No. 85], George's nephew, who is known to have lived in Washington by 1900.

[109] Relay House was situated ten miles south of Baltimore, at the junction of the Baltimore & Ohio and Baltimore & Washington railroads. As such it was a critical location for railway defenses during the war. Numerous Union units served at Relay House during the war. It was a relatively pleasant place, apparently, as testified by Adjutant Jonathan Ayres of the 144th Ohio Volunteer Infantry, who encamped at Relay House in May-June 1864. He wrote letters to relatives at home, which were printed in the Wyandot Pioneer. Although the letters might demonstrate more embellishment for the benefit of pleasing his readers at home, it is likewise apparent that, as is often the case during times of hardship, there was a responsive black or entrepreneurial market willing to support the cause–for a price. In a letter of 26 May (published 3 June), Ayres noted:

> "Our camp is delightfully situated on the west side of the Baltimore & Ohio R.R., a few rods north of the Relay House covering a beautiful spot of ground, gently sloping to the westward on which grown large Chestnut, Oak, Cedar, Pine and other trees, affording a delightful shade over the entire camp. We have plenty of the substantials to eat and as for the luxuries, as all it requires to obtain these in abundance is a few greenbacks. I had green peas for dinner twice last week and strawberries once."

By coincidence, shortly earlier, George Spamer's nephew, Christian Augustus Emanuel Spamer [No. 81] was stationed at Relay House with the 3rd Maryland Volunteers.

[111] [Obituary notice of George Spamer], The Sun (Baltimore), 13 Aug 1896.

George Spamer is buried in Loudon Park National Cemetery (the veterans' cemetery adjacent to Loudon Park Cemetery), Baltimore, Maryland (Section L, plot 521). His grave marker lists his name as "George Sparmer" [sic].

George Spamer's estate was administered by a nephew, Christian Augustus Emanuel Spamer, a Baltimore lawyer. In this matter, the "Spamer Families of Baltimore" transcribes a letter from C. A. E. Spamer to his father, Ludwig Spamer: [112]

Mch 8, 1897

Dear Pap:

In administering the estate of Uncle George, I desired to render my services for the benefit of the family and so distributed the commissions which the Court allowed me among his heirs, giving to Uncle Henry[113], because of his misfortune, the share which he would have been entitled to had he joined in the administration.

Uncle Charlie and Cousins Christine and Mary have accepted their proportions, but Cousin Andrew, on behalf of himself and sisters and brothers prefer to return to me the portion which I sent them amounting to $15.94.[114]

To carry out my intention of free service it gives me pleasure to hand you herewith my check for the above amount $15.94 so returned to me which I will be glad to have you accept from

Your loving son,
Gus

The Trials of the Tugboat Ella

The following accounts are taken from the Baltimore newspaper, The Sun. They record a history of bad luck for the Baltimore-based tugboat Ella—tragedy for those whose worked aboard her and for its owners, brothers Christian [No. 38], Henry [No. 41], and George Spamer [No. 44]. The series of articles quoted here involves mishaps, sinkings, and three deaths in separate incidents.

One might assume correctly that the final events described below ended the Spamers' careers as Chesapeake Bay mariners. No record of George Spamer, captain of the vessel, is again found in this [112] Gus [Christian Augustus Emanuel Spamer] to Pap [Ludwig Spamer], 8 Mar 1897, "Spamer Families of Baltimore", appendix p. A-31. A copy of a transcription of this letter also accompanied correspondence from Frances D. Spamer to Katharine S. Spamer (21 Apr 1976), which Frances noted that she had "obtained from a granddaughter of Ludwig [Spamer]" [Heinrich Conrad Ludwig Spamer, No. 37].

[113] "Uncle Henry" is Henry Spamer, George's brother. The misfortune referred to surely is the situation regarding bad debts due Henry as the result of a forger's criminal activity, about which more is mentioned with Henry Spamer [No. 41].

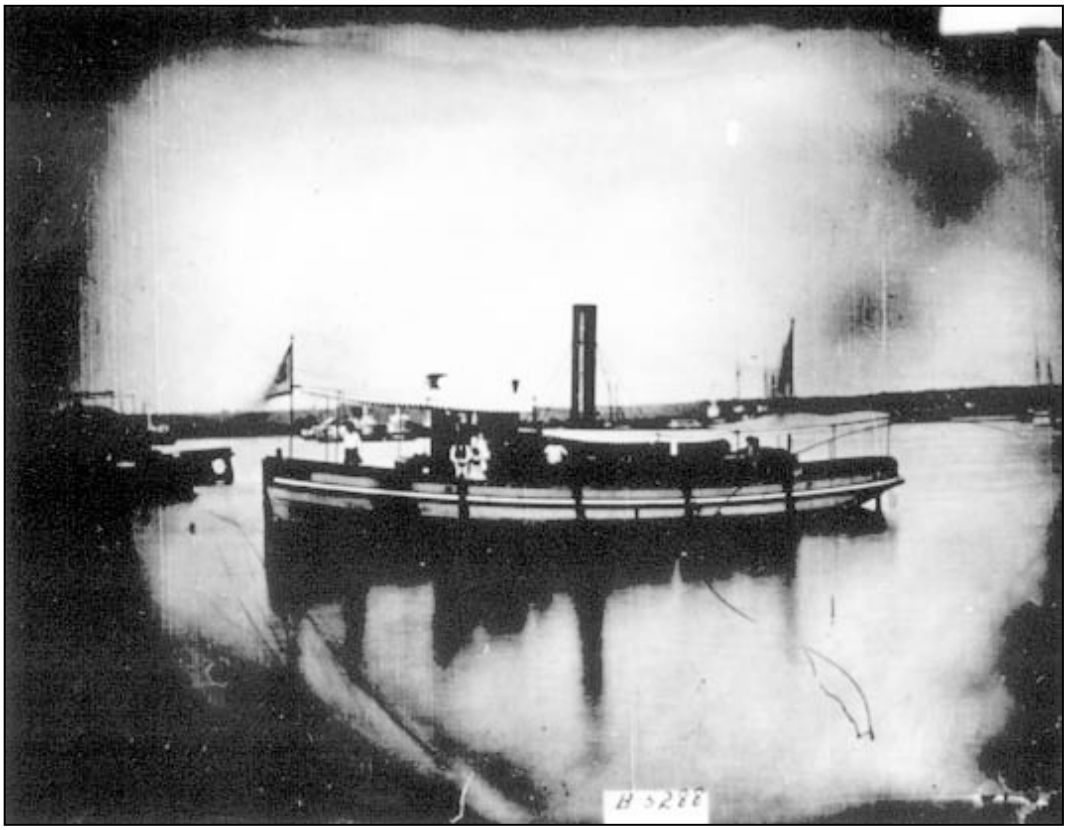
Some Circumstantial Evidence Relating to the Tugboat Ella

Further research into the circumstances of the tugboat Ella, owned by the Spamer brothers, has revealed some circumstantial evidence, which may or may not relate to the same vessel.

An account written by H. B. Smith fifty years after the Civil War, recounts some of his wartime experiences in the Secret Service, as Chief of Detectives and Assistant Provost Marshal General with Maj. Gen. Lew Wallace. He referred to an incident during April 1864 during surveillance of the schooner Wm. H. Travers, loaded in Baltimore "with a mixed cargo", which vessel its sailors conspired to swamp "within reach of the Confederates", thus availing them of these stores. "I allowed its loading and permitted the captain to leave port with her, but after she got well down the stream I overhauled [overtook] her with the steam tug 'Ella,' and brought her back to Baltimore." Smith included in his book a transcription of the orders of A. M. Cummings, Chief Quartermaster in Baltimore, to "Captain, Steam Tug Ella", on 30 April 1864:

> You will proceed with your tug under the orders of Lt. H. B. Smith, and render such service as he may require; after performing those duties you will return to Boston wharf and report to me.

In the National Archives, the Mathew B. Brady Collection of Civil War Photographs includes one identified only as "Tugboat. (Ella.)", without location or date information (Brady Collection, B-5288). There is insufficient scenery in the photograph to ascertain even whether it was taken in Baltimore harbor. However, Brady worked widely during the war and he could have taken this photograph in Baltimore.



Mathew Brady photograph, "Tugboat. (Ella.)" (National Archives)

There is no evidence at this time that this is the same steamtug, named Ella, as which was owned by the Spamer brothers. If it is the same vessel, there likewise is no evidence at this time that it was owned by the Spamers during the Civil War, a decade earlier than the newspaper accounts about the Ella that are recounted in this genealogy. But the coincidence of the facts cited above are worth taking note, pending further research.

occupation. Christian Spamer, engineer, had his license revoked after the final incident; and coincidentally he died less than a year later. Henry Spamer, a boot and shoe maker, was obviously an investor only. In the end, the tugboat was sold in a U.S. Marshal's auction, presumably to settle a civil suit brought against her owners. The only members of the family who thereafter remained in the bay maritime business were William Spamer (1847–1912) [No. 93] and Henry Emmanuel Spamer (1858–1932) [No. 98], two sons of Christian Spamer who were tugboat engineers; but neither of them was involved in the incidents relating to the Ella.

The first of the incidents was a fatal one, and yet not the last fatal incident for the Ella and her crew. It occurred when a boat being towed by the Ella keeled over onto the tug, leading to the drowning death of the tug's fireman, August Hagget:

The Sun (22 Aug 1874)

> Fatal Accident in the Harbor—Upsetting of a Vessel in Tow—A Steamtug Smashed—One Man Drowned, &c.—The Austrian bark Antonia [sic] Maria, four hundred tons register, while being towed from Miller's wharf to the Canton elevator, yesterday afternoon about 3½ o'clock, careened or fell over on one side, smashing a portion of the steamtug Ella, Capt. George Sparmer [sic], which had the bark in tow, and causing the death by drowning of a man named August Hagget. The bark arrived here about two weeks ago from Dublin, Ireland, in ballast, and having discharged all the ballast at the Canton dumping ground prepared to proceed to Fell's Point to await her turn at the Canton elevator, from which she intended to take a cargo of grain for Europe. Foreign vessels as [illegible] are hard to manage when they are without ballast or cargo, appearing to be as top heavy as a man more than "half seas over." Almost all foreign vessels after discharging ballast have to be propped to float steadily by means of heavy spars suspended below the waist or water-line on either side. These spars were placed around the Antonia Maria, and being kept perpendicular by them, she was safely towed some weeks since from Canton to Miller's wharf, at the foot of Fell street. The tugboat that brought her up then was the same that towed her out yesterday.
> The captain of the tug was on board the Antonia Maria during the tow, having left his mate, Joseph Howard[115], holding the wheel, the work of towing being laborious under the circumstance of not steering well. On reaching the centre of the stream, about 500 yards distant in an oblique direction from Henderson's wharf, the tug attempted to turn herself and the vessel to which she was attached. It proved a difficult and tedious task, and the operation had been scarcely commenced, when the bark fell over on the upper deck of the tug, smashing the entire after portion of the galley and engine room.
> Joseph A. Howard, the mate, who was still at the wheel, saw the tall masts threatening as the vessel toppled over and instantly leaping forward sprang into the water and struck out for his [illegible] August Hagget[116], who was employed on the tug as fireman, was standing near the engine room and also sprang into the water. There was, of course, great excitement both on the tug and the vessel. Boats put out from the shore, and steamers, as fast as the word was passed from wharf to wharf, hastened to the rescue. Howard, the mate, had been swimming but a short distance when Hagget the fireman, said: "I can't swim, help me or I'm gone." Howard told him to put his arms around his body, but says he had not finished the words when Hagget disappeared. In [115] Joseph Howard is likely to be the Joseph Howard, aged 32, born in Maryland, who appears in the 1880 U.S. census for Baltimore whose occupation is listed as the captain of a steamboat. In his household is also his brother-in-law, Edward Henderson, 23, born in Maryland, who is listed as an engineer on a tugboat. The household was at 74 South Washington St.; neighbors included many other individuals occupied in maritime businesses. Joseph Howard has not been unambiguously identified in the 1870 census for Maryland.

[116] August Hagget has not been otherwise identified.

> a few seconds Howard felt a hand grasp him like a vice around the ankle. He was drawn under, and had to struggle to get free and save himself. Hagget was seen no more. A small boat at this time picked Howard up, and he immediately replaced himself at the wheel of the tug.
> The vessel had been prevented from fully capsizing by her mizzenmast and rigging being supported on the tug. Extra lines were secured and the tug Joseph W. Bullock placed herself on the starboard side of the vessel. With the Ella as a support the careened vessel was then safely towed to the Canton elevator. She had fallen on her port side, and as she passed down the harbor, one mast just over the water, another leaning across the tug, her rails on the port side in the water and her entire keel visible, she presented a novel spectacle.
> Nearly all the tugs in the harbor surrounded the vessel and the tug, and followed in the wake to Canton. At the elevator ropes and pulleys were manned, and together with the aid of the Mohawk and other tugs the vessel was raised and propped so as to allow the tug Ella to be relieved of her load. The extent of the damage to the vessel was not ascertained, and the cause of the careening is not clear, some inclining to the opinion that the tug in turning around drew the vessel over, while the others attribute it entirely to the insufficiency of proper ballast.
> August Hagget, the fireman who was drowned, was about twenty years of age, unmarried, of German descent, and lived with his parents at No. 60 South Wolfe street. He had been for three years employed on tugboats, and was considered a good hand. Officer Sinekey and others were busily engaged last evening hunting for the body in the harbor.

A Philadelphia newspaper likewise picked up the story:[117]

> The Austrian barque Antonio Maria, while being towed to the Canton elevator, Baltimore, yesterday, by the tug boat Ella, fell over on her broadside, her masts striking the tug and crushing through her wheelhouse. The mate and fireman of the tug jumped into the water, and the latter, August Haggett, aged 21, was drowned. The barque, with her keel upwards, was towed by several tugs to the elevator, where [she] was righted without damage.

The Antonio Maria was not too badly damaged, as she was cleared by U.S. Customs to sail for Queenstown, England, on 27 August loaded with 20,774 bushels of corn.[118]

In an incident, for which the cause has not been revealed in records searches, the tugboat Ella sank at her mooring:

The Sun (21 May 1878)

> Sinking of a Tug.—The harbor steam tug Ella, Capt. Degenhardt[119], sank early yesterday morning at her moorings, Commercial wharf, Fell's Point, in 22 feet of water. The tug is owned by C. Spamer. The engineer had gone away but a few hours before and everything was apparently sound. It is possible that the stiff breeze which sprang up early in the morning drove the tug against a wharf log and forced a leak. She will be raised as soon as possible, and the cause of her sinking ascertained. The damage to the vessel will not be large, though the cost of raising her will be considerable. She lies entirely out sight with the exception of the upper joint of her smokestack, which is above water.

[118] The Sun (Baltimore), 28 Aug 1874. After the bark Antonio Maria left Baltimore, she encountered a hurricane on 7 Sep, which "hove the vessel on her beam ends and cut away all here masts, when she righted, with fourteen feet of water in her hold, the masts having gone through the bottom. Finding it impossible to save the vessel, [Capt. Glaser] concluded to abandon her, and was taken off by the bark Ranger and brought to this port [New York]" (The Sun, Baltimore, 17 Sep 1874). The Ranger herself had lost her sails in the hurricane, enroute from Belfast to Charleston, and put into New York in distress. Later, the Antonio Maria was taken by a prize crew and was last heard from at the port of Fayal, Azores (The Sun 12 Nov 1874).

[119] It is clear that the tugboat may have occasionally been contracted to other captains or may have been operated by an interim captain if her own captain was not available.

Just three months later, as the result of a mechanical problem the Ella, while on the bay, filled with water enough to submerge her, and she was towed to Annapolis for repairs:

The Sun (31 Aug 1878)

Disaster to a Steam-Tug.—The Baltimore steam-tug Ella, Capt. George Spamer, was sunk yesterday morning at Poplar Island, in the Chesapeake. The accident was caused by coupling bolts in her machinery giving way, which caused her to leak in the stern, so that a short time afterwards she was entirely submerged, her crew being obliged to leave her. The steamer Roanoke, Capt. Crawler, of the Norfolk freight line, went to the assistance of the Ella and started to tow her across the bay to Annapolis. The tug Mary Shaw afterwards joined the Roanoke, and they together succeeded in reaching that harbor at 4 P. M. with the disabled tug, the scows being used as lighters. Aid will be sent from Baltimore to the Ella to-day and she will be repaired at the Annapolis railway, it is expected. She left Baltimore on Thursday evening with two scows in tow, one with 23[?] tons of coal, owned by Mr. Ferris, of this city, and the other empty, for St. Mary's river. Her owners are Henry, Christian and George Spamer, three brothers.

Less than a month later, raised again, the Ella was involved in a fatal accident in which stevedore Buoneventure Parodi was drowned:

The Sun (25 Sep 1878)

Drowning in the Channel.—Francisco Parodi, an Italian, partner with Henry Gunther, at Canton, as stevedores, under the firm name of Gunther & Parodi, was drowned yesterday noon below the Seven Foot Knoll and the Craighill channel by the overturning of a yawlboat. Parodi was in company with Capt. Chace and Anton Johnson, runners for Italian stevedores and brokers, and, the yawl, in which they were seated, had been made fast alongside the Italian bark Angelo Accame coming up the channel. The men wee making arrangements to go on board the bark, and a climbing rope had been thrown from the yawl to the vessel. While in this position the tugboat Ella, Captain George Palmer [sic], steamed around the stern of the vessel and ran alongside. A collision of the yawl and tug followed, the yawl being capsized and all three thrown into the water. The tug threw out lines; Chace was first picked up and taken aboard. Johnson succeeded in getting hold of the line, but seeing Parodi in danger of sinking let go, and, floating on an oar and the rudder of the yawl, used all his efforts to keep his comrade above water. His efforts in this direction were unsuccessful, for Parodi sank perfectly helpless to the bottom. Johnson was afterwards drawn aboard the tug in safety. Parodi's body was not recovered. He had been a partner with Mr. Gunther for two years and a half, having lived at Canton a year or so previously. He was a native of Genoa, 36 years old. A short time ago he rented a house at Canton and had it furnished and made ready for the arrival of his wife from Genoa, to whom he telegraphed a few weeks ago, and who is now on her way to America. He was an industrious man, and had gained the respect of other stevedores and others with whom he had business. He had no children. The yawl was alongside the bark to solicit the unloading of the vessel, ad the tug steamed up for the two to port.

Body Recovered.—The body of Francisco Parodi, the Italian stevedore, of Canton, who was drowned below Seven-Foot Knoll, Wednesday inst. by collision of the tug Ella with a yawl-boat in which he was seated, was found yesterday at the mouth of the Craighill channel, a mile from the place of the accident. The discovery was made by Capt. League, of the tug Olive Baker. The body was taken to Harnson's wharf, Canton. Justice Dorsey, of Baltimore county, summoned a > jury of inquest, which, after hearing a portion of the evidence, adjourned till to-day. At the time of the collision both the tug and the yawl were lying alongside the Italian bark Angelo Accome, which was on her way to port.

The Sun (30 Sep 1878)

> Inquests were held Saturday on the bodies of Francisco Parodi, the Italian stevedore, of Canton, who was drowned near Seven-Foot Knoll Tuesday [and another man in an unrelated incident] . . . . Justice Dorsey held the inquest on the body of Parodi at Canton, and the jury, A.J. Crockett, foreman, rendered a verdict that "he came to his death by drowning from negligence on the part of Capt. George Spamer, of the tug Ella." The tug, it will be remembered, collided with the yawl in which Parodi and two others were seated, while both the tug and yawl were lying alongside the Italian bark Angelo Accame, coming into port. A warrant was issued for the arrest of Capt. Spamer on the strength of this verdict, but it had not been served. Capt. Spamer was down the bay at the time of the inquest, and had no opportunity to make a statement to the jury. It was testified in the case that threats had been made to drown Parodi, and on the strength of this, Antonio Frank, also a stevedore, was arrested and held in custody until dismissed by the justice, when the verdict was reached. Frank was on the tug, but had climbed aboard the vessel before the accident occurred. The principal witnesses in the case were Antonio Johnson and Capt. Chace, who were in the yawl with Parodi. The jury directed attention to the danger of accident from the hurried attempts of tugboat owners, stevedores, boarding-house runners, &c., to reach incoming vessels. Parodi's body was buried at Mt. Carmel Cemetery.

The Sun (30 Sep 1878)

> Damage Suits . . . . —An action was brought in the Superior Court yesterday by Catinia Parodi, widow of Francisco, alias Buoneventura Parodi[120], for damages for the drowning of her husband, September 24, 1878. She charges that her husband was in a boat alongside the Italian bark Angelo Accame, near the Seven-foot Knoll, at the mouth of the Patapsco river; that the boat was run into by the tugboat Ella, by which her husband was thrown into the water and drowned. She sues the owners of the Ella, Capt. George Spamer, Henry Spamer and Christian Spamer, laying the damages at $20,000.

A third fatal events involving the Ella took place in April 1879, which is described farther below. Here, we first continue with the events related to the death of Francisco Parodi.

During the celebrations of the centennial of the city of Baltimore, in October 1880, a parade of nearly seventy tugboats took place on the Patapsco River with a review at Fort Carroll. The newspaper account noted that three tugboats, the Ella among them, were not in the parade but "were repairing".[121] To have missed out on these celebrations must have been very discouraging for the Spamer brothers. Of course, with legal actions pending, it was not likely that the crew would have been permitted to sail the vessel for any purpose. Soon afterward it seems that the tugboat was seized by the court to be sold at auction for damages as testified by the following classified advertisement in The Sun:

Nothing more has thus far been ascertained as to the disposition of the charges against George Spamer and the co-owners of the Ella.

Of additional note is a single sentence that appeared in The Nautical Gazette just a few weeks later: [122]

> The new tug ELLA arrived from Baltimore last week.

Almost surely this was the steamtug Ella, once owned by the Spamers; and presumably this report was from New York, where the Gazette was published. The new owners are not indicated. The ultimate fate of the Ella is not known.

The third fatal event aboard the tug Ella came just eight months after the Pirodi death. The tug steward, Thomas Mitchell, was killed in a boiler mishap, which eventually was determined to have been the fault of engineer Christian Spamer, whose engineer's license was consequently revoked as a penalty of the accident:

The Sun (3 Apr 1879):

> Steamtug Accident.—A slight accident to the boiler of the tugboat Ella, Capt. Spamer, on the Canton elevator, yesterday, caused severe injury to Thomas Mitchell[123] colored, steward, who was scalded by escaping steam, which rushed out in such force as to knock him down. He was scalded about the face, neck, body and arms, but managed to make his way on deck, where the engineer came to his assistance. He was then brought to Fell's Point and sent to his home, No. 177 South Regester street. The surgeon who attended him last night reported that the injuries to the man were not so serious as at first supposed. The boiler of the tug was only slightly injured.

The Sun (5 Apr 1879):

Fatal Result.—Thos. Mitchell, colored steward, who was injured by the steam explosion on the tug Ella last Wednesday, died at his house, No. 177 South Regester street, at 1.15 o'clock yesterday afternoon.

The finding of Messrs. Lowery and Saville, United States local board of steam boiler inspectors, relative to the tug Ella explosion in Baltimore harbor, has been sent to Washington. It censures those in charge.

The Sun (19 Apr 1879):

Deprived of his License.—Wm. O. Saville and Jas. D. Lowry, United States local board of steam vessel inspectors, yesterday revoked the license of Christian Spamer, engineer of the steamtug Ella, on which an explosion occurred in this harbor April 2, and Thomas Mitchell, colored, the steward, was fatally scalded. The notification of the inspectors to Mr. Spamer was as follows:

"You are hereby informed that upon full consideration your license, as special engineer[125], has this day been revoked for your neglect of duty, in not giving proper attention to repairs done to boiler of steamtug Ella, and allowing a patch to be put on improperly, thereby causing the death of the steward of said boat."

The report of the board to James A. Dumont, supervising inspector general of steam vessels, was as follows:

"We respectfully report that we have investigated the causes of the accident which resulted in the death of the steward of the steamtug Ella, who was killed by steam escaping from a fracture in the boiler of said steamer. Some thirty days prior to the accident the engineer discovered a crack in the back of the boiler, which had been patched, and instead of the patch being put on so that the bolts would be on both sides of the crack they were put in the crack, thereby weakening instead of strengthening the boiler, which gave way, scalding the steward, who was in the forward cabin at the time, and who died the next day. Christian Spamer, the engineer in charge, says that he told

Residing with her were children Sarah, 10, and Georgiana, 4, as well as her father, Lloyd Mitchel, aged 77, a "peddler of cakes", and boarder Charles Rennolds, 45, a stevedore.

[125] Usually, a "special engineer" was a rating given to a steam-boiler engineer assigned to small craft or to a specific steam engine or boiler, as opposed to an engineer licenced to operate a general class of engines or boilers ranked by horsepower or other technical definition.

> the boiler-maker who put the patch on to place the bolts on both sides of the crack, but did not examine it to see if the patch had been put on properly, as it was his duty to do. It is very evident to us that had the patch been put on properly this accident would have happened. We have, consequently, revoked his license as special engineer."

Eleven months later, Christian Spamer died.

37. Heinrich Conrad Ludwig Spamer (Ludwig Spamer) (1818–1902)
"Lewis", "Louis", "Louie"

A family Bible includes the following record (in English): [130]

> Born Henry Conrad Ludwig Spamer son of Conrad and Annetta Spamer on the 12th day of September 1818

The baptismal record of Heinrich Conrad Ludwig Spamer is transcribed in translation in the "Spamer Families of Baltimore":

> Heinrich Conrad Ludwig Spamer was born 12 September 1818 about 11 o'clock in the morning at Oberschmitten, the first child and son of Johann Conrad Spamer—citizen and master potter of Oberschmitten—and his wife Johanetta Magdalena (born Heinzeberger). Godparent was: Heinrich Conrad Ludwig, son of the deceased Johann Ludwig Heinzeberger—citizen and tailor in Oberschmitten. (As he was a minor) his place was taken by Johann Conrad Freimann, citizen and cabinet maker in Oberschmitten.[131]

Heinrich Conrad Ludwig Spamer emigrated from Hesse Darmstadt, Germany, to the U.S. in 1837 and became a naturalized citizen on 11 September 1840 in Baltimore, Maryland. He was the only one of the German-born children of Conrad Spamer who remained in Germany when his family emigrated to the U.S. in 1832. With whom Ludwig had remained in Germany is not known at this time; it possible that he was indentured in work).

From the church records of Ulfa, Germany, transcribed in translation in the "Spamer Families of Baltimore", is a baptismal record for one Ludwig Heinzeberger (born 13 February 1836, baptized 21 February 1836), which places Ludwig Spamer there at the time:

> Godfather: Ludwig Spamer, the son of Konrad Spamer who remained behind when this former citizen and farmer of Oberschmitten traveled to America about three years ago.[132]

In the Baltimore city directory for 1847 Ludwig Spamer is listed as "Lewis Sparmer"; this is also the only instance thus far seen in print in which his Americanized given name is used (and note, too, the spelling, "Sparmer"). However, several letters that his son, "Gus", wrote to him during the Civil War are addressed to "Lewis Spamer, Esq." [133] A letter from his daughter, Amelia, there refers to her father as "Louie".[134]

* In the contested 2 April 1860 election in Baltimore, Maryland, Ludwig Spamer is listed at this address. He is recorded as having not voted, but no reason was given. (One of two answers could have been selected as the reason for not voting—"violence" and "intimidation"). [138]

[135] Ethereal oil, Oleum Aethereum, composed of equal volumes of heavy oil and ether, was used widely in glass lamps, which provided a brighter kind of light than produced by conventional gas lamps. The product was also sold in preparations for the putative treatment of deafness, as indicated by labels on some antique medicine bottles. However, in its medicinal form it is useless. The newspapers of the day also continually reported tragic incidents of burns and deaths due to accidents involving ethereal oil. The liquid and vapor alike are highly inflammable and susceptible to violent combustion; the substance was easily mishandled, particularly in the home. (>>Samuel O. L. The 1850 U.S. census also lists in the Ludwig Spamer household: Caroline Martin, aged 47; Caroline Doritee[?], aged 26; and Elisabeth Doritee[?], aged 57. (Caroline Martin was Ludwig Spamer's mother-in-law. About her and the Doritee women, see under Julia (Martin) Spamer, below.)

Ludwig Spamer purchased at Baltimore Cemetery, Baltimore, Maryland, Lots 284/298, Area I. The lot record lists his name as "Ludwig Sparmer" [sic]. The first burial was in Lot 284, Anna Schmidt, aged 9 years and 10 months, interred 26 July 1860. In the same grave later was buried "Fred. Schmidt", aged 10 years, interred 27 January 1863. To whom the Schmidt children belonged has not been determined; there are no pertinent Schmidt members of the family that are known at this time.

There are no other burials in Lot 284, leaving three empty graves. The first burial in Lot 289 was Edith Spamer [No. 87], Ludwig's young daughter, interred 27 January 1861. Two years later, Ludwig's mother-in-law, Caroline Martin, was interred 31 August 1863. Eighteen years later, Virginia Spamer, second wife of William Spamer [No. 93] (Ludwig's nephew), was interred 3 May 1881. The fourth grave of Lot 298 remains empty. Also see Additions & Corrections

The lot record card from the cemetery's office includes the notation, "No Care—Back Chg. Due."; when this was written is not known.

Anna Dorthen Julianna Marten (1824–1900)
Julia Dorothea (Martin) Spamer
(wife of Ludwig Spamer)
"Julie"

The "Spamer Families of Baltimore" lists Julia Spamer's maiden name as Julia Dorothea Martin and notes that she emigrated with her parents from Mitan, Russia, to the U.S. in 1830.[139] Thus far no immigration data have been found for Julia Marten or variant names. The 1880 U.S. census indicates that both of her parents were born in Russia; the 1900 census reports that her father was born in Denmark, her mother in Russia. The fate of her father has not been determined.

In the 1850 census she is indexed as "Fatia" although "Julia" is clearly written on the census page.

Her name was Americanized to Julia Martin, by which name she has always been known to the family. A Bible, in the possession of Nancy Spamer MicKey, contains a leaf with the inscription, "Anna Dorhten [sic] Julianna Marten Baltimore"; this provides us with Julia Martin's full German name.[140] "Dorhten"

(Spamer 3883)

Anna Dorthen Julianna (Marten) Spamer [Julia Dorothea Spamer] (1824–1900)
(wife of Heinrich Conrad Ludwig Spamer [Ludwig Spamer, No. 37])

is a misspelling of "Dorthen", a traditional German abbreviation for Dorothea; the misspelling seems to be either a lapsus or a phonetic misspelling by the writer. We may infer from the inscriptions in this Bible that it was first owned by Julia, although this is only an assumption. The inscription of Julia's full name appears in Germanic, Kurrentschrift-style letters.[141]

Who first owned the Bible is not clear. As a German-language American printing, it is clear that it is an acquisition by, or a legacy presentation to, one of the immigrants. It is possible that it may have been a presentation by a German-language church in Baltimore. The Bible might first have been acquired or given either to Conrad Spamer (after it was printed in 1836, of course) or to Ludwig Spamer, upon his separate immigration to America in 1837 (as noted, he had remained in Germany for five years after his family had emigrated from Germany).

With the exception of Julia Martin's full German name written in Kurrentschrift-style letters, the genealogical data included on leaves in this Bible are in English and written with letter styles typical of the early 19th century. The names are grouped in such a way that we may infer that it was either Conrad Spamer or his son, Ludwig (Julia's husband), who listed the information. This is supposed because Conrad Spamer's name and birth information are written separately on one leaf; on another leaf is written information for the first three children born of Conrad (Ludwig, Christian, and Catharine); last to be listed on the second leaf is the name only of Conrad's wife, Annetta. Julia's full German maiden name appears separately on another leaf, but the significance of its having been written in Kurrentschrift is not clear. One might suppose that it was written as an ownership or presentation inscription to her—if so, then she could be the original owner of the Bible—but it appears on the fifth leaf rather than on the inside cover or on the flyleaf.

The names of Ludwig, Christian, and Catharine Spamer and their mother comprise a peculiar listing. The children are those born to Conrad and Annetta Spamer in Germany and who survived to emigrate to America. However, the list omits Henry, the youngest of those children; yet the Bible is an 1836 American edition, obviously acquired after the immigration of both the Marten and Spamer families (1830 and 1832, respectively).

Regarding Julia Martin's mother, the following partial information has been determined for the present genealogy:

> Julia's mother was Caroline (13 December 1803–30 August 1863). In the 1850 and 1860 censuses,[142] Caroline Martin is listed residing with her daughter's family in Baltimore.

"printing" are terms used interchangeably, although technically a new "edition" means that changes have been made from a previous edition or printing, while a new "printing" means that another run of the same publication has been produced. The Bible is now (2008) held by Nancy Spamer MicKey, great-great granddaughter of Julia Spamer.

[141] Kurrentschrift (current, or flowing, script) means in English "long-hand" or "cursive" writing; that is, handwriting with connected letters. The handwriting style seen in Julia Marten's name as written on the Bible's flyleaf was an older German hand like that used in Germany and Austria until about 1930. I thank Anton "Ton" Spamer for translating the inscription from Kurrentschrift and for providing this information and a key to the letter styles of this form of handwriting; he also recognized the misspelling of Dorthen as the familiar name for Dorothea (Ton Spamer to Earle Spamer, 1-2 Mar 2008).

[142] In the 1840 U.S. census for Baltimore, a "Mrs. Martin" is listed residing in the 4th Ward, but the only other member of her household tallied on the census sheet is a male under the age of five; of course, this may be only a coincidental name.

> In the Baltimore Cemetery (Lot 283, Area I) there is an old grave marker that in 2004 was illegible except for the inscription, "Mrs. Elizabeth Martin"; this is Julia's mother. The lot record card lists "Caroline Martin [interred] Aug. 31, 1863 (59 yr 8 mo)".[143] Her name might have been Elizabeth Caroline or Caroline Elizabeth; and how or if either of these names have been Anglicized is not known.
> Caroline Martin's obituary in the Baltimore Sun is as follows (square brackets are part of the quotation):[144]
> > "On Sunday, 30th ultimo, at eleven o'clock A. M., Mrs. CAROLINE MARTIN, aged 59 years 8 months and 13 days. 'Blessed are they who die in the Lord.' [Hagerstown papers please copy.]
> > "Funeral from the residence of Ludwig Spamer."

There are large German emigrant communities in Russia, where the surname Martin is not unusual. It is not certain to whom might have been this notice directed to readers in Hagerstown, Maryland, who might have been interested in learning of the decease of Caroline Martin.

The 1850 U.S. census for Ludwig and Julia Spamer's household includes Julia's mother, Caroline Martin, born in Russia. Also in the household at that time are Caroline Doritee (or Dositee[145]), aged 26, born in Maryland, and Elisabeth Doritee, aged 57, born in Maryland. The identity of the two Doritee women are unknown. They may be related to Julia's mother, and if so, "Doritee" (or some similar name) may be Caroline's Martin's maiden name. Caroline and Elisabeth "Doritee" in the 1850 census might be an aunt and cousin to Julia. They could also be housekeepers or farmhands, and thus unrelated to the family.

The 1865 Baltimore city directory lists Julia Spamer with her husband; she was at the time a dealer in coal oil lamps. Apparently, she operated the family shop, as at the time her husband, Ludwig, was a dealer in Ethereal Oil.

Julia Spamer's obituary in 1900 appeared in the Baltimore Sun:[146]

> Death of Mrs. Julia Spamer.

> Mrs. Julia Spamer, 76 years old, wife of Mr. Ludwig Spamer, died Saturday morning at her home, Rockland, near Perry Hall, Eleventh district. Mrs. Spamer had been in failing health for some time. Mrs. Spamer, besides her husband, left five sons—C. A. E. Spamer, attorney-at-law; Arthur L. Spamer, of the United States Court; Reuben O. Spamer, of Stratford, Conn.; Adolph N. Spamer, of Washington, D.C., and Elmer J. Spamer, of Perry Hall. She also left four sisters.

Julia Martin Spamer is buried at "Rocky Rest", near "Rockland", Perry Hall, Baltimore Co., Maryland.

82. Olivia Ecolia Burnham Spamer (1845–1914)
"Ollie", "Livy"

Olivia Spamer was a school teacher; she is listed as such in the 1880 U.S. census and the 1872, 1888, 1890 and 1899 Baltimore city directories. By 1911 she was retired. She never married.

83. Amelia S. H. Spamer (1847–1906)

Amelia Spamer is listed in the 1880 and 1900 U.S. censuses as residing at home with her parents and siblings in Baltimore, Maryland. Her middle initials are taken from her grave marker. She never married.

She graduated from the Eastern Female High School in 1864, presenting the Valedictory (second honor) speech.[150]

Amelia Spamer and some of her sisters also lived at "Rockland", the farm of her brother, Elmer. She wrote of her domestic work to her sister, Olivia: [151]

She continues at great length about the chores done by every member of the family at Rockland; all manner of farm and domestic duties, without let-up. From among her other remarks:

> Have just left preparing cherries to stew for supper—am anxious that you should get a little word from home no matter how and what I write. In the "Spamer Families of Baltimore" her given name is spelled "Mathilda" [153], but her brother, Christian Augustus Emanuel Spamer, spelled her name "Matilda". [154] She never married.

She was christened on 16 August 1857 at the First German New-Jerusalem Church,[156] Baltimore, Maryland.

In the 1860 U.S. census she is listed as "Ada", perhaps a misspelling of Edith as spoken with a German accent. She was buried 27 January 1861 in Lot 298, Area I, Baltimore Cemetery, Baltimore, Maryland. The lot record from Baltimore Cemetery records list her name as "Edith J. Spamer"[157]; the lot purchased by Ludwig "Sparmer".[158]

In other lot transcriptions in the same letter, some non-Spamer names were included. Why the Schmidt children and Caroline Martin were not reported to Frances Spamer is not clear. [Adjacent lots 283/297 were purchased presumably at the same time by Christian Spamer; the first interment here was in 1870, Christian's infant grandson, Willard Andrew Spamer [No. 168], son of William Spamer [No. 93] and Caroline (Krumm) Spamer.]

NOTES

38. Christian Spamer (1820–1880)

A family Bible includes the following record (in English): [159]

> Born Christian Spamer on the 7th day of September 1820

The baptismal record of Christian Spamer is transcribed in translation in the "Spamer Families of Baltimore":

> Christian Spamer was born 17 [sic] September 1820, about one o'clock in the morning at Oberschmitten, the second child and second son of Johann Conrad Spamer—citizen and master potter of Oberschmitten—and his wife Johannetta Magdalena (born Heinzeberger).
> Godparents were:
> 1) Christian, the unmarried son of Adam Völker—citizen and blacksmith of Oberschmitten, 2) Christian, the unmarried son of the deceased Christian Rau of Oberschmitten.[160]

Christian Spamer emigrated from Germany to Baltimore, Maryland, with his parents at the age of 12, arriving 1 October 1832. He became a naturalized U.S. citizen in Baltimore, Maryland, on 4 October 1841, shortly after his 21st birthday. [161] The 1850 U.S. census lists him as "Spalmer". The 1860 census lists him as "Sparmer" and indicates that his place of birth is Frankfort. In the Baltimore city directory for 1855 he is listed as "Sparner".

He was baptized as an adult, in 1853, in the First German New-Jerusalem Church, Baltimore, Maryland.

Occupations of Christian Spamer (from U.S. censuses and Baltimore city directories):

[161] The witness on his naturalization papers is William Lenhardt, about whom nothing is known here. There is another index card in the naturalization records in the U.S. District Court, Baltimore, Maryland, which lists Conrad Spamer of Hesse Darmstadt, noting only "other facts of record" with a date of 11 Sep 1840; this could be the record of Conrad's original application for citizenship.

1870 census: 6th Ward, Baltimore city, Maryland
1872 city directory: 32 Jackson Square St.
At death: corner of Caroline and Hampstead Sts.

The "Spamer Families of Baltimore" gives his date of death as 20 March 1880; however, the date of 18 March is noticed in the Baltimore Sun death notice published on 19 March. Christian Spamer was originally buried in Lot 283/297, Area I, Baltimore Cemetery, a lot purchased by him in 1851 and in which numerous family members were buried. His remains were removed on 6 June 1895 to Loudon Park Cemetery (Lot 125 N½, Section O).[162]

There is another record of a marriage date for Christian Spamer and Elizabeth Schroeder, 12 August 1844.

During the 1870s at least, Christian Spamer was a co-owner in a tugboat with his brothers, Henry (No. 41) and George (No. 44, see under Johann Conrad Spamer, No. 7). As the result of a boiler accident that killed the tug's steward, Christian Spamer was found accountable for the accident due to neglecting to ascertain that a boiler repair had been made correctly. More about this may be found in the section, "The Trials of the Tugboat Ella", which appears at the conclusion of the genealogical entry for Johann Conrad Spamer [No. 7].

Elizabeth Margaret (Schroeder) Spamer (1824–1904)
(wife of Christian Spamer)

Family records give her given names as Margaret Elizabeth; however, the 1850 and 1860 U.S. censuses give her name as Elizabeth, the 1880 and 1900 censuses give her name as Elizabeth M. Spamer, and the name on her grave marker is Elizabeth M. Spamer. The 1860 census indicated that her birthplace was Frankfort.

In 1853, she was baptized as an adult at the First German New-Jerusalem Church, Baltimore, Maryland.

In the 1865 Baltimore city directory, she was a grocer, but retired by the time of the 1870 U.S. census. Her store was on the northwest corner of Caroline and Hampstead Sts., with the family residence above it.

92. George Washington Spamer (1845–1866)

George Washington Spamer was baptized in 1853 at the First German New-Jerusalem Church, Baltimore, Maryland.

At the time of the 1860 census, George Washington Spamer was a clerk, residing with his parents in the 3rd Ward of Baltimore, Maryland.

Nothing else is known of him other than his death, although a line in the 1864 Baltimore city directory lists a George Spanner [sic], tobacconist, at 14 E. Pratt St., which could possibly be George Washington Spamer inasmuch as the family name is often misspelled even in directories, and no other George Spamer is known from that time in Baltimore.

The fate of George Washington Spamer had been until recently a mystery to family members of later generations. The following discussion shows how G. W. Spamer was found again, and what was learned had become of him.

There apparently were no oral traditions or written records that were handed down from the immediate family of George Washington Spamer, at least none that survived into the 20th century. After his 1866 marriage to Mary C. Gettys in St. Louis, Missouri, he seemed to have disappeared. The answer, as it turns out, was indeed publicly "available"—in a one-sentence death notice in very small print, published in the Baltimore Sun. Earlier family historians seem to have missed this notice, although it is unreasonable to expect them to have found it since they had no death date from which to work; and they certainly would not have expected him to die so soon after his marriage. In fact, it was only in 2007—three years after I had independently found G. W. Spamer's burial through cemetery records in St. Louis—that I serendipitously saw the Sun notice myself.

A. M. Spamer noted in the "Spamer Families of Baltimore" that there apparently were no descendants of G.W. Spamer, "since they were not included in the distribution of the estate of Andrew Perry Spamer" [163] [No. 100], G. W. Spamer's youngest and last surviving sibling who died in 1959. A. M. Spamer had attempted to locate G. W. Spamer, without success. He did think to look in the St. Louis public records, but they were not published and he was informed that the death records indexed by the City Health Bureau may be incomplete for the early years of those records. [164] A. M. Spamer reported nothing further.

In 2004, I located George Washington Spamer through a list of St. Louis City Death Records that had been posted on an Internet website. Those records indexed a "Geo W Spalmer" [sic].[165] The information for this individual indicated that the decedent had been born in Maryland, was a resident of St. Louis, had died 5 September 1866, and was buried in Bellefontaine Cemetery.[166] Upon inquiry to the cemetery, I [166] Bellefontaine Cemetery is a large, historic cemetery on W. Florissant Ave., St. Louis. Included amongst the notable burials here are explorer William Clark and beer baron Adolphus Busch. received copies of interment records and documents relating to the decease of "Geo. W. Spalmer", which corroborate that this was, indeed, George Washington Spamer. These records are described below.

Then in 2007 I found a three-line, one-sentence notice in the Baltimore Sun for 6 September 1866 (two days after G. W. Spamer's death in St. Louis), which presumably communicated his death to the family in this city. Had this notice been known to earlier family historians, George's demise would not have been so much of a mystery, although they may not have determined his cause of death. The notice reads, succinctly:[167]

> SPAMER—GEORGE W. SPAMER, of Baltimore, Md., departed this life in St. Louis, Mo., September 5th, 1866.

The Bellefontaine Cemetery records document the death and burial of "Geo. W. Spalmer": the decedent was aged 22 years; was born in Baltimore, Maryland; had died at 21st and Franklin Ave. during a cholera epidemic[168]; and was interred 6 September 1866 in the Gettys–De Lancey family lot (no. 397). The physician's Cemetery Certificate, signed by John T. Temple, notes under remarks, "I saw him once, but too late".

A larger Gettys family lot (no. 2940) was acquired by Mrs. Christiana Gettys, apparently at the time of her husband's death, in 1885. Several months later, some members of the family were removed from lot no. 397 and reinterred 15 October 1885 in the larger lot. The order for the reinterments reads as follows, with the interesting observation here that George W. Spamer's name is there spelled correctly (all other spellings thus): [169]

> Mrs Christiana Gettys, orders
> The following removals from Lot No 397 of Gettys et al. & reint[t] in her Lot No 2940, in 3 Adult Graves, as follows, Chas. Spamer from seperate gr. & reinter in 1 Gr. Removals Thursday 15th inst, PM, or at convenience. Open Graves as Mrs Gettys may direct at cemetery & furnish new boxes if needed

Marriage of George Washington Spamer and Mary C. Gettys

George Washington Spamer married Mary C. Gettys 2 May 1866 in St. Louis, Missouri, at the home of W. P. Gettys. The marriage was noticed in The Sun in Baltimore two weeks later:[170]

[168] The 1866 St. Louis cholera epidemic was a part of the fourth cholera pandemic of the 19th century, which began in India in 1863 and spread westward, arriving in New York by ship from France in Oct 1865. The disease appeared in St. Louis during the last week of July 1866 and spread there alarmingly. The St. Louis epidemic peaked during the third week of August and diminished through November. Some extensive contemporary reports can be read on the USGenNet website ("1866 Cholera Epidemic", website http://www.usgennet.org/usa/mo/county/stlouis/events/epidemics.htm; accessed 30 Nov 2004). Information about the origin of the pandemic is from informational 4848website http://www.posen-l.com/cholera.htm.

W. P. Gettys was probably William P. Gettys, Sr., a St. Louis merchant here identified from U.S. census records. His relationship to Mary is unknown, although he seems not to have been her father (see under Mary C. Gettys, below). Also see Additions & Corrections

The "Spamer Families of Baltimore" includes a xerographic copy of a letter that transcribes the marriage record for George Washington Spamer and Mary C. Gettys:[173]

No children are known from the four-month marriage of George Washington and Mary Gettys Spamer.

Mary (Gettys) Spamer (before 1850–)
(wife of George Washington Spamer)

The relationship of Mary Gettys to W. P. Gettys of St. Louis (at whose residence she was married) is at this time unknown; she does not seem to be his daughter because no pertinent household has been located in earlier U.S. censuses. Presumably he was William P. Gettys, Sr., husband of Christiana (see the list of interments in the Gettys family lot in Bellefontaine Cemetery, below). Also see Additions & Corrections

The 1860 census data for Ironton, Ohio, lists several "Gettis" families (note spelling); no other comparable spellings are found there. One household includes a 17-year-old Mary Gettis residing with a widowed 55-year-old Sarah Gettis; their relationship to each other has not been established.

[171] Rev. A. C. George was a Methodist Episcopal minister who worked in the Missouri and Kansas region in the mid-1860s. He may be the Rev. A. C. George who earlier had been minister of the First Methodist Episcopal Church in Waterloo, New York, 1849-1850. (>>R. I. Holcombe, History of Greene County, Missouri, Western Historical Co., St. Louis, 1883, Chapt. 14; William G. Cutler, History of the State of Kansas, containing a full account of its growth from an uninhabited territory to a wealthy and important State, A. T. Andreas, Chicago, 1883, Davis County, Pt. 7, Junction City, Pt. 2; and Manual of the Churches of Seneca County, with Sketches of Their Pastors, 1896-96, Courier Printing Co., Seneca Falls, New York, 1896.)

[172] Ironton was founded in 1849 in the heart of what once was the world's largest pig-iron producing center. As both a production and shipping center on the Ohio River, Ironton grew to become the seat of Lawrence County in 1851. Ironton, on the Ohio River within convenient traveling distance of St. Louis, also was the southern terminus of the Iron Railway, which later became a part of the Detroit, Toledo & Ironton Railroad. Barge service across the Ohio River also connected to the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad terminus in Russell, Kentucky. The combination of rail and river transportation services made the region prosperous. (>>City of Ironton website, http://www.ironton-ohio.com; accessed 1 Jun 2006.)

Inasmuch as the Ohio River was a principal thoroughfare for travel, a substantive genealogical connection may be assumed for the Gettis families of Ironton and the Gettys families of St. Louis. However, unresolved here is difference whereby the Ohio families consistently spelled their surname "Gettis" and the St. Louis families consistently spelled their name "Gettys". Further, in all U.S. records seen the "Gettis" spelling is more common than "Gettys".

Other than the marriage of George Spamer of Baltimore and Mary Gettys of Ironton, nothing is known of how or where they met, or why they were married in St. Louis. William P. Gettys' wife, Christiana[174], was born in Maryland, thus there may be a genealogical connection in Baltimore. In the censuses, "Gettys" can be misspelled, including as the more common "Getty". Examining the Gettys (and similar spellings) families of Maryland in the U.S. censuses has not yielded records that can be unambiguously connected to the Gettys family of interest here. In the 1860 census for Baltimore there reside several "Gettis" families, and in the 1870 census there are several "Getties" families, all of whom may be of interest and perhaps each may be a phonetic spelling of "Gettys". In any case, the 1866 marriage of George and Mary in St. Louis was noticed in the Baltimore Sun; whether this was for the benefit of Spamer family and friends, or also for Gettys/Gettis family and friends, cannot be determined at this time.

As mentioned in comments about George Washington Spamer (above), he died in a cholera epidemic four months after his marriage to Mary. The fate of Mary Gettys thereafter is unknown. It is likely that she survived the epidemic, otherwise she, too, would probably have been buried in the Gettys family lot in Bellefontaine Cemetery. It may be assumed that young Mary Spamer remarried at some time; but no marriage or genealogical records have been found under either the Gettys or Spamer names. As seen in the lists below, there is no Mary C. buried in the Gettys family lot in Bellefontaine Cemetery.

There is a U.S. census record of a Spamer family residing in Ironton, Ohio, at the time of the 1910 census. This is a coincidental name only. The family included an 83-year-old woman, Barbara Spamer, born in Germany, and the family of John C. Spamer (he being aged 41, occupied as a gardener on a farm, born in Ohio). John, having been born about 1869, and the fact that his parents were born in Germany, are particulars that seem to exclude this family from consideration among the Baltimore Spamers. [175]

Also see Additions & Corrections

Other than the sketchy information given above, nothing is known of the Gettys family. However, the Bellefontaine Cemetery records provide some genealogical data that are worthwhile reproducing here, which may be useful for further investigations. The following is a list of interments in the two cemetery lots at this cemetery:[176]

[175] My grandfather, John Ward Spamer [No. 114], was born in 1869. He seems to have been named in continuation of the family use of "Johann" as a given name, here Americanized as was his father's name Americanized to Henry. There is no reason to expect that the Baltimore Spamers knew of the Spamers in Ironton, any more than they knew of the unrelated Spamers of New York, Philadelphia, and locales in the Midwest.

95. Virginia (Spamer) Hoskins (1851–1923)
"Jennie"

Also see Additions & Corrections

Virginia Spamer's wedding to J. Sloan Hoskins was officiated by Rev. S. G. Gantt at the bride's residence. The Hoskinses had no children. She used the name Jennie in all public records thus far seen.

In the 1883 and 1890 Baltimore city directories, she is listed under her business, Spamer & Dobbyn, a dressmaker's shop at 124 Park Ave. She operated the shop with Ida Dobbyn. In the 1890 directory her residence is given as 1809 Fairmount Ave., her mother's home. On 17 January 1891, the partnership was dissolved, as recorded by a legal notice published in the Baltimore Sun:[178]

> Baltimore, January 17, 1891.
> THIS IS TO GIVE NOTICE THAT THE PARTNERSHIP HERETOFORE EXISTING BETWEEN THE UNDERSIGNED, UNDER THE NAME AND STYLE OF SPAMER & DOBBYN, has been DISSOLVED this day by mutual consent. The debts of the firm will be paid by JENNIE SPAMER, to whom all bills owing to the firm are to be paid at 124 Park avenue, the late place of business of said firm.
> JENNIE SPAMER.
> IDA M. DOBBYN.
> The business of DRESS AND CLOAK MAKING will be continued by the undersigned at 124 Park avenue, and in her own name.
> JENNIE SPAMER.

In the 1899 Baltimore city directory, she is listed in combination as Mrs. Jennie Spamer (Mrs. J. Spamer Hoskins), dressmaker, 124 Park Ave.; and she is listed under Hoskins as well, with a home address matching that given for James S. Hoskins (2129 E. Baltimore St.). In the 1912 Baltimore city directory, she is listed as Mrs. Jennie S. Hoskins, no occupation, at the same address as that for J. Sloan Hoskins. She is listed in the 1920 U.S. census without an occupation, there with her age given as 61 (thus born ca. 1859, which differs from the 1851 date given in family information).

James Sloan Hoskins (ca. 1852–)
(husband of Virginia Spamer)

Occupations of James Sloan Hoskins (from U.S. censuses and Baltimore city directories):

- 1880 census: Store clerk
- 1890 city directory: Dealer in ship timber (513 E. Pratt St.)
- 1899 city directory: President, Hoskins Lumber Co. (wholesale), 33 S. Gay St.
- 1900 census: [page image of census sheet not seen]
- 1910 census: Lumber merchant
- 1912 city directory: President and Treasurer, J. S. Hoskins Lumber Co., 1101-1102 American Building
- 1913 city directory: President and Treasurer, J. S. Hoskins Lumber Co., 14th floor, Maryland Casualty Tower
- 1920 census: President of lumber company

[178] [Legal notice], The Sun (Baltimore), 19 Jan 1891, p. 3.

Residences of James Sloan Hoskins (from U.S. censuses and Baltimore city directories):

1880 census: 452 Baltimore St. (boarder) [see note below]
1890, 1899 city directories: 2129 E. Baltimore St.
1900 census: [see note below] 6th Ward, Baltimore, Maryland
1910 census: 2126 Maryland Ave., Baltimore, Maryland (as boarder) [see note below]
1912, 1913 city directories: 2126 Maryland Ave.
1920 census: Eden Hall Apartments, 3401 Greenway Drive, Baltimore, Maryland

James Sloan Hoskins seems to have resided most of his adult life with members of the Willis family; his wife, too, after their marriage. The relationship of the Willis family has not been established, although they clearly are relatives through one of his parents. However, nothing has thus far been recovered in public records that assists in identifying the relationship of the Willises to the Hoskinses; nor has James Sloan Hoskins (or his parents) been located in U.S. censuses prior to 1880.

At the time of the 1880 census, James S. Hoskins was a boarder in the home of Mrs. Virginia E. Willis, who was a widow. Also listed with her was a son, George R. Willis, aged 29, a lawyer with whom later the Hoskinses resided. Also boarding in this household was Ellen Hoskins, aged 57, who probably was James' mother, probably also a widow. Two additional Hoskinses are also listed as boarders, whose ages probably indicate that they are siblings of James: Mary E. Hoskins, 26, school teacher, and Oscar W. Hoskins, 25, a clerk in a real estate office.

The 1890 Baltimore city directory lists James S. Hoskins and Mrs. Ellen S. Hoskins, both of 2129 E. Baltimore St. However, an obituary notice for Ellen Sidney Hoskins (d. 11 Jan 1890), widow of Joseph Trimble Hoskins, is noticed here; the funeral was announced to depart from "the residence of her son-in-law, George R. Willis, No. 2129 East Baltimore street". [179] Legal notices published in newspapers of the time note George R. Willis is an attorney in Baltimore. Also of note is another funeral, at which George R. Willis and J. Sloan Hoskins were pallbearers. [180]

In the 1900 U.S. census for the 6th Ward, Baltimore, Maryland, "James Hoskins" and "Jennie Hoskins" are listed in the household of George R. Willis, attorney. The household also includes Luther and Mary Willis, son and daughter, as well as two boarders and three black domestic servants. James Hoskins, aged 38, is listed as a brother-in-law; Jennie Hoskins, aged 37, is listed as daughter. The original page image could not be retrieved [Dec 2007] for further examination of other details, such as residential address, birth dates, and occupations.

In the 1910 census, James Hoskins is listed as J. Sloan Hoskins, and his wife is Jennie L. Hoskins, aged 58[?] and 60, respectively, married for 17 years; he is a lumber merchant. These corroborate the vital statistics of James and Virginia Spamer, although a middle initial for Virginia Spamer has thus far not been found in other records examined. The Hoskinses are listed as boarders in the household of George R. and Mary E. Willis, who are of course the same individuals as with whom James and Jennie resided at the time of the 1900 census. The 1910 residence was at 2126 Maryland Ave., Baltimore. The household also includes Luther and Mary Willis, son and daughter, but no other boarders or domestic servants.

[179] [Obituary notice], The Sun (Baltimore), 13 Jan 1890.

[180] "Mrs. Mary Blew", The Sun (Baltimore), 25 Oct 1899. Mrs. Blew was the widow of the late rev. Abel[?] Blew, apparently not a relation. The funeral was conducted by Rev. Joseph E. Smith, pastor of Mount Veron Place Methodist Episcopal Church, who is coincidentally a relation in the Smith family (see Part II: Smith Family).

George Willis has no occupation at this time. In this census, the Hoskinses are misindexed as "Hockins" or possibly "Hickins"; the original census sheet is somewhat illegible. (Furthermore, the 2126 Maryland Ave. address for both J. Sloan and Jennie Hoskins is corroborated in the 1912 and 1913 Baltimore city directories [no others from this time frame thus far examined].)

The J. S. Hoskins Lumber Company had the following administrators at least at the time of the 1912 and 1913 Baltimore city directories: J. Sloan Hoskins, President and Treasurer; E. Raymond Haggett, Secretary and General Manager; Howard Wood, Assistant General Manager; Richard W. Scherf, Assistant Secretary.

In 1896, James Sloan Hoskins was on the board of governors of the East Baltimore Driving Club, an organization of trotting-horse enthusiasts. [181] Later that year he was a candidate on the Democratic ticket for a position on the City Council in the 1st Ward, Baltimore city[182]; whether he was successful in election has not been determined. (Of note is the name of Christian Augustus Emanuel Spamer on the same ballot, a Prohibition ticket candidate [unsuccessful] for Elector in the Presidential election; he was a cousin of J. Sloan Spamer's wife, Jennie.) In 1901 at least, J. Sloan Hoskins was an officer of the Baltimore Dredging Company. [183, 184]

96. Kate Cora Spamer (1853–1925)

Also see Additions & Corrections

At the time of the 1880 census, Kate Spamer was a clerk in a dry goods store. In the 1883 Baltimore city directory, she is listed as a teacher, residing at 35 Fairmount Ave.

She was buried 14 January 1925 in Lot 125 N½, Section O, Loudon Park Cemetery, Baltimore, Maryland.

[184] A martime family anecdote I interject here pertains to two antique, stemmed drinking glasses, which had been in the effects of Katharine Seville Spamer [No. 192, see under John Ward Spamer, No. 114] and which I now own. She presumably had received these from her parents or grandparents, who in turn may have received the glasses from one of the Spamer relatives of Baltimore. Katharine Spamer recalled on several occasions that the glasses were ostensibly of Colonial American vintage and had been dredged from a shipwreck in the Delaware River by someone in the family who had had a dredging business. Thus far I have not located any evidence that points to one of our family members having actively working in that business in the field, nor anyone with any working relationship on the Delaware River. However, I do note that James Sloan Hoskins, the subject here, was the husband of Virginia "Jennie" Spamer, a niece of Henry Spamer [No. 41] (Katharine Spamer's grandfather). As noted, Hoskins was an officer of the Baltimore Dredging Company. Whether or not J. Sloan Hoskins was the source of these glasses cannot now be determined, although circumstantial evidence suggests that he could have been. If he was, the Delaware River retrieval site cannot be discounted, as the firm could have had business contracted in that river. Access between upper Chesapeake Bay and the Delaware River near its outlet would have most easily been effected through the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal, which first opened to traffic in 1829 (U.S. Army Corps of Engineers website, http://www.nap.usace.army.mil/sb/c&d.htm, accessed 25 Mar 2008). Records have been seen, too, which show the Baltimore Dredging Company working under contract to the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers. Nevertheless, the glasses are surely antiques, and each has a different pattern etched in the glass that should be identifiable markings. They have not as yet been appraised or examined by a glassware expert.

97. Sarah Spamer (1855–1929)
"Sadie"

Also see Additions & Corrections

Sarah Spamer was christened 25 May 1856 in the First German New-Jerusalem Church, Baltimore, Maryland. On 1 November 1873, she resided at 717 W. Baltimore St., Baltimore, Maryland.[185] At the time of the 1910 census, she was a saleslady in a dry goods store.

Her date of death is given in family records as 29 October 1913; cemetery records indicate she was interred 23 October 1929. She is buried in Lot 125 N½, Section O, Loudon Park Cemetery, Baltimore, Maryland. Cemetery records list her name as Sadie Spamer.

98. Henry Emmanuel Spamer (1858–1932)

Henry Emmanuel Spamer was christened on 31 October 1858 in the First German New-Jerusalem Church, Baltimore, Maryland. In the index to the 1910 U.S. census, he is listed as "Spanier", but on the census sheet his name does read Spamer. In the 1910 and 1920 censuses, his single sisters, Kate and Sarah, resided with him.

39. Catharina[4] Spamer (Johann Conrad[3], Johann Conrad[2], Johannes[1]) was born 02 February 1823 in Oberschmitten, Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, and died 03 March 1890. She married Henry Engel. He was born 22 September 1819 in Hesse Darmstadt, Germany, and died 27 April 1876 in Baltimore, Maryland.

Children of Catharina Spamer and Henry Engel are:

101 i. Christina[5] Engel, born about 1844 in Maryland.

102 ii. Mary Engel, born about 1846 in Maryland. She married John Peter Pittroff (Sr.) about 1879, son of Johann P. Pittroff and Dora. He was born 23 June 1837 in Germany, and died 3 September 1896 in Baltimore, Maryland.
103 iii. John Engel, born about 1853 in Maryland.
104 iv. George Engel, born about 1855 in Maryland.
105 v. Frederick Engel, born about 1866 in Maryland.

NOTES

39. Catharina (Spamer) Engel (Catharine Engel) (1823–1890)

A family Bible includes the following record (in English): [186]

> Born Catharine Spamer on the 2nd day of February 1823

The baptismal record of Catharina Spamer is transcribed in translation in the "Spamer Families of Baltimore": [187]

> Catharina Spamer was born 2 February 1823, about five o'clock in the evening, the third child and first daughter of Johann Conrad Spamer—citizen and Potter of Oberschmitten—and his wife Johannetta Magdalena (born Heinzeberger).
> Godparents were:
> 1) Catharina, daughter of Johann Conrad Freimann—citizen Senior churchmann [sic] and master cabinet maker of Oberschmitten, 2) Catharina, daughter of Johann Peter Spamer—Citizen and potter of Oberschmitten. As she had not been confirmed, Catharina could not take part in the baptism.

At the time of the 1870 U.S. census, a Kate Groter, aged 4, resided in the household of Henry and Catharine Engel, Baltimore, Maryland. The relationship of the child to them is uncertain.[188]

At the time of the 1880 U.S. census, Catharine Engel was a widow residing with her son, John. In the 1890 Baltimore city directory, she is listed as the widow of Henry, residing at 1057 N. Gay St.

[188] In the Smith Family genealogy (see Part II), Carroll Smith Fisher (born 1888, No. 229) married a Louise Groter. Whether this is a coincidental name is uncertain.

The death of Catherine Spamer Engel was noted in a letter from "Millie" to "Pap", transcribed in the "Spamer Families of Baltimore": [189]

March 6, 1890

Dear Pap,

We hoped that the Special Delivery which Arthur sent would reach you in time to enable you to get in by Wed. noon. Aunt Catherine passed into the other life on Monday; she had for a long time been feeble in mind and weak, but finally suffered with pneumonia.

Katie Engel took almost entire charge and care of her during her last year, and Aunt Catherine became very much attached to and depended upon her. Katie was the last name she called. We did not hear until Monday evening, and Ollie[190] went right down Tuesday. They all hoped that you might get in, being the eldest brother. We told them we had sent word immediately.

We sent a beautiful floral offering—an anchor with a card "From Brother Louie"[.][191] We knew you would feel and wish this. Gus, Arthur and Miriam[192] were present at the services.

Finding that you did not get in, Mr. Pittroff asked Miriam to take your place in the carriage, so she went in with Uncle and Aunt Henry. Gus also accompanied the remains. Uncle George was not there as he was away and they could not get word to him.

Miriam and Gus went back to the house and saw members of the family for a short while. It seems that Katie Engel has been very faithful in attendance on Aunt Catherine and feels the loss deeply. Miriam likes Katie so much.

Thus it is that one by one we connect ourselves with the other life, leaving behind us the influence of our earth life.

It is a comfort to know that Aunt Catherine is now relieved from all earthly care and sorrow, and that now she can go strengthening and developing the gentle kind nature that she possessed.

With love and sympathy,
Millie

Catherine Engel's newspaper obituary notice is as follows:[193]

ENGEL—Entered into rest, after a long illness, on March 3, at 9.15 A. M., CATHERINE ENGEL, aged 67 years, 1 month and 1 day, relict of the late Henry Engel.

The whereabouts of Ludwig Spamer that so delayed his presence is not explained; he lived in Baltimore city at the time. A copy of a transcription of this letter also accompanied correspondence from Frances D. Spamer to Katharine S. Spamer (21 Apr 1976), which Frances noted that she had "obtained from a granddaughter of Ludwig".

[190] Amelia's sister, Olivia Spamer [No. 82].

[191] The significance of the anchor-shaped floral arrangement is not known, although other members of the Spamer family had occupations dealing with boats and ships.

[193] [Obituary notice], The Sun (Baltimore), 4 Mar 1890. A transcription of this obituary, slightly modified, also accompanied correspondence from Frances D. Spamer to Katharine S. Spamer, 21 Apr 1976, which Frances noted that she had "obtained from a granddaughter of Ludwig [Spamer]" [Heinrich Conrad Ludwig Spamer, No. 37].

Tis hard to break the tender cord
When love has bound the heart;
Tis hard, so hard, to speak the words,
"We must forever part."
Dearest loved one, we must lay thee
In the peaceful grave's embrace
But thy memory will be cherished
Till we see thy heavenly face.

The funeral will take place Wednesday afternoon, at two o'clock, from the residence of her son-in-law, J. P. Pittroff[194], No. 1057 North Gay street.

Henry Engel (1819–1876)
(husband of Catharina Spamer)

His birth date is calculated from information given in his obituary. [195]

Occupations of Henry Engel (from U.S. censuses):
1850: Watchman
1860: Grocer
1870: "Lager bar saloon"

Residences of Henry Engel (from U.S. censuses and other source):
1850 census: 7th Ward, Baltimore city, Maryland
1860 census: 4th Ward, Baltimore city, Maryland
1870 census: 9th Ward, Baltimore city, Maryland
1876 obituary: 38(?) N. Gay St., Baltimore, Maryland

The U.S. census for 1840 in the 11th Ward of Baltimore might locate Henry Engel as a member of the "Daniel Engle" household, which includes a single male of the age range 15–19 that could be Henry. This was the only "Engel" or "Engle" household indexed in this Baltimore census.

Regarding the Engel family, nothing thus far has been determined. However, Conrad Spamer (Henry Engel's father-in-law) was the witness on a U.S. naturalized citizen application for one "William Engle", from Darmstadt, Germany, with whom on the same day Conrad Spamer became a naturalized citizen, 2 October 1843. The relationship of William Engle (or Engel) to the family is a probable one, though one not determined here.

Henry Engel's funeral was held on 30 April 1876, but his place of burial has not been determined.

102. Mary (Engel) Pittroff (ca. 1846–after 7 January 1920)

In the 1880 U.S. census Mary Engel Pittroff is listed with her husband, John Peter Pittroff, and children Marie Catherine Pittroff and John Ludwig Pittroff. The children are from an earlier marriage of John P. Pittroff; they are listed in the Pittroff Family collateral genealogy, below.

[195] [Obituary notice], The Sun (Baltimore), 28 Apr 1876; he was aged 56 years, 2 months, 5 days.

John Peter Pittroff (Sr.) (1837–1896)
(husband of Mary Engel)

John P. Pittroff immigrated to the U.S. in 1845, according to data in the 1900 U.S. census, and by the time of the 1900 census he was a naturalized citizen. He was a son of Johann and Catherine Pittroff, immigrants who arrived in the U.S. with two other sons, John and John H., and a daughter, Margaret (who later married a [surname] Walter).

103. John Engel (ca. 1853–)
104. George Engel (ca. 1855–)

In the following information, the 1880 U.S. census taker may have transposed the occupations of John and George Engel, who at the time resided together.

In the 1880 U.S. census, John Engel is noted to be employed as a bar keeper, residing at 165 West St., Baltimore, Maryland. The 1890 Baltimore city directory lists eight John Engels, with middle initials. One John D. Engel, cooper (bearing in mind George Engel's occupation in 1880), is listed at 1316 Patterson Ave. Also noted in the 1890 Baltimore city directory is a listing for Catherine Engel, widow of John Engel, at 32 W. West St.; how she relates to this John Engel is uncertain, but the address is the same as that for George Engel's 1880 census residence.

In the 1880 U.S. census, George Engel is noted to be employed as a cooper, residing at 165 West St., Baltimore, Maryland. The 1890 Baltimore city directory lists six George Engels and two George W. Engels. One George Engel, "saloon" (bearing in mind John Engel's occupation in 1880), is listed at 32 W. West St. In addition, there is a coppersmith business at 1611 Thames St. operated by "G Engel, L Kirchheiner, C Regnier".

Spamer Family genealogy continues after the following collateral genealogy

Pittroff Family
Collateral Genealogy
(5 descendants)

The genealogy of the Pittroff family, as it relates to our Spamer lineage and as currently understood, is as follows:

Generation No. 1

1. Johann P. Pittroff was born in Germany. He married Dora. She was born in Germany.

Child of Johann Pittroff and Dora is:

\+ 2 i. John Peter[2] Pittroff, born 23 June 1837 in Germany; died 03 September 1896 in Baltimore, Maryland.

Generation No. 2

2. John Peter Pittroff (Johann P.) was born 23 June 1837 in Germany, and died 03 September 1896 in Baltimore, Maryland. He married (1) undetermined wife. He married (2) Mary Engel, daughter of Henry Engel and Catharina Spamer. She was born about 1846 in Maryland.

Children of John Pittroff and undetermined wife are:

3 i. John Peter Pittroff, Jr.
4 ii. Marie Catherine Pittroff, born 22 September 1866 in Maryland. She married undetermined husband; died before June 1900.
5 iii. John Ludwig Pittroff, born 01 August 1871 in Maryland.

NOTES

In the 1870s, Baltimore city directories list a John Pittroff who was in the wine and liquor retail business—in 1870 at 36 N. Gay St., in 1872 (as Pittroff & Son) at 6 W. Pratt St., and in 1876 at the northeast corner of Ann and Thames Sts. Which J. Pittroff this is has not been determined, whether it was Johann using an Americanized name or if this was his son, John.

At the time of the 1880 and 1900 U.S. censuses, and in the 1890 Baltimore city directory, John P. Pittroff (1837–1896) [No. 2] was a tailor, residing at 1057 N. Gay St., Baltimore, Maryland.

At the time of the 1920 U.S. census, Mary Engel Pittroff (ca. 1846–), widow of John Peter Pittroff, boarded in the John Lauer household, 1900 E. Lafayette Ave., Baltimore, Maryland.

In the 1890 Baltimore city directory, John Peter Pittroff, Jr. [No. 3] is listed as residing with his father at 1057 N. Gay St.; he was an engraver.

At the time of the 1900 U.S. census, John Ludwig Pittroff (1871–) [No. 5] was a day laborer.

41. Peter Heinrich Christian[4] Spamer [Henry Spamer] (Johann Conrad[3], Johann Conrad[2], Johannes[1]) was born 10 December 1827 in Oberschmitten, Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, and died 05 March 1910 in Baltimore, Maryland. He married (1) Susannah Ross 20 January 1850 at the First German Reformed Church, Baltimore, Maryland, daughter of James Ross and Sarah. She was born 01 January 1832 in England, and died 08 July 1859 in Baltimore, Maryland. He married (2) Catharina Elisabeth Heinzerling 09 September 1860, daughter of Johannes Heinzerling and Anna Hofmann. She was born 30 May 1836 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen, and died 16 February 1905 in Baltimore, Maryland.

Children of Peter Spamer [Henry Spamer] and Susannah Ross are:

\+ 106 i. Sarah Elizabeth[5] Spamer, born 24 May 1852 in Maryland; died 17 November 1911.
\+ 107 ii. James Conrad Spamer, born 30 July 1855 in Maryland; died 3 March 1884 in Baltimore, Maryland.
\+ 108 iii. George Peabody Spamer [elder], born 12 May 1857 in Maryland; died 29 June 1943 in Maryland.
109 iv. Henry Spamer, born 01 February 1859; died 26 May 1859

Children of Peter Spamer [Henry Spamer] and Catharina Heinzerling are:

110 i. Cecelia[5] Spamer, born 18 November 1861 in Maryland; died 15 July 1881 in Baltimore, Maryland.
111 ii. Henry Spamer, born 11 January 1864 in Maryland; died 31 January 1864 in Baltimore, Maryland.
112 iii. Henry Christian Spamer, born 05 April 1865 in Maryland; died 11 June 1865 in Baltimore, Maryland.
113 iv. Edward Otis Hinkley Spamer, born March 1867 in Maryland; died 07 October 1946. He married Amelia H. Otto 09 October 1895; born 1869 in Maryland; died January 1954.
\+ 114 v. John Ward Spamer, born 05 September 1869 in Baltimore, Maryland; died 15 April 1960 at 65 Prospect St., Apt. 6K, Stamford, Fairfield Co., Connecticut.

115 vi. Anna E. Spamer, born 1872 in Maryland; died 01 November 1878 in Maryland.
\+ 116 vii. Susan Mae Spamer, born 18 June 1875 in Maryland; died 09 August 1949.

NOTES

41. Peter Heinrich Christian Spamer (Henry Spamer) (1827–1910)

The birth record of Peter Heinrich Christian Spamer is transcribed in translation in the "Spamer Families of Baltimore":

> Peter Heinrich Christian Spamer was born 10 December 1827 about five o'clock in the evening, the fifth child and third son of Conrad Spamer and his wife Johannetta Magdalena (born Heinzeberger).
> Godparents were:
> 1) Peter Döll, citizen and master carpenter of Oberschmitten,
> 2) Heinrich Dechert, son of master shoemaker Johannes Dechert of this place (Eichelsdorf ?).
> 3) Christian Spamer, son of Leonhard Spamer—potter of Oberschmitten—by his first wife.
> Because they were minors, the second and third godparents did not take part in the baptism.[196]

Peter Heinrich Christian Spamer immigrated into the U.S. with his parents in 1832. In America, he assumed the Americanized name, Henry Spamer. Baptism records from the First German New-Jerusalem Church, Baltimore, Maryland, list Henry Spamer's date of birth as 10 September 1827; he was baptized as an adult, in 1853.

His marriage to Susannah Ross was noted in the marriage announcements in the Baltimore Sun, where his name was spelled Henry "Spanner"; the marriage officiated by "Mr. Heiner" of Baltimore.[197] This was Rev. Elias Heiner, minister of the First German Reformed Church, a Lutheran denomination, on Second Street.[198]

A Henry "Sparmer" is listed as a witness to the U.S. naturalized citizenship record of one Jacob Hinkle of Bavaria, on 25 September 1849 in Baltimore, Maryland.

A disturbing report of cruelty and subsequent criminal charges appeared in a sequence of items in the Baltimore Sun between July and November 1853.[199] The reports that have been read from the newspaper seem to indicate that the parties charged are Henry and Susannah Spamer. Although the identification of the parties is a bit muddled between successive reports (specifically the wife's name), no other Henry Spamer is known to have resided in Maryland at this time. The first reports noted that "Henry Sparmer

In the 1790s the concregation moved yet again, to a location on the north side of Second St. (today Water St.), which later was removed to make way for Holliday Street; the last services held at this location were in 1866. It was at this location where Henry Spamer and Susannah Ross were married. (>>J. Thomas Scharf, History of Baltimore City and County: From the Earliest Period to the Present Day, Louis H. [sic] and his wife, Sarah Sparmer" were charged in court and held on bail for the brutal treatment of a young German girl apprenticed to Henry by the Trustees of the Poor. Three months later, The Sun reported, succinctly and with no elaboration, "In the cases of Henry Spalmer [sic], Susan Spalmer, [and two other people in another case], severally charged with assaults, pleas[?] were entered."[200] If a trial had been held or verdict handed down, no newspaper record of it has thus far been located even though at the time the activities of the courts were duly reported by the papers. This information is brought to attention here because of the coincidental names and the fact that no others by these names are known.

Henry Spamer, as had several others in the family, converted his faith to the Church of the New Jerusalem, in Baltimore. (The denomination is also known as the New Church; congregants are sometimes called Swedenborgians after Emanuel Swedenborg, whose 18th century writings inspired the first assemblies of the faithful several years after his death.[201]) Henry's conversion came after his marriage to Susannah Ross, since they were married at the First German Reformed Church. The New Church was represented in Baltimore by a small congregation, and it was into this church that Henry brought himself and his family. In that he was baptized into the New Church in 1853, we may presume that this was the time of his conversion. A later New Church edifice was informally called the "Calvert Street Church", built in 1874; and Henry Spamer was a member of its building committee. A notice of the laying of the church's corner stone appeared in The Sun:[202]

> Foundation Stone of a New Church.—Yesterday morning the impromptu ceremony of laying the foundation stone of a new church edifice was performed on North Calvert street, near Chase street. The building commenced is to be the place of worship of the "Society of the new Jerusalem," and will be denominated the Swedenborgian Church. In the midst of a group of workmen Mr. McCulloh, the master stone mason, delivered to a member of the building committee a truly square stone which was placed in the northeast corner of the lot, accompanied by the words—"In the name of the Infinite, All-wise and most Merciful Jehovah, to whose service we hereby lay this first foundation stone of the first church of the Baltimore Society of the New Jerusalem, God grant that her seed may be fruitful, and multiply and replenish the earth. Amen." The formal corner-stone laying of the edifice will take place early in September, and the building will be completed about January 1, 1875. Charles E. Carroll is the architect, and Messrs. Adolph Ahrona[?], Charles Reese, Richard Barnard, Henry Spamer, and Rev. W. G. Day are the building committee.

Sometime later, Henry Spamer left this church for yet another New Church congregation, but the circumstances surrounding this are not now known. Regarding this, a single anecdote comes from Frances D. Spamer in 1975:[203]

[200] The word is illegible due to the quality of the microfilm image; in context, "pleas" is inferred.

[201] New Church adherents follow the Bible as do other Christian faiths, but are further guided and instructed through the writings and biblical interpretations of Emanuel Swedenborg (1688-1772) of Sweden. Although Swedenborg published prolifically during his lifetime, the Swedenborgian tenets did not even become a matter of public assembly until 15 years after his death, when the New Church movement was founded in England. Swedenborg had written that he was given insight into the true, spiritual meaning of the Word, and through it revealed that the Trinity of Father, Son, and Holy Spirit are in fact one. From these revelations, Swedenborg interpreted that a new church, Jerusalem, had been proclaimed by the Lord, the message of which was delivered to mortals through the writings published by Swedenborg.

[202] The Sun (Baltimore), 28 Jul 1874. The Calvert Street church was at 1100 North Calvert St., Baltimore. This also was the church at which Rev. Thomas Allibone King was pastor (1881-1893), who is cited elsewhere in this genealogy (see the King Family collateral genealogy).

Albutt left the Calvert Street Church to take over the little mission in West Baltimore, apparently some of Henry's family followed him.[204] If the records he kept were now available, I'm certain some of the unanswered [genealogical] questions would be solved. However, I'm sure when the last of the Albutt sons passed away, all the books were destroyed . . . . Also see Additions & Corrections

[204] Rev. George L. Albutt was the pastor of the New Jerusalem Mission at 1515 N. Fulton Ave. At the time of the 1900 U.S. census, Albutt resided at 1335 N. Gilmore St., with his wife, Julia, and children, George C. (born Dec 1879) and Lawrence G. (born May 1881). Rev. Albutt and Julia were born in England, and their children were born in Scotland; they all immigrated into the U.S. in 1895, at a contentious time in the church. Just when Albutt was the pastor of the Baltimore New Church is unclear, but at the time of the 1912 Baltimore city directory he was still the pastor of the New Jerusalem Mission; he resided then at 3005 Pennsylvania Ave. (Regarding the contentious time, see more details in the genealogical sketch for Rev. John Edward Smith in Part II: Smith Family, and the sketch for Rev. John Faulkner Potts in the Potts Family collateral genealogy also in Part II. The church divided into two sects, the General Church and the General Convention; the Baltimore church was a part of the General Convention.)

Today, the Calvert Street church still stands but has been converted into four condominiums called Calvert Abbey ("Architectural Review Committee News", Mount Vernon Belvedere Clarion (newsletter), Vol. 20, no. 9 [Sep 2005], pp. 2-3). One of the four condominiums was offered for sale in 2007; the three-story, two-bedroom, two-and-a-half-bath residence was listed for $599,000.

[205] A. M. Spamer noted from the 1884 Baltimore city directory that "[one] Henry Spamer operated a saloon at 98 Baker Street. Do not know if this is same as PHC." ("Spamer Families of Baltimore", p. 17; "PHC" refers to Peter Heinrich Christian, Henry's birth name). The identity of this Henry Spamer remains unclear. If the Henry Spamer of family also opened a saloon, the business was short-lived. Note, however, that the obituary notice for James C. Spamer, in March 1884, provides an address for Henry that is otherwise unknown in family records, and which possibly could indicate yet another period of transition in this somewhat migratory family.

Henry Spamer was on the building committee, and many of the Spamers of Baltimore family attended services here. Today the church is a condominium building named Calvert Abbey, containing four units.

(Center) Calvert Street Church as it appeared in the early 1900s. (From a church program of the era.)

(Below) Over the doorway is the original ornamental inscription from the building's time as a church. It reads with an inspirational message from scriptures, "I Am The Door".

Site of the former "Northwest Mission" of the Baltimore Society of the Church of the New Jerusalem, 1515 N. Fulton Ave., also called the New Jerusalem Mission. The building itself was known as Harrison's Hall and later as Weber's Hall, and surely the church rented the property. The building lot is somewhat wider than others in this block.

Rev. George Laurence Allbutt was pastor of the Northwest Mission from its founding in 1900 until at least the early 1920s. Some of the Spamers of Baltimore, including Henry Spamer and has family, attended services here. Just when it ceased as a church is as yet not known.

In the late 1990s the building was a gym for fighters. When the site was visited in 2009, the ground floor was an insurance agency; upstairs was the newly opened "Rise N Shine Day Care Center".

At the time of the 1850 U.S. census, Henry Spamer and his (first) wife, Susannah, resided in a household with Herman and Margaret Schulenburg. Also in that household is a boy, Henry Van Hollen, aged 7, whose relationship to them is unknown.

In the 1860 U.S. census, Henry Spamer's name is written "Sparmer". Also in the 1860 census, a Sarah Ross (aged 19, born in England, working as Clerk) resided in the Henry Spamer household. She may have been a relation of Henry's recently deceased wife, Susannah, perhaps a sister, working in Henry's shoe store. Also residing with them are two women both by the name of Elizabeth Insling (ages 49 and 24, born in Darmstadt); the younger woman's occupation is "Servant". How the Inslings relate (if at all) to the Spamers is not known.

In the 1870 U.S. census, Henry Spamer's name is miswritten "Spammer".

During the 1870s at least, Henry Spamer was a co-owner in a tugboat with his brothers, Christian (No. 38) and George (No. 44, see under Johann Conrad Spamer, No. 7). More about this may be found with the historical information for George.

In 1886, Henry Spamer was involved in the welfare of a grandchild, whose name is not given in the newspaper account that follows:[207]

> Habeus Corpus.—Mr. Benjamin Kurtz, as counsel for Henry Spamer, obtained an order for the writ of habeas corpus for Franz Grill to bring before Judge Phelps today the two-year-old grandchild of petitioner. The parents are dead, and it is claimed the grandparents are the most suitable persons to have the child. It was put in charge of Grill by its stepfather. Also see Additions & Corrections

The child surely was George Peabody Spamer (younger), whose parentage is discussed in the entry about him; see George Peabody Spamer [No. 190, see under James Conrad Spamer, No. 107].

Despite being in a lasting shoe business, Henry Spamer was never a wealthy man. He was involved as a co-owner of the bad-luck tugboat Ella (as noticed in the discussions with George Spamer [No. 44, under Johann Conrad Spamer, No. 7]), which held financial set-backs for him. He unwittingly fell into hard times in his shoe business, too, as noticed by two reports that have thus far been located in the Baltimore Sun. The reports may be related to one episode of financial difficulty. First, in October 1896, the following brief note is mentioned under "Business Troubles": [208]

[206] This obituary notice is the only reference to this address thus far found.

[207] "Habeus Corpus", The Sun (Baltimore), 12 Mar 1886.

[208] "Business Troubles. Receivers for the Maryland Business of the Werner Co.–A Shoe Dealer Fails." The Sun (Baltimore), 30 Oct 1886.

> Henry Spamer, a shoe dealer, corner Harlem avenue and Calhoun street, made an assignment for the benefit of creditors yesterday to Charles E. Hill and Abraham Sharp, trustees. The bond was for $5,000.

Apparently this pertained to Henry's receipt of promisory notes that were discovered to be backed only by fraudulent claims. A few months later, in January 1897, The Sun reported on the five-year prison term handed down to a forger, George Demuth, who had feloniously endorsed promissory notes under the name of Herman T. Gernhardt of 1322 Harlem Ave., Baltimore.[209] Demuth had claimed that the promisory notes were for pianos sold by him on an installment plan, but the sales were fictitious. The total amount of the forged notes was nearly $14,000, of which the newspaper noted, > Henry Spamer, 1201 West North avenue, it is understood, held $10,000 of the forged notes, which he had discounted.

George O. Demuth was a German immigrant related to the Spamer family by marriage; but his precise genealogical connection is not clear at this time.[210] He was in some fashion an in-law to Henry Spamer's son, George. At the time of the 1900 U.S. census, when George Demuth was in prison, his wife, Elizabeth, was listed as a "widow" residing in Baltimore with her nephew, George Peabody Spamer [No. 108], Henry's son, at 623 N. Washington St. Just how she was related as an "aunt" to George (or perhaps the aunt of George's wife, Lillie May Dunn Spamer) is not clear. George Spamer and Lillie Dunn had married about 1894, which is about the time when Henry Spamer seems to have been first taken by the confidence man George Demuth; and perhaps coincidentally, this was also the time when another one of Henry's sons, John Ward Spamer [No. 114], enrolled in the University of Maryland Law School for the school year 1894–1895 and thereafter discontinued that education. Precisely when the fraud was realized and the financial crisis fell upon Henry Spamer is not clear, although it was during 1894–1896.

Also see Additions & Corrections

Regarding George O. Demuth, the following information has been derived from public records:

- The 1900 U.S. census indicates that George O. Demuth was born June 1831 in France [he actually was born in Germany], immigrated into the U.S. in 1856, and had married about 1867. At the time of this census he was imprisoned in the Maryland Penitentiary in Baltimore, and his (civilian) occupation is given as a merchant.
- He has not been located with certainty in the 1860 census. However, there is a household in the 15th Ward of Baltimore in which is "George Demmer", aged 31, born in Germany, occupied as a piano maker. Wiith him are Mary, 34, born in Germany; Anna, 8, born in Germany; and Mary, 6, and John, 4, both born in Maryland.
- In the 1870 census for the 19th Ward, Baltimore, George Demuth gave his birthplace as "Oldenburg" [in Germany], occupied as professor of music. He is listed with his wife, Elizabeth, aged 38, born in Maryland, and another male, H.E. Demuth [probably a brother], 40, born in Oldenburg, who worked as a general agent. Also in the household at this time were John Willilams, 30, a minister; Lewis Chapman, 75; and Daniel Waters, 17, a house servant.
- In the 1880 census he is listed residing at 41 Stricker St., Baltimore, with his wife, Elizabeth. He gave his birthplace as "Hesse Cassel" [Hesse Kassel, Germany]; occupation professor of music. Also residing in the household was Nowall Findlay, 19, a clerk.

[209] "Five Years For Demuth. The Piano Dealer Pleaded Guilty of Forgery and Was Sent to the Penitentiary." The Sun (Baltimore), 21 Jan 1897.

[210] This connection was discovered in March 2008, during research on this family genealogy. The incident had heretofore been unknown in the family, at least in the modern generations.

- In the 1890 Baltimore city directory, he is listed as residing at 1402 Harlem Ave.; occupation music teacher.
- Imprisoned at the time of the 1900 census.
- Neither George nor Elizabeth Demuth have been located in later censuses.

There is a George Demuth who is listed as a Union Army soldier during the Civil War, serving as a Private in the 6th and 13th Maryland Infantry between 21 February 1865–29 May 1865. Whether this was George O. Demuth is not certain.

It is possible that other Demuth relations—perhaps the H. E. Demuth cited in the 1870 census—may likewise have married into the Dunn family. There is a record for a George Edwin Demuth, born 18 September 1872, who registered for the military draft in 1918. He gave the name and address of his nearest relative as Mary Dunn Demuth, 3031 Brighton St., Baltimore. G. E. Demuth was at that time an assistant agent for a railway express company, similar to the "general agent" occupation of H. E. Demuth in the 1870 census. In the 1890 Baltimore city directory, George E. Demuth was listed as a clerk residing at 946 W. Franklin St. In the 1920 census for Baltimore, George E. Demuth is listed as a superintendant in an express company, residing at 3031 Brighton St.; his wife was Mary McFrank Demuth; residing with them was a sister-in-law, Susie McFrank. In the 1930 census for Baltimore, George E. Demuth is listed as a widower working as a transportation route agent, residing with his brother-in-law and his wife, Charles and Margaret German, at 3410 Gwynn Falls Parkway. Also see Additions & Corrections

For a few remarks concerning the Dunn family, see under George Peabody Spamer [No. 108].

Henry Spamer was buried 4 March 1910 in Lot 360 S½, Section Q, Loudon Park Cemetery, Baltimore, Maryland. Cemetery records list his name as Henry C. Spamer. Also see Additions & Corrections

Susannah (Ross) Spamer (1832–1859)
(wife of Henry Spamer)

She may also have been known as Susan. She was baptized as an adult in 1853 in the First German New-Jerusalem Church, Baltimore, Maryland.

Of her family nothing is known other than her parents' names (James and Sarah Ross). Circumstantial evidence from U.S. census data may indicate that she had a sister, Sarah, born about 1841 in England. Immigration records have not been identified for any of these Rosses.

There is another marriage date noted for Henry Spamer and Susannah Ross, 15 January 1850.

Susannah Ross Spamer was originally buried on 10 July 1859 in Lot 458/472, Area C, Baltimore Cemetery; her remains were removed on 29 August 1883 to Loudon Park Cemetery (Lot 360 S½, Section Q). Baltimore Cemetery records list her name as "Susanna Spammer".

Susannah Ross might have had a relation also living in Baltimore, William Ross. In 1879, William Ross of Baltimore was granted U.S. Patent no. 215,979 for an "Improvement in crochet-needles"; he assigned "one-half of his right to George P. Spamer", who of course is a son of Henry and Susannah Spamer (see under George Peabody Spamer [elder], No. 108).

It is possible, too, that the Ross family may have married into the Otto family. As noted below, Edward O. H. Spamer, son of Henry and Catharina Spamer, married Amelia Otto. (For additional remarks, see the Otto Family collateral genealogy, farther below, and "Additional Notes About Ross and Otto" immediately afterward.)

Catharina (Heinzerling) Spamer (Catherine Spamer) (1836–1905)
(wife of Henry Spamer)
"Lizzie"

Catharina Heinzerling was christened on 5 June 1836 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen. She has also been referred to as Katharine Elizabeth, and her name appears in American records consistently as Catherine, including the 1870, 1880, and 1900 U.S. censuses. Her newspaper obituary notice refers to her as "Catherine Elizabeth". On the other hand, her granddaughter, Katharine S. Spamer, recalled her name as "Elizabeth Katherine"[211] and her grave marker gives her name as Elizabeth C. Spamer, with dates 1837-1905.

She was known as "Aunt Lizzie" by family members. She immigrated to the U.S. with her family, arriving 8 September 1845; but the 1900 U.S. census lists her immigration in 1844.

Catherine Heinzerling Spamer was buried 17 February 1905 in Lot 360 S½, Section Q, Loudon Park Cemetery, Baltimore, Maryland. Her obituary notice indicated that her funeral would be conducted "at the residence of her daughter, corner of Maple and Elm avenues, Dixon Park, Mount Washington"[212]; however, just whose address that refers to has not been determined.

Also see the Heinzerling Family collateral genealogy, below.

109. Henry Spamer (junior I) (1859–1859)

His obituary notice appeared in the Baltimore Sun:[213]

> On the 25th instant, HENRY, the second [sic] son of Henry and Susannah Spamer, aged 5 months and 25 days.

He was buried on 26 May 1859 in Lot 458/472, Area C, Baltimore Cemetery, Baltimore, Maryland. Cemetery records list his name as "Henry Spammer".

110. Cecelia Spamer (1861–1881)

Her obituary in the Baltimore Sun lists her name as Cecilia, but other family references spell her name Cecelia. Her name is also spelled Cecelia in the "Spamer Families of Baltimore".[214] The obituary reads:[215]

[211] Katharine S. Spamer to Marie Stein Strange [1975?].

Cecelia Spamer (1861–1881) [No. 110]

Studio portrait by Richard Walzl, Baltimore ("R. Walzl's New Photographic Art Establishment, Marble Building, 103 West Baltimore Street, Baltimore"); date unknown.

> SPAMER—Removed to her heavenly home, on the morning of the 15th instant, CECILIA, aged 19 years 7 months and 27 days, daughter of Henry and Elizabeth C. Spamer.
> Funeral will take place from the residence of her parents, No. 130 Carrollton avenue, on Sunday, 17th instant, at four o'clock P. M.

Records of the Loudon Park Cemetery, Baltimore, Maryland, indicate that "Cecilia" Spamer was removed from Baltimore Cemetery on 22 July 1881 and reinterred at Loudon Park (Lot 360 S½, Section Q); however, the data received by Frances D. Spamer from Baltimore Cemetery do not list Cecelia. The dates on her grave marker in Loudon Park are 1862-1881.

Note that this is not Cecelia E. Spamer (1880-1927) [No. 189], probably the daughter of James Conrad Spamer (about whom there is a discussion under James Conrad Spamer [No. 107]).

111. Henry Spamer (junior II) (1864–1864)

He was buried on 31 January 1864 in Lot 458/472, Area C, Baltimore Cemetery, Baltimore, Maryland. Cemetery records list his name as "Henry Spammer".

112. Henry Christian Spamer (1865–1865)

He was buried on 13 June 1865 in Lot 458/472, Area C, Baltimore Cemetery, Baltimore, Maryland. His grave marker lists his date of death as 13 June 1865, aged 6 days. Cemetery records list his name as "Henry C. Spammer".

113. Edward Otis Hinkley Spamer (1867–1946)
"Eddie"

He was named for Edward Otis Hinkley (1824-1896), founder of the Edward Hinkley law firm in Baltimore, with whom C. A. E. Spamer was employed and eventually became a partner.[216] Hinkley also was a devoted member of the Church of the New Jerusalem, in which many of the Spamers also were members.

Edward O. H. Spamer and Amelia H. Otto were married at Christ English Lutheran Church, on Hill St. near Charles St., Baltimore. The marriage was officiated by Rev. L. M. Zimmerman. Edward and Amelia Spamer had no children.

[215] Obituary notice, The Sun (Baltimore), 16 Jul 1881.

[216] The Maryland Historical Society, Baltimore, holds the Edward Otis Hinkley Papers (Ms. collection 187), ca. 1790-1894. The collection contains papers relating to his activities as a lawyer, as well as personal family papers, including a considerable amount on the Swedenborgian church.

In 1975, C. A. Weber recalled several things about E. O. H. Spamer in a letter to Frances D. Spamer: [217]

> My oldest brother and sister used to tell me how Uncle Ed. came calling on Aunt Amelia in an open barouche and wearing a high silk hat. * * *
> Later, after winding up the business they had in the city, Uncle Ed. and Aunt Amelia bought and operated the farm property on Liberty Road[218], less than 1/4 mile down the hill from Ward's Chapel Methodist Church. It was there on the farm, that my brother Henry, our two younger cousins and I, spent many happy moments during the Summer vacation from school.
> Still later, uncle Ed. and Aunt Amelia moved to the city on the West side of Barclay St. just south of 25th St. Aunt Amelia by then was a semi-invalid and Uncle Ed. wished to be near his nephew George Spamer ("Little George")[219] and his wife, who was Emma Eck. They lived next door to each other and across the street at the corner of 25th & Barclay Sts. was their family doctor, Dr. Murgatroyd. We attended the 50th Wedding Anniversary of Uncle Ed. and Aunt Amelia there around the middle of October 1945. I remember Aunt Amelia brought out her wedding dress and very pointed white wedding slippers, among other things. I believe Uncle Ed. had preserved his high silk hat from the occasion. Our niece, Lillie, Jr., who was attending Maryland Institute at the time, took her trusty pencil and paper along to sketch the wedding things. They also had a hen egg which had been dyed the old fashioned way, with onion skins, with the year "1895" etched on the side. As I write this, am wondering whether we made some recordings of the event; or if they are still around, whether they are intact and playable. Should they still be in existence and contain any salient facts, I shall be only too glad to pass same along to you.[220]

[217] C. A. Weber to Frances D. Spamer (10 Mar 1975). Frances D. Spamer was a 1st cousin twice removed to Edward O. H. Spamer. The precise genealogical connection of C. A. Weber to the Spamer family is not determined; the "Spamer Families of Baltimore" (p. 19) states only, "Mr C. A. Weber's mother and the wife of Edw. O.H. Spamer, Amelia, were sisters." Refer to the Otto Family collateral genealogy under Edward Otis Hinkley Spamer [No. 113, under Henry Spamer, No. 41], who married Amelia Otto.

In 1909, the society page of The Philadelphia Inquirer took note of the Baltimore, Maryland, visit of Mr. and Mrs. John Ward Spamer [No. 114] and their daughter, Katherine. They were "the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Spamer at their country home, Ashwal, near this city."[222]

The 1915 Atlas of Baltimore County, Maryland depicts land-ownership plats in detail.[223] Inasmuch as the E. O. H. Spamer farm was close to Ward's Chapel (see above), and that his presence in this area is confirmed by censuses and a 1915 county farmer's directory, his name does not show up in the land atlas. This may mean that, at least by 1915, he rented the farm property.

In the 1920 U.S. census, Edward O. H. Spamer is mis-indexed as "Edward H. Spanier" (but is correct on the census sheet).

Edward O. H. Spamer was buried 7 October 1946 in Lot 55, Section Iris, Loudon Park Cemetery, Baltimore, Maryland.

Around January 1976, Marie Stein Strange wrote to Katharine S. Spamer, in which letter she included a note about E. O. H. Spamer:

> It seems, according to what Cousin Sue[224] told me that, a nephew of Cousin Millie's, a lawyer, had charged [sic] of Cousin Ed's and her estate and he sold everything. Cousin Sue got in touch with him, because she wanted a portrait of her mother which they had. Things seem to have been done in a high handed way.[225]

The citation of his name, with first initial and middle name spelled out, is a usage style that has not heretofore been seen. It is also an oxymoron to see our Spamers in the same short article with vacationing society, who were dispersed for the summer to England and the Adirondacks and to "cottages" of Narragansett and Cape May. In the 1910 U.S. census her occupation is listed as farm laborer. She is also listed as "farming" in the 1915 Baltimore County Farmer's Directory. She was buried 30 January 1954 in Lot 55, Section Iris, Loudon Park Cemetery, Baltimore, Maryland.

In Baltimore Cemetery records her name is listed as Ann E. A. Spamer; in Loudon Park Cemetery records her name is listed as Anna Spamer. The Maryland State Archives Death Record index, 1875-1880, lists her name as Ann Spamer, with date of death 30 October 1878. The dates on her grave marker at Loudon Park are 1872-1879.

Spamer Family genealogy continues after the following collateral genealogy

Heinzerling Family
Collateral Genealogy
(31 descendants)

The genealogy of the Heinzerling family, as it relates to our Spamer lineage and as currently understood, is as follows:

Descendants of Johannes Heinzerling

Generation No. 1

1. Johannes[1] Heinzerling was born about 1744, from Wichte, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen. He married undetermined wife. She was born about 1748, from Wichte, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen.

Child of Johannes Heinzerling and undetermined wife is:
\+ 2 i. Arnold[2] Heinzerling, born 1770 in Wichte, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen; died 14 February 1827 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen.

Generation No. 2

2. Arnold[2] Heinzerling (Johannes[1]) was born 1770 in Wichte, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen, and died 14 February 1827 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen. He married Catharina Elisabeth Stueckrath, daughter of Johann Stueckrath and Elisabeth Heusner. She was born 03 December 1780 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen, and died 27 November 1854 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen.

Children of Arnold Heinzerling and Catharina Stueckrath are:
\+ 3 i. Johannes[3] Heinzerling, born 22 December 1800 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen; died in Maryland.
4 ii. Catharina Elisabeth Heinzerling, born 10 November 1803 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen; died 20 February 1835 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen. She married Johann Georg Clobes 24 October 1830 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen; born 07 November 1793 in Homberg, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen; died 14 November 1840 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen.

\+ 5 iii. Johann Adam Heinzerling, born 12 July 1806 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen; died 07 May 1882 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen.

6 iv. Maria Elisabeth Heinzerling, born 29 July 1811 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen. She married Johann Georg Clobes 19 July 1835 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen; born 07 November 1793 in Homberg, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen; died 14 November 1840 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen.

NOTES

Arnold Heinzerling (1770–1827) [No. 2] was buried 18 February 1827 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen.

Catharina (Stueckrath) Heinzerling (1780–1854), wife of Arnold Heinzerling, was christened 5 December 1780 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen. She was buried 30 November 1854 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen.

Catharina (Heinzerling) Clobes (1803–1835) [No. 4] was buried 22 February 1835 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen.

Maria (Heinzerling) Clobes (1811–) [No. 6] was christened 4 August 1811 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen.

Johann Georg Clobes was buried 17 November 1840 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen. Note that he married sisters; first Catharina Heinzerling [No. 4] then Maria Heinzerling [No. 6].

Generation No. 3

3. Johannes[3] Heinzerling (Arnold[2], Johannes[1]) was born 22 December 1800 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen, and died in Maryland. He married Anna Elisabeth Hofmann 14 August 1831 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen, daughter of Johannes Hofmann and Martha Prediger. She was born 1805 in Oberellenbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen, and died after June 1870.

Children of Johannes Heinzerling and Anna Hofmann are:

\+ 7 i. Peter W.[4] Heinzerling, born 27 September 1832 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen.

8 ii. Heinrich Heinzerling, born 03 February 1835 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen; died 06 March 1835 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen.

NOTES

3. Johannes Heinzerling (John Heinzerling) (1800–)

He was christened 26 December 1800 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen. He emigrated from Germany to the U.S. with his wife and children. They arrived in Baltimore, Maryland, on 8 September 1845 aboard the ship Elise, having embarked from Bremen, Germany.[226] On the ship's passenger manifest John Heinzerling is listed as a farmer; the family arrived with three boxes as luggage. The manifest indicated that the family's destination was Cincinnati, Ohio. Whether they in fact went there is not known.

The 1864 Baltimore city directory lists a John Heinzerling, baker, at 830 West Baltimore St. It is not certain whether this is the same John Heinzerling as the subject here. He has not been located in the 1850 U.S. census.

At the time of the 1870 U.S. census, John Heinzerling resided in the Soldiers' home, Baltimore, Maryland.

Anna (Hofmann) Heinzerling (1805–after June 1870)
(wife of Johannes Heinzerling)

At the time of the 1870 U.S. census, Anna Heinzerling (listed as "Anna Hintzling") resided with the family of her daughter and son-in-law, Henry and Catharine Spamer. Her age in that census is given as 61.

A possible date of death for Anna Heinzerling is 22 November 1875. In the Maryland State Archives death records for 1875-1880 an Anna Heinzerling is listed with that death date.

Children of Johannes and Anna Heinzerling

Heinrich Heinzerling (1835–1835) [No. 8] was christened 8 February 1835 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen. He was buried 8 March 1835 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen.

Adam Heinrich Heinzerling (1840–1842) [No. 11] was christened 4 December 1840 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen. He was buried 27 March 1842 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen.

Maria Catharina Heinzerling (1843–) [No. 12] was christened 17 April 1843 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen.

Frederik Heinzerling (1845–) [No. 13] is listed in the passenger manifest for the ship Elise, arrived in Baltimore, Maryland, 8 September 1845, as 1 month old, "born on voyage".

6. Johann Adam[3] Heinzerling (Arnold[2], Johannes[1]) was born 12 July 1806 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen, and died 07 May 1882 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen. He married (1) Catharina Elisabeth Pfetzing 20 November 1831 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen, daughter of Hartmann Pfetzing and Barbara Arnhard. She was born 16 September 1810 in Sterkelshausen, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen, and died 27 October 1841 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen. He married (2) Anna Katharina Heusner about 1842 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen, daughter of Johann Heusner and Anna Goebel. She was born 17 January 1819 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen, and died 20 March 1879 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen.

Child of Johann Heinzerling and Catharina Pfetzing is:
\+ 14 i. Johann Henrich[4] Heinzerling, born 21 October 1841 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen.

NOTES

Johann Adam Heinzerling (1806–1882) [No. 6] was christened 20 July 1806 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen. He was buried 10 May 1882 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen.

Catharina (Pfetzing) Heinzerling (1810–1841), wife of John Adam Heinzerling, was buried 29 October 1841 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen.

Anna (Heusner) Heinzerling (1819–1879), wife of John Adam Heinzerling, was christened 24 January 1918 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen. She was buried 23 March 1879 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen.

Generation No. 4

7. Peter W.[4] Heinzerling (Johannes[3], Arnold[2], Johannes[1]) was born 27 September 1832 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen; died after 1910. He married Catharine before 1860. She was born about 1835 in Hessen-Nassau, Preussen.

Child of Peter Heinzerling and Catharine is:
15 i. Margaret[5] Heinzerling, born about 1862 in Maryland.

NOTES

Peter W. Heinzerling (1832–after 1910) [No. 7] was christened 30 September 1832 in Baumbach, Hessen-Nassau, Preussen.

At the time of the 1860 and 1870 U.S. censuses, and in the 1890 Baltimore city directory, Peter Heinzerling is listed as a shoemaker.

Residences of Peter W. Heinzerling (from U.S. censuses and Baltimore city directories):

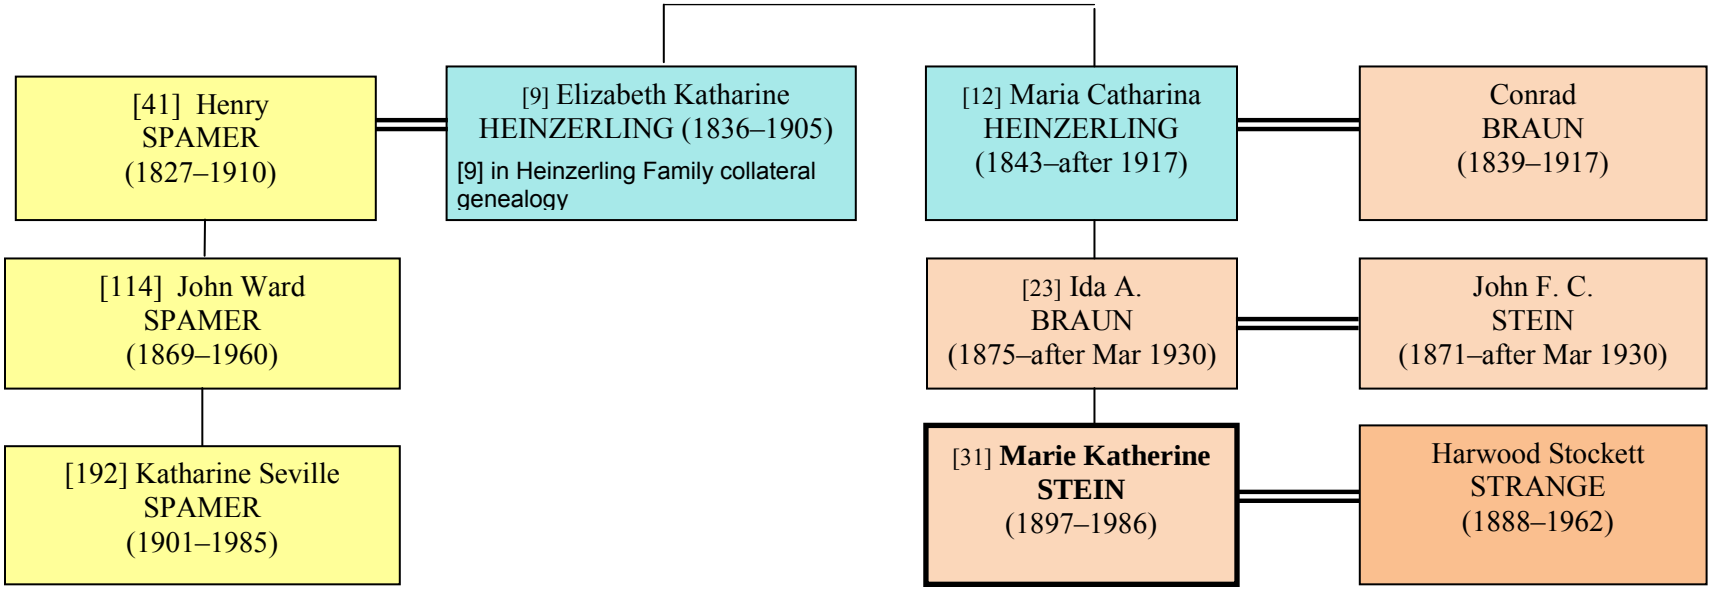
Generation No. 5

23. Stein?[5] [see Notes] ([Catharina Elisabeth Marie or Maria Catharina[4] Heinzerling], Johannes[3], Arnold[2], Johannes[1]) married unknown.

Child of Stein? and unknown is:
31 i. Marie[6], died after 1976. She married Harwood Stockett Strange after June 1917; born 11 July 1888 in Annapolis, Anne Arundel, Maryland; died before 1976.



Relationship of Marie Stein Strange in the Spamer Family

Previously the relationship of Marie Stein Strange was unresolved, the only fact known was that her grandmother and the grandmother of Katharine S. Spamer were sisters; but it had not been clear as to which of two other sisters were Marie Stein Strange's grandmother, nor had it been clear whether Stein was Marie's maiden name or a given middle name. The relationship has been resolved as shown above.

NOTES

Marie Stein Strange (–after 1976)

There is no certainty that Stein is the maiden name of Marie Stein Strange. This is not resolved.

The "Spamers of Baltimore" takes note that "The grandmother of Marie Steen [sic] Strange (widow of Harwood Strange) and Katharine S. Spamer's grandmother were sisters."[227] Also noted in correspondence from Katharine S. Spamer to Marie Stein Strange is Katharine's inquiry, "Do you have any information on my grandmother's children (Elizabeth Katharine—your grandmother's sister)?"[228] In addition, Earle Spamer recalls Katharine Spamer relating that Marie was related through their grandparents.

Marie Stein Strange and Katharine Spamer met a number of times during the later part of their lives, and they corresponded with each other. Marie's letterhead corroborates her name as "Marie Stein Strange". Based on Marie Stein Strange's apparent age in the photographs, she seems to be about the same age as Katharine Spamer; thus we may presume she was born ca. 1900.

How Marie Stein Strange fits into the genealogy remains a perplexing problem. There is a one-generation gap in the maternal lineage, which remains open. There are two sisters to the grandmother of Katharine Spamer, one of whom must be the grandmother to Marie Stein Strange. If the woman had married a Stein, then a son of that marriage is the father of Marie; otherwise, a daughter of that marriage married a Stein, and they are the parents of Marie. This of course assumes that Stein is Marie's maiden name; if it is not, then nothing is known of her parents other than one of them is a child of one of the two women whose sibling was Katharine S. Spamer's grandmother.

In the 1930 U.S. census, a Marie K. Stein, aged 34, single, is listed as a student nurse at Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore, Maryland, residing in student nurse housing in the 600 block of Broadway; her father is indicated to have been born in Germany, her mother in Maryland. Whether this is Marie Stein Strange the subject here, is not known; her occupation, if any, is not now known.

Around 1976, Marie Stein Strange resided at 3939 Roland Ave., Apt. 910, Baltimore, Maryland.

The Social Security Death Index lists one possibility of the identity of the woman in question here: Marie Strange, born 18 February 1898, died January 1986, last residence in Hanover, York Co., Pennsylvania, with Social Security Number issued in Maryland 1951-1952.

An examination of the 1900 U.S. census provides five possibilities for the identity of "Marie Stein", if indeed Stein is her maiden name. They are listed here so as to allow future workers some information that may help resolve the question. By including the cited birthplace information for the parents and grandparents of each Marie Stein, we may verify which among them might be candidates for the supposed "Stein" descendancy from one or the other of two women who are supposed to be the grandmother of Marie Stein Strange. Possible candidates from the 1900 census, which do not necessarily include the Marie Strange listed in the Social Security Death Index, are as follows:

		Birth
	Birth date	Self	Father	Mother	Immigration	Occupation
Household 1 (1539 Orleans St., household of Emma Boehl; family below are lodgers)

*Note that the Marie Strange cited in the Social Security Death Index was indicated as born Feb 1898.

Additional Notes about Heinzerling

The Heinzerling surname appears with regularity in Baltimore and regions to which German immigrants resituated. Like the Spamer family, most are probably related ancestrally in Germany. Bakers, brewers, and confectioners were included among them, and one Baltimore firm manufactured bottles. Heinzerling & Co. bottles are featured on collectible bottle websites.[229] They also feature bottles manufactured by the City Steam Bottling House, in which also is molded, "John Heinzerling Prop[rietor]" and others note "Jno. Heinzerling" or "John Heinzerling". Whether or not these firms were owned by direct relations to the family's Heinzerlings is not known at this time.

Strange Family
Collateral Genealogy
(17 descendants)

The genealogy of the Strange family, as it seemingly relates to our Spamer lineage and as currently understood, is as follows.

As with Marie Stein Strange, wife of Harwood Stockett Strange, the Strange family information is genealogically ambiguous, too.

Descendants of Caroline Strange

Generation No. 1

1. Strange[1] He married Caroline. She was born about 1817 in North Carolina.

Children of Strange and Caroline are:

	2	i.	Maggie[2] Strange, born about 1844 in North Carolina.
+	3	ii.	Robert E. Strange, born March 1847 in North Carolina.
	4	iii.	Edward Strange, born about 1851 in North Carolina.
	5	iv.	John Strange, born about 1854 in North Carolinia.
	6	v.	Mary Strange, born about 1855 in North Carolina.

NOTES

At the time of the 1870 U.S. census, Caroline Strange and her children resided in Annapolis, Anne Arundel Co., Maryland. At this time, Robert E. Strange (1847–) [No. 3] was occupied as a painter, and John Strange (ca. 1854–) [No. 5] was a laborer.

Of note in the 1870 census is the presence of several individuals in two nearby households with the surname Sewell. Robert E. Strange would soon marry Caroline M. Sewell, but whose name does not show up on this or adjacent census sheets.

Generation No. 2

3. Robert E. Strange[2] was born March 1847 in North Carolina. He married (1) Caroline M. Sewell. She was born about 1850 in Maryland. He married (2) Amanda. She was born about 1866.

Children of Robert Strange and Caroline Sewell are:

	7	i.	James F.[3] Strange, born about 1873 in Maryland.
	8	ii.	John R. Strange, born October 1873 in Maryland.,
	9	iii.	Thomas E. Strange, born about 1876 in Maryland.
	10	ii.	Elizabeth E. Strange, born about 1878 in Maryland.
	11	iii.	Edith H. Strange, born July 1880 in Maryland.
	12	iv.	Robert Tunis Strange, born November 1882 in Maryland.
	13	v.	Harwood Stockett Strange, born 11 July 1888 in Annapolis, Anne Arundel Co., Maryland; died before 1976. He married Marie [Stein ?] after June 1917; died after 1976.
+	14	vi.	Louis Earl Strange, born 26 March 1892 in Annapolis, Anne Arundel Co., in Maryland.
	15	vii.	Margaret Strange, born December 1893 in Maryland.

Child of Robert Strange and Amanda is:

	16	i.	Kenton W.[3] Strange, born June 1897 in Maryland.

NOTES

3. Robert E. Strange (ca. 1847–)

Occupation of Robert E. Strange (from U.S. censuses):
1870, 1880: Painter
1900: "Painter &c"

Residences of Robert E. Strange (from U.S. censuses):
1870: Annapolis, Anne Arundel Co., Maryland (with mother)
1880: 35 Prince George St., Annapolis, Anne Arundel Co., Maryland
1900: 45 Prince George St., Annapolis, Anne Arundel Co., Maryland

At the time of the 1880 census, also residing in the Strange household were Caroline Strange's mother and her brothers:
Elizabeth Sewell, aged 50, born in Maryland (her father and mother born in England and Germany, respectively)
John T. Sewell, 24, born in Maryland, clerk in dry goods store
Horace Sewell, 20, born in Maryland, "apprenticed by U.S.S."
George Sewell, 17, born in Maryland, sailor

Amanda Strange (ca. 1866–)
(wife of Robert E. Strange)

Amanda Strange's parents were born in Germany.

Amanda had been married earlier, to Joseph Stein (born about 1865), son of Martin Stein (born about 1820) and Catharine (born about 1837).

At the time of the 1920 U.S. census, Amanda Strange is a widow, residing as head of household with several stepchildren with the surname Strange, a son, Kenton Strange, and a grandson, Robert F. Strange, aged 21 (but the parent of Robert is not identified). In the 1930 census, the children living with her are identified only as "son" or "daughter"; Robert, Elizabeth, Edith, Harwood (listed as "Howard") and Kenton all were single.

Given the ambiguity in the census records, some of the children may be the children of Amanda's marriage to Joseph Stein.

Residences of Amanda Strange (from U.S. censuses):
1910–1930: 114 Market St., Annapolis, Anne Arundel Co., Maryland

At the time of various U.S. censuses for Annapolis, Maryland, there are other Strange and Stein households in the same neighborhoods:
1880: John and Amanda Strange, Prince George St.; Caroline E. Strange (widow), Prince George St.
1880: Martin and Catharine Stein, King George St.
1900: Joseph and Amanda Stein, 37 Market St.
1930: Maurice and Mary Stein, 6 State Circle.

7. James F. Strange (ca. 1873–)

At the time of the 1920 census he was a proprietor of a decorator's business.

8. John R.. Strange (1873–)

At the time of the 1900 census he was a clerk.

10. Elizabeth E. Strange (ca. 1878–)

At the time of the 1920 and 1930 U.S. censuses, she was the proprietor of a millinery shop.

11. Edith H. Strange (ca. 1881–)

In the 1920 and 1930 censuses, no occupation is listed for her; she was single.

12. Robert Tunis Strange (ca. 1883–)

Occupations for Robert T. Strange (from U.S. censuses):
1920: Proprietor of decorator's business
1930: Paint and paper merchant

13. Harwood Stockett Strange (1888–before 1976) Also see Additions & Corrections

The 1900 U.S. census gives his birth date as July 1889.

Occupations for Harwood Stockett Strange (from U.S. census and other sources):
1917 draft registration: Clerk, [Consolidated Gas & Light Co.?], Baltimore, Maryland
1920 census: Clerk for light and gas company

Residences for Harwood Stockett Strange (form U.S. census and other sources):
1917 draft registration, 1920 census: 114 Market St., Annapolis, Maryland (mother's home)

He served in the U.S. Army during World War I: "NG 6/5/17 pvt; sgt 7/23/17, Sup Co 1 Md. Inf; Sup Co 115 Inf, Hon disch 6/7/19, Overseas 6/15/18 to 5/24/19, Center Sector; Meuse-Argonne."[230]

At the time of his WWI 1920 census his occupation was a clerk for a light and gas company.

Both Stockett and Harwood individuals are noted in Maryland Chancery Court papers in a petition of 14 August 1826 to sell properties in Annapolis, Maryland.[231]

(wife of Harwood Stockett Strange)

See comments with Heinzerling Family collateral genealogy (above).

16. Kenton W. Strange (ca. 1897–)

At the time of the 1920 census he was an electrician at the U.S. Naval Academy.

Generation No. 3

14. Louis Earl Strange[3] was born 26 March 1892 in Annapolis, Anne Arundel Co., Maryland. He married Nora J. before June 1917. She was born about 1879 in Maryland.

Child of LouisStrange and Nora is:
17 i. Harwood K.[4] Strange, born 26 May 1918 in Maryland; died 26 February 1996.

NOTES

In the 1900 U.S. census he is listed as Earl Strange.

Occupation of Louis Earl Strange (1892–) [No. 7] (from U.S. census and other records):
1917 draft registration, 1920 census: Clerk, U.S. Post Office

Residences of Louis Earl Strange (from U.S. census and other records):
1917 drraft registration: 114 Market St., Annapolis, Anne Arundel Co., Maryland (mother's home)
1920 census: Distr. 2, Anne Arundel Co., Maryland

He was already married when he registered for the military draft on 5 June 1917.

Harwood K. Strange (1918–1996) [No. 10] filed for a Social Security card in Delaware before 1951. He last resided in Chesapeake City, Cecil Co., Maryland.

Otto Family
Collateral Genealogy
(12 descendants)

The genealogy of the Otto family, as it relates to our Spamer lineage and as currently understood, is as follows:

Descendants of Otto

1. undetermined parents[1]

Children of undetermined parents are:
2 i. Heinrich[2] Otto, born about 1830.
3 ii. Friedrich Otto, born about 1832.
4 iii. Justine Otto, born about 1834.
\+ 5 iv. August Otto, born August 1836 in Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany; died after 1911.

NOTES

The Otto siblings (above), aged one to eight, emigrated from Polle[232], Germany, to Baltimore, Maryland, arriving 22 August 1838 aboard the ship Everhard [233], having embarked from Bremen, Germany. They were accompanied by a Christine Otto, aged 35, but her relationship to the children has not been determined.

[232] Polle is a village and municipality in the Holzminden district of Lower Saxony, about 8 km northwest of Holzminden on the Weser River.

[233] The Bremen bark Everhard was built at Vegesack/Grohn by Johann Lange for the firm of F. & E. Delius of Bremen; launched 21 Sep 1831. She was 29 m in length, 8.6 m breadth, with a hold 5.3 m deep. In 1835 the ship was lengthened to 33.6 m and re-rigged by Ide Oltmann of Brake. In 1847, the Everhard was sold in Antwerp, Belgium, to Catteux Wattel et Cie, which firm renamed her Charles Quint. The ultimate fate of the ship is unknown.

Bremen Bark Everhard

August Otto (1836–after 1911), in the company of his siblings and Christine Otto, immigrated into Baltimore aboard this ship in 1838.

Generation No. 2

5. August[2] Otto (undetermined[1] wife) was born August 1836 in Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, and died after 1911. He married Margaret about 1856. She was born April 1837 in Bavaria, and died between 1900-1910.

Children of August Otto and Margaret are:

6 i. Augusta[3] Otto, born about 1858 in Maryland.
7 ii. Wilhemina Otto, born about 1863 in Maryland.
8 iii. Anna Otto, born about 1867 in Maryland.
9 iv. Amelia H. Otto, born 1869 in Maryland; died January 1954. She married Edward Otis Hinkley Spamer 9 October 1895; born March 1867 in Maryland; died 07 October 1946.
10 v. Bertha Otto, born May 1873 in Maryland.
11 vi. Joseph Otto, born August 1874 in Maryland.
12 vii. Julius Augustus Otto, born 19 September 1876 in Maryland. He married Rose C.

NOTES

5. August Otto (1836–after 1911) Also see Additions & Corrections

C. A. Weber, in a letter to Frances D. Spamer in 1975, included some notes about his grandfather: [234]

> "Grandfather Otto was a German meat butcher. He and his wife emigrated from Germany as children when it took more than a month, in a sailing vessel, to make the trip. Considering the fact that he and his wife reared seven children to adulthood, he was, by the standards of those days, rather an affluence person. Some of the children were educated in music and the arts. Aunt Amelia was a member of the first class to be graduated from Western High School. The old home property was 1628 Hanover St., a high ceilinged, three story brick house with a second story hanging porch which ran to about half the length of the depth of the property. To the south, Grandfather Otto owned the equivalent of two properties planted as a flower garden behind a wood paling [sic] fence. As children, we used to 'hunt Easter eggs' in that garden. We lived just opposite at "1633". To the rear of the flower garden was a carriage house in which Grandfather kept two or three vehicles in connection with his business and a 'surrey with the fringe on the top'. The carriage house opened on a cobblestone courtyard and across the courtyard was a brick stable which housed two horses, one for his business and one for evening and Sunday driving. Next to the stable was a brick ice-house and hay-loft; all in connection with his business. To the north of "1628" he owned the adjoining four houses which he rented to some of our neighbors. "1628" and the four houses to the north are still there, but what was once a beautiful flower garden and all that was in the rear, is now an Independent Presbyterian Church with an illuminated white cross hanging from about the second story level. My oldest brother and sister used to tell me how Uncle Ed. came calling on Aunt Amelia in an open barouche[235] and wearing a high silk hat. Those were the days."

August Otto immigrated as an infant in 1838, with his young siblings Heinrich, Friedrich, and Justine, in the company of "Christine Otto" (born about 1803) who may have been their mother, an aunt, or another elder relation. They emigrated from Polle, Germany, to Baltimore, Maryland, aboard the Bremen bark Everhard, having embarked from Bremen, Germany, arriving 22 August 1838.

Occupations of August Otto (from U.S. censuses and Baltimore city directories):
1860 census: Butcher
1870 census: Fireman
1880 census, and 1890 city directory: Butcher
1900 census: Meat dealer
1910 census: Butcher

Residences of August Otto (from U.S. censuses and Baltimore city directories; and see further notes, below):
1850-1870 censuses: 17th Ward, Baltimore, Maryland
1880 census: 6th Precinct, 17th Ward, Baltimore, Maryland
1890 city directory, and 1900, 1910 censuses: 1628 Hanover St., Baltimore, Maryland*

*In the 1912 city directory he is listed as residing at 1624 Hanover St., and a "Mrs. Minnie M. Otto" is listed residing at 1628 Hanover St. The identity of Minnie Otto is uncertain.[236]

At the time of the 1850 census, August Otto resided in the household of Simon and Mary Otto, aged 25 and 20, respectively; but their relationship to him is undetermined. Simon Otto was a butcher. Immigration records further list a Simon Otto who may be this Simon. He emigrated to Baltimore aboard the ship Elise that had departed from Bremen, arriving in Baltimore 8 June 1842; Simon is there listed as aged 17, originating from Hundshausen, and was occupied as a "musicman".

In the 1860 census August Otto resided next door to the family of Adam and Catherine/Catherina Otto, aged 30 and 26, respectively, but their relationship to him is undetermined. Adam Otto was a grocer. The 1860 Maryland census, from the federal population schedule, lists an August Otto at 17 W. Baltimore St., Baltimore.

The 1900 census indicates immigration in 1848; naturalized citizen. In the 1910 census, at the same address as that for 1900, he is listed as father-in-law, aged 93, widower, in a household headed by Minnie M. Otto, aged 35 [b. ca. 1875], widow.

Margaret Otto (1837–1900/10)
(wife of August Otto)

The 1900 U.S. census indicates that she immigrated to the U.S. in 1848.

6. Augusta Otto (ca. 1858–)

In the 1860 U.S. census her name is spelled "Augustia".

8. Anna Otto (ca. 1858–)

She was known as "Annie".

[236] Information about Minnie Otto, who is otherwise unidentified, is as follows: In the 1920 U.S. census, Minnie M. Otto, aged 42 [born ca. 1878], widow, is listed as head of household at 121 Clement St., Baltimore; also in the household is her brother, John C. Grimes, aged 37, a steam railroad machinist. In the 1930 census, Minnie M. Otto, aged 55 [born ca. 1875], widow, is listed as head of household at 1628 Hanover St., Baltimore. In the 1910, 1920, and 1930 censuses, Minnie's son, Wilbur, is also in the household.

In the 1900 census there is a Ferdinand and Minnie Otto living at 909 Hanover St., Baltimore, immigrants in 1882 (he is a hostler, naturalized by 1900); but her birth is given there as July 1857.

9. Amelia H. Otto (1869–1954)

See main Spamer Family genealogy for information about Amelia (Otto) and Edward O. H. Spamer.

10. Bertha Otto (1873–)

She was the maid of honor at the wedding of her sister, Amelia, 9 October 1895.

11. Joseph Otto (1874–)

At the time of the 1900 U.S. census he was a meat dealer.

12. Julius Augustus Otto (1876–)
"Lewis"

Occupations of Julius Augustus Otto (from Baltimore city directory and draft registration):
1912 city directory: "Lewis J. Otto", saloon keeper, 301 W. Preston St., Baltimore, Maryland
1918 draft registration: "Saloon business", self-employed, 301 S. Preston St., Baltimore

Additional Notes About Ross and Otto

It is possible that the Ross family, to whom Henry Spamer's first wife belonged, may have married into the Otto family. As noted, Edward O. H. Spamer, son of Henry and second wife Catharina Spamer, married Amelia Otto. An interesting article from the Baltimore Sun in 1885 relates to a divorce case then being considered in the Circuit Court in Baltimore, in which Ximena R. Otto applied for a divorce from her husband, Frederick A. Otto. Her brother was noted to be Harry D. Ross. Legal counsel for Frederick Otto was C. A. E. [Christian Augustus Emmanuel] Spamer [No. 81 in the main Spamer genealogy herein].

The news item that brought attention to this family reads as follows:[237]

> "Pressing and Pointed, but Irrelevant.—Judge Brown, in the Circuit Court, heard argument yesterday on a question which arose in the suit of Mrs. Ximena R. Otto against her husband, Frederick A. Otto, for divorce. The parties reside on Broadway. The ground of the application for divorce is infidelity and failure to support the family in accordance with his means. In the taking of testimony before a commissioner Mr. Harry D. Ross, a brother of Mrs. Otto, was asked by Mr. C. A. E. Spamer, counsel for Mr. Otto, if Mrs. Otto was not very partial to Captain Delano. The witness declined to answer, and was instructed by Mr. John H. Barnes, counsel for Mrs. Otto, that the question was irrelevant, and not to answer it unless he desired. Mr. Spamer insisted upon an answer, and the witness said, 'Not more than she was to any other friend.' Mr. Spamer then asked Mr. Ross, 'Did you ever see her sit on the sofa with his arm around her and her head on his shoulder?' The witness replied, 'No, sir.'
> "'Did you ever see him kiss Mrs. Otto in coming and going in his visits to the house?'
> "The witness refused to answer.

[237] "Pressing and Pointed, but Irrelevant" in "Local Matters", The Sun (Baltimore), 15 Apr 1885.

"Judge Brown decided that the question was irrelevant. The taking of testimony before the commissioner will be resumed, and when finished the case will come before the court for final hearing on its merits."

Nothing more has thus far been located regarding this suit. The above item was probably taken up by the newspaper solely for its lascivious connotations.

None of these people—Frederick Otto, Ximena (Ross) Otto, or Harry D. Ross—have been certainly tied to the Spamer family; however, consider the following as well as the coincidence of C. A. E. Spamer serving as one of the counsels:

The 1880 U.S. census lists the following information about the Frederick and Ximena Otto household, residing at 266 S. Hanover St., Baltimore, Maryland:

Frederick A. Otto, 37, Druggist, born in Maryland, both parents born in Germany
Ximena J. Otto [indexed as "Virnena"], 34, wife, born in Maryland, both parents born in Maryland
Elizabeth M. Otto, 10, daughter, born in Maryland
Ella C. Otto, 2, daughter, born in Maryland

In an attempt to track Ximena Ross in the censuses, the following information has been found (taking note that the occupation of David Ross is the same as that of Henry Spamer.

The 1850 census for the 6th Ward of Baltimore lists the following household:

David J. Ross, 30, Boot Maker, born in Maryland
Mary A. Ross, 26, born in Maryland
Mary C. Ross, 7, born in Maryland
Zinsinia [sic] J. Ross [indexed as "Zimina"], 5, born in Maryland
Emma L. Ross, 3, born in Maryland
Laura S. Ross, 1, born in Maryland
Hugh Phillips, 19, Boot Maker, born in Ireland

The 1860 census for the 5th Ward of Baltimore lists the following household (all born in Maryland):

Davis Ross, 40, Shoe maker
Julia Ross, 20
Kate Ross, 17
Virginia Ross, 15 [this is Ximena]
Emma Ross, 13
Laura Ross, 11
Clara Ross, 9
Harry Ross, 3
Mary Ross, 1
Iowa Weaver, 17, Milliner
Mary Kates, 15, black, Servant

At the time of the 1870 census, the eldest child of the 1860 census, Julia, seems to have married, and with her also are her three youngest siblings, residing in Manchester, Carroll Co., Maryland (all born in Maryland):

Henry Motter (or Molter), 46, Magistrate
Julia A. Motter, 29
Harry Ross, 13
Mary Ross, 11
Fannie Ross, 4

The other Ross individuals have not been located in the 1870 census.

	126	xi.	Oscar Spamer, born about September 1879 in Pennsylvania.

NOTES

43. Charles Spamer (senior) (1833–after 1900)

Charles Spamer was the first of the American-born children of this family. His given name might have been Carl, but he was known as Charles all his life. He is mentioned as "Uncle Charlie" in a letter from C. A. E. Spamer to his father, Ludwig Spamer[238], and a letter from Frances Spamer to Katharine Spamer refers to him (her great-granduncle) as "Uncle Charles".[239] Inasmuch as Charles and his brother, George, often seem to be recorded as "Sparmer", it may indicate an elective change in the spelling of their family name, perhaps due to pronunciation.

The "Spamer Families of Baltimore" includes brief note of Charles Spamer:[240]

> Carl, or Charles [Spamer], the seventh child fifth son, born at Baltimore during the 1830's. From the letter of C.A.E. [Spamer] dated 25 July 1911 ([appendix] p. A-38) we know he had children. From this letter and the one dated 8 March 1897[241] we know he died between 1897 and 1911.

The information provided in the present genealogy is determined from public records, which in light of the inconclusive information available to A. M. Spamer precluded him knowing where to search for Charles Spamer and his family. In 1975, Frances D. Spamer was attempting to discover what had become of Charles Spamer, so as to include the information in the family history on which she then was working with her brother. She noted, "I keep wondering if Charles moved his family out of Baltimore to another city which might be why no information is available."[242] This is in fact what happened; he had moved to Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, around 1864. As shown farther below, he may also have had affairs of some kind in the Pittsburgh area prior to his marriage, and he may have met Margaret Spangler there. The answer Frances Spamer sought was easy to find today with the help of searchable U.S. census data in Internet resources, which were relied upon to provide the following summary.

Occupations of Charles Spamer (from U.S. censuses and city directories of Baltimore, Maryland, and Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania):

1850 census: Apprentice shoemaker
1860 census: Shoemaker
1864 Baltimore city directory: Shoemaker (9 Mulliken St.)
1870 census: Shoemaker
1880 census: Working in cigar factory
1890 Pittsburgh city directory: Laborer
1900 census: Watchman

Also see Additions & Corrections

Residences of Charles Spamer (from U.S. censuses and city directories of Baltimore, Maryland, and Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania):

1850 census: (home of John Eull, shoemaker), Baltimore
1860 census: 3rd Ward, Baltimore city, Maryland [next door to his brother, Christian Spamer (No. 38)]
1870 census: 7th Ward, Allegheny City, Allegheny Co., Pennsylvania
1880 census: Rear of 83 Howard St., Allegheny City, Allegheny Co., Pennsylvania
1890 Pittsburgh city directory: "Willis, N School House, A"
1900 census: 5 Lawrence Ave., Allegheny City, Allegheny Co., Pennsylvania

The 1860 census records his place of birth as Darmstadt, and his age as 26, which places his birth as about 1834; however, his parents and older siblings immigrated into the U.S. in October 1832. The 1850 census lists his place of birth as Maryland. The 1900 census gives his birth as November 1833 in Maryland. In the 1860, 1870, and 1880 censuses his family name is spelled "Sparmer" (and misindexed as "Spanner" in the 1870 census).

Margaretha (Spangler) Spamer (1836–after 1900)

Her birthplace is given variously as Maryland (family record, and 1860 census) and Germany (1870, 1880, 1900 censuses). The 1900 census indicates that she immigrated to the U.S. in 1872, had been in the U.S. for 28 years, and was not naturalized. However, note that her marriage was in 1860; that she appears with Charles in the 1860 census without children; and that their first-born, Lorenda, 9 years of age at the time of the 1870 census, was born in Maryland.

It is possible that Margaret Spangler was from the Pittsburgh area, and that Charles Spamer had had some connection with this area prior to his marriage even though their first children were born in Maryland. The 1850 U.S. census seems to identify Margaret Spangler's parents and siblings residing in Allegheny City, Allegheny Co., Pennsylvania. Without other corroboration, that household is listed here for the possible information it conveys:

> George Spangler, aged 47, butcher, born in Germany
> Josephine, 43, born in Germany
> Susan, 18, born in Germany

Charles, 15, born in Germany
Margaret, 14, born in Germany
Louis, 10, born in Pennsylvania
John Kreeseg [Kruseg?], 28, carpenter, born in Germany
Susanna Kreeseg [Kruseg?], 34, born in Germany

In the 1840 census for Allgegheny City, Pennsylvania, there is a two-person household listed for George Spangler; however, the ages for both the male and female are tallied in the 20–29 age range.

118. Charles Spamer (junior) (1862/65–) Also see Additions & Corrections

The 1890 Pittsburgh city directory lists a Charles C. Spamer, motorman [trolley car driver], residing at "76 W Jefferson, A", who may be this Charles Spamer. He has not been located in U.S. censuses until he appears, a widower, in the 1920 census when he resided with nephew Earl Crawford and other family members. His occupation at that time was as a machinist.

120. Edward Spamer (ca. 1867–) Also see Additions & Corrections

At the time of the 1880 U.S. census he worked in a cigar factory—at 13 years of age.

121. William A. Spamer (1868–1915) Also see Additions & Corrections

He never married. At the time of his death he was a millwright in a steel mill in Ohio. He was buried 14 March 1915 in Allegheny, Pennsylvania. [243]

123. Lawrence Spamer (1874–) Also see Additions & Corrections

At the time of the 1900 census, he was a dry goods salesman, residing with his parents.

124. Harry Spamer (1876–)

At the time of the 1900 census, he was an electrical mechanic, residing with his parents.

45. Johann Conrad[4] Spamer (Heinrich Ludwig[3], Philipp[2], Johannes[1]) was born 02 June 1839. He married Katharina Margretha Jockel 18 April 1870, daughter of Johann Jockel and Katharina Schmidt. She was born 16 October 1839.

Children of Johann Spamer and Katharina Jockel are:
127 i. Spamer[5].
128 ii. Katharina Spamer, born 23 July 1873; died 09 August 1874.

[243] Information from his death certificate.

NOTES

Johann Ludwig Jockel, father of Katharina Margretha Jockel, was a citizen of Gross Nidda.

Katharina Spamer (1873–1874) [No. 128] is known to have been the second child of Johann and Katharina Spamer, but the identity of the first-born child is not recorded. Her name on the burial record is Karolina. A witness to the death record was Louis Spamer, son of Konrad Philipp Spamer, potter of Kohden.[244]

70. Wilhelmina[5] Spamer (Johannes[4], Johann Peter[3], Johann Conrad[2], Johannes[1]) was born 01 May 1842. She married (1) Heinrich Stöhr 02 April 1866, son of Peter Stöhr and Katharina Maurer. He was born 28 December 1840, and died 12 September 1871. She married (2) Heinrich Schmidt 29 September 1872, son of Wilhelm Schmidt and Margaretha Straub.

Child of Wilhelmina Spamer and Heinrich Stöhr is:

133 i. Julianna[6] Stöhr, born 24 September 1866.

NOTES

Wilhelmina Spamer (1842–) [No. 70] used the name "Louise" in the church records of Wingershausen.[245]

Heinrich Stöhr (1840–1871), husband of Wilhelmina Spamer, was a day worker in Eichelsachsen.

Wilhelm Schmidt, father of Heinrich Schmidt, was from Burkhards.

73. Katharina[5] Spamer (Christian[4], Leonhardt[3], Johann Conrad[2], Johannes[1]) was born 23 April 1844 in Oberschmitten, Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany. She married Georg Christian Diehlmann 14 May 1865, son of Georg Diehlmann and Katharina Wasserwollen. He was born 10 March 1842.

Children of Katharina Spamer and Georg Diehlmann are:

\+ 138 i. Otto[6] Diehlmann, born 08 October 1865 in Oberschmitten, Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany.

139 ii. Wilhelm Diehlmann, born 29 September 1869.

NOTES

Georg Diehlmann (1842–), husband of Katharina Spamer [No. 73], was a potter.

---

74. Katharina Elisabetha[5] Spamer (Christian[4], Leonhardt[3], Johann Conrad[2], Johannes[1]) was born 12 June 1847 in Oberschmitten, Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany. She married Conrad Müller 21 May 1868, son of Peter Müller and Anna Lenz. He was born 27 July 1842.

Child of Katharina Spamer and Conrad Müller is:

140 i. Karl[6] Müller, born 28 April 1869.

NOTES

Katharina (Spamer) Müller was known as "Lizzie".

Conrad Müller (1842–), husband of Katharina Spamer [No. 74], was a maker of ticking or mattresses (Züchenmeister).

145 v. Carl Ober Spamer, born 21 July 1884 in Baltimore, Maryland; died 10 January 1957. He married Frieda Lorenz about 1910 [in China or Japan?]; born 06 March 1880 in Niederhasslau, Saxony, Germany; died 05 June 1954 in Overlook Hospital, Summit, New Jersey.

NOTES

81. Christian Augustus Emanuel Spamer (1843–1912)
"Gus"

C. A. E. Spamer was a well known and respected attorney in Baltimore, very involved in the affairs of the Church of the New Jerusalem and the Baltimore community at large. He was known to family and acquaintances as "Gus". In an early letter he signs himself "Gustus", and during the Civil War his chaplain (who also was the family minister in Baltimore) referred to him as "Gust".

The "Spamer Families of Baltimore" misreports his death date as 7 November 1912.[246] Apparently, A.M. Spamer had misread or miswritten 11/7/12 for 1/7/12. Inasmuch as C. A. E. Spamer's death in January was noticed at the August 1912 meeting of the American Bar Association, clearly the November date is in error. The death of C. A. E. Spamer also was noticed by Rev. John Faulkner Potts[247], notable leader in the Church of the New Jerusalem in Bryn Athyn, Pennsylvania. Potts recorded the event in his diary for 23 January 1912, "Death of Mr. Spamer"[248]; apparently this was written on the date upon which he received the news.

C. A. E. Spamer's third given name, Emanuel, is variously seen in family accounts as Emanuel or Emmanuel, but the spelling with one "m" is taken from a letter written by him in 1911.[249] A. M. Spamer transcribed the letter in the "Spamer Families of Baltimore"; presumably he had done it faithfully. Further, C.A.E. Spamer may have been named partly in honor of Emanuel Swedenborg, whose religious tenets were followed by many of the Spamers who were members of the Church of the New Jerusalem.) In public records and published notices, he used permutations of his three given names and their initials, but he never spelled out Emanuel. Permutations of his name that have been seen, including those with clerical errors, are:

Civil War correspondence by C. A. E. Spamer to his family (noted farther below) included in a couple of instances a signature in addition to the familiar, "Gus". He signed, "C. Augs. E. Spamer" (with a flourish), and in one letter he adds parenthetically, "My official signature".

In public notices published in Baltimore newspapers as part of his attorney's practice, he is often cited as C. Augustus E. Spamer, which indicates his preference, but often this was shortened to C. A. E. Spamer. Note that in every instance he preferred the use of Augustus spelled out, which also is reflected in his familiar name, Gus.

As a means of introduction to the life of C. A. E. Spamer, the following brief obituary appeared in the Report of the American Bar Association in 1912, which the reader can compare to the information that is provided in this genealogy: [252]

C. AUGUSTUS E. SPAMER

C. Augustus E. Spamer was born in Baltimore, September 25, 1843. Mr. Spamer was of German descent, his father Ludwig Spamer having been born in Oberschmitten near Frankfort-on-the-Main.

Mr. Spamer was educated in the public schools of Baltimore and at the Baltimore City Cllege, from which institution he was graduated in 1860. He studied law in the office of Hinkley & Morris and was admitted to the Bar of Baltimore City on March 16, 1870. He was married on March 29, 1870, to Miss Abbie O. Smith of Boston. Mr. Spamer leaves a son and two daughters surviving him, his wife having died in 1886.

He was a devout member of the Baltimore Society of the New Jerusalem Church, of which he was for many years President and Superintendent of the Sunday School. He was Secretary of the General Convention of the New Jerusalem Church for twenty years, up to the time of his death.

He was much interested in charitable work in many diffeent fields and was Chairman of the District Board of the Federated Charities. He was also Treasurer of a special relief fund of that body.

He was for a number of years Treasurer of the Bar Association of Baltimore City, which position he resigned on the occasion of taking a trip to Japan in 1909.

He was well known to the members of the Bar of Baltimore City for his thorough and accurate work and his extreme patience and good nature. His law practice was more in the line of conveyancing than any other field, and he was rated as among the best conveyancers in Baltimore City. He was associated during the whole of his legal career with the office of Hinkely & Morris, becoming a partner after the death of Mr. John T. Morris, in 1909, at which time the firm of Hinkley, Spamer & Hisky was formed.

Mr. Spamer was a Union Veteran of the Civil War, having served in the Third Maryland Volunteer Infantry from March 22, 1864, until his discharge on July 31, 1865, having partricipated in the battles of the Wilderness and of Spottsylvania Court House. He was much interested in the Grand Army of the Republic and was appointed by Governor Warfield on the commission which erected a monument to the "Union Soldiers and Sailors."

Mr. Spamer's death occurred at Baltimore on January 7, 1912.

C. A. E. Spamer was educated at the Baltimore Male Central High School (later called City College), graduating in 1860.[253] In 1889 at least, he was elected to the executive committee of the City College Alumni.[254]

C. A. E. Spamer seems not to have served in the military until later in the Civil War, when he joined the Union army at the age of 20 in April 1864 (as outlined farther below).

In 1862, we find C. A. E. Spamer aboard a rail car enroute to Havre de Grace, during which time he wrote a letter to his sister, Olivia: [255]

[253] The Male Central High School had been established in 1839, "at which the higher branches of English and classical literature should be taught"; it was at the time situated on Courtland Street, under the charge of Dr. Nathan C. Brooks. In 1866, its name was changed to Baltimore City College. (Jacob Fry, Reminiscences of Baltimore, Maryland Book Concern, 1893, pp. 366-367.)

Probably in June 1863, C. A. E. Spamer was aboard the Chesapeake Bay steamer Louisiana, writing a letter to his parents and siblings, beginning ceremniously: [257]

With exceeding great pleasure I inform you that quite refreshed with 3 hours of sleep, with the engine of this ponderous boat rocking [illegible] bliss for state of quietude I write that your son is well & in the [best?] possible spirits. I am seated in the commodious saloon of this splendid steamer which is furnished in the grandest state. Perhaps I shan't be home before Sunday morning depends upon my business & shall devote one day at Old Point for myself if possible—I am hungry and anxiously waiting breakfast I'll have to wait—though as it is very early.

Most of the letter is taken up by various random observations, including his brefiending a young man, "conversing with him concerning the poets, the bible (he is a Presbyterian and a sensible fellow)." Most of the letter is written in overly stressed, flowery language, demonstrating a growing young man's improvements on his education; one example: ". . . the little ripples lighted up by the moon would appear as fairy barks gliding along the surface of the water tossed by the gentle action of the waves oh beautiful in the extreme was this sight." Interestingly, he signed his letter, "Your son Gustus", the only such example thus far seen with the peculiar contraction of Augustus, which seems to have been short-lived since earlier and later letters all are signed, "Gus".

In the 1864 Baltimore city directory C. A. E. Spamer is listed as a clerk at 130 N. Central Ave; this was his parents' address. The "Spamer Families of Baltimore" notes that at this time "He entered the law firm

C. A. E. Spamer wrote numerous letters to his family from the field, some of which are quoted from below. For much of the war he was attached as a clerk to one of the divisional headquarters. [264]

An undated [April 1864], brief note was written from Relay House, which was an important junction of the Baltimore & Ohio and Baltimore & Washington Railroads: [265]

[261] For this action, the troops of the 1st Division, 9th Army Corps received a unit commendation from Bvt. Maj. Gen. O. B. Willcox, 29 Mar 1865. (Copy courtesy Nancy Spamer MicKey, received Feb 2008.)

[263] On 11 Jun 1865, C. A. E. Spamer wrote to his sister [not specified by name] that he was no longer in Washington, D.C., but that the headquarters had been moved closer to Georgetown.

[264] Many of C. A. E. Spamer's letters written home from the field come with the handwritten or printed letterhead, "Head Quarters, 1st Div. 9th A.C." The letters that are quoted here are courtesy of Nancy Spamer MicKey [No. 287f], copies of which were received from her in February 2008. The originals are presently in the possession of her first cousin (once removed), Cliflyn Spamer Sadler [No. 222].

[265] Relay House was situated ten miles south of Baltimore, at the junction of the Baltimore & Ohio and Baltimore & Washington railroads. As such it was a critical junction in rail defenses during the war. Numerous Union units served at Relay House during the war. It was a relatively pleasant place, apparently, as testified by Adjutant Jonathan Ayres of the 144th Ohio Volunteer Infantry, who encamped at Relay House in May-June 1864. He wrote home letters, which were printed in the Wyandot Pioneer. Although the letters might demonstrate more embellishment for the benefit of pleasing his readers at home, it is likewise apparent that, as is often the case during times of hardship, there was a responsive black or entrepreneurial market willing to support the cause–for a price. In a letter of 26 May (published 3 June), Ayres noted:

> "Our camp is delightfully situated on the west side of the Baltimore & Ohio R.R., a few rods north of the Relay House covering a beautiful spot of ground, gently sloping to the westward on which grown large Chestnut, Oak, Cedar, Pine and other trees, affording a delightful shade over the entire camp. We have plenty of the substantials to eat and as for the luxuries, as all it requires to obtain these in abundance is a few greenbacks. I had green peas for dinner twice last week and strawberries once."

(Original Ayres letters in the Center for Archival Collections, MMS 1635, Bowling Green State University, Bowling Green, Ohio; transcripts posted to website http://www.bgsu.edu/colleges/library/cac/transcripts/mms1635.html; accessed 5 Aug 2007.)

By coincidence, C. A. E. Spamer's uncle, George Spamer [No. 44], was stationed at Relay House shortly later, on detached service with the 11th Maryland.

Prior to the Union army's siege of Petersburg, Virginia, Gus Spamer wrote to his family from the field near Cold Harbor. This is one of the earliest of his letters home, which sets the stage for the next year of his life, embracing both patriotism for country and cause as well as the overarching influence of spiritual matters: [266]

Sabbath

Dear Mother & family

A calm, clear, bright and quiet Sabbath morn it is; in fancy, I hear the merry peals of the church bells as they ring aloof their praise to the Great King, and with you in spirit we enter the little N. C. [New Church] Temple to listen to the golden teachings of our Divine Creator. The Sabbath school children cluster fondly around me and sweet contented happiness beams on every friendly countenance. What a beautiful picture compared with the horrible scenes to which I have been a witness since I left my humble home in defence [sic] of the universal principles of liberty and justice to mankind and which a dastardly foe is so persistently endeavouring to trample under foot. And will he succeed? No! So long as the glorious orb of day diffuses its generous rays of goodness[267]; so long as the earth shall revolve upon its axis, so long shall the proud ennobling principles of universal freedom stand, and not only stand, but ever achieving victory over anarchy, its march will be steady until the whole mundane sphere glistens with civilized intelligence and enlightened freedom. There is the glorious view which generations long to come shall be proud witnesses, but I am digressing so absorbed am I becoming on that theme. This morning, dear mother[,] has been the most peaceful and quiet that I have experienced since the day we left Pealton Station Apl 25th '64. I arose about 4 o'clock all nature & everything was hushed[,] down to a dancing rivulet with towel & soap in I proceeded & then indulged in a splendid body wash amid the chrystal [sic] waters, after having performed that duty I sought my tent and opening my little bible held religious service to myself. Soon I felt that the countenance of the Good Lord, radiant with pleasure was beaming a smiling approval upon me, who had early in the morning sought Him—and when I read Psalm 91st I imagined I had been specially directed to it in order to become a recipient of the everlasting comfort and assurance contained therein Verse 7 reads "A thousand shall fall at thy side, & ten thousand at thy right hand, but it shall not come nigh thee.["]— How vividly did not that verse bring to mind the many hostile scenes which had encompassed me, & how I realized the truth of that Divine Prophecy— Then went up my whole heart & soul in prayer, praise and adoration of the Divine Father & in the spiritual consolation which followed there was lack of no good thing to me. Father, mother & sisters, brothers & friends were all with me & enjoying each other society.

I wrote Olivia several days ago & explained hastily what my present position is. A more full explanation may not be amiss. You will recollect that in one letter I wrote that I had been sent to the wagon train at Fredericksburg to work on papers for Colonel Sudsburg. [269] I continued with the train finishing the papers, and travelling with it until we crossed the Pamunkey River near Newcastle (Col. Sudsburg who was indisposed & the Chaplain were also with us) when all of us who did not belong to the Quarter-Master's Department left for the front. Col. Sudsburg took command of the brigade on his arrival there & detailed me as Clerk to the Brigade Head Quarters.[270] Afterwards the 29th Mass. regiment was added to the brigade, whose Colonel named Peirce[271] holding an older commission of course took command of the brigade— I sta'd at the Head Quarters nevertheless, & now I flatter myself he has found in me a valuable & good clerk, and again Mr Brickman[272] has had many conversations with him & he has taken quite a liking to [272] Arthur O. Brickman, minister of the Calvert Street Church of the New Jerusalem, Baltimore. This was the family church of the Spamers who lived in Baltimore. Rev. Brickman also was a chaplain with the 3rd Maryland Infantry; he had enlisted 22 Mar 1864 and mustered out with the unit on 31 Jul 1865. He earlier had been enlisted with the 1st Maryland Cavalry (29 Dec 1861-10 Nov 1863). He may also have been related to the Spamer family, perhaps through the Otto family, as is noted further below.

Rev. Brickman was born in Germany about 1827 and married Susan, another immigrant who was born at sea about 1833. Although he has not been located in U.S. censuses earlier than the Civil War, at the time of the 1870 census Arthur and Susan Brickman resided in the 6th Ward, Baltimore, Maryland; their children were Lizzie (18, born in Pennsylvania), John (16, born in Pennsylvania), Lillian (15, born in Maryland, as were the rest of the children listed here), Samuel (13), Harriett (10), Charles (8), and Arthur O. (5). At the time of the 1880 census, they resided at 732 Walnut St., Allentown, Lehigh Co., Pennsylvania, at which time they had sons Harry (11) and Walter (6), both born in Pennsylvania. The junior Arthur O. Brickman was by the time of the 1900 census married to Annie E. Foster, born Jan 1865 in Pennsylvania, adopted daughter of David and Ann E. Foster, residing at 1700 N. Broadway, Baltimore, Maryland. Arthur was a druggist.

During the Civil War, Rev. Brickman kept up correspondence with members of the Spamer family; a couple of letters survive that he had written in August 1864 during the siege of Petersburg, Virginia [copies of the letters courtesy of Nancy Spamer MicKey, Feb 2008]. In one letter sent to Olivia Spamer he addresses her, "My dear niece Olivia!" An accompanying letter addressed to "Mrs. Julie Spamer and Mr. Lewis Spamer" [Ludwig and Julia Spamer, Olivia's parents] addresses them, "Dear Friends!". Of particular interest is Rev. Brickman's thanks to them for "informing me of the birth of my fourth son". He continues:

> "You think I shall call him Arthur Otto, but I don't like my own name, and this is the reason I had no child called after me. I do not like the name Brickman either, and often wished I had given myself another name after my arrival in America. If my friends and my wife, however, wish to call No 7 Arthur Otto, they may do so; I submit as an obedient serv[t]."

In fact, the son was named Arthur Otto Brickman. The name "Otto" is of additional interest, in that Edward O. H. Spamer [No. 113; see under Henry Spamer, No. 41] married Amelia Otto. However, a pertinent Susan or Susannah Otto has not been identified in 1850 census records. Yet furthermore, relations with the Otto family seem to be more deeply rooted, as there is also evidence that the Ross family (the family of Henry Spamer's first wife, Susannah) likewise married into the Otto family, as noted further in the genealogical discussions accompanying Henry Spamer [No. 41].

Rev. Brickman, despite his service as a chaplain of the Union army, had some very pointed remarks in his letter to the Spamers, a few of which are selected here. He writes to Ludwig and Julia Spamer,

> "May God bless both of you, and may you, and all of you, the whole family, be ever blessed by the spirit of true and pure love to God and your neighbour, because in these two lives angels live and spend in eternal beatitude."

And he continues,

On 12 June 1864, C. A. E. Spamer wrote to his mother and family from a "Camp in the field" near Cold Harbor, Virginia, the headquarters of the 2nd Brigade, 1st Division, 9th Army Corps. Assigned as a quartermaster in brigade headquarters during the war, here he had also been attending wounded with the doctor at an old hilltop house, which had been established as a temporary hospital. When a nearby battery was attacked by Confederate troops, Trychell's Marine Battery, concealed in a nearby woods, surprised the Confederate attackers with crossfire. Spamer seized a wounded man's musket and fired "four or five shots" down the hill toward the Confederates, and "felt myself a HERO". In the above sketch with which he illustrated the event, note "Gus Spamer" holding his musket near the house.

"Mr. Chaplain" as he calls him Captain Clark, one of his Staff as I remarked in Olivia & Amelia's letter is a magnificent, jovial, educated, talented polished, not-stuck-up, agreeable, funny complaisant &c &c, gentleman. My time is pleasantly and not fatigueingly (excuse this word) occupied—and in times of an engagement am perfectly safe. We have a wagon which travels along with the brigade and my things are carried in it. Thus you see standing aloof from the men in the ranks, I am beyond many temptations to do evil, but I feel strong enough [illegible] and any temptations that may be brought against me—all excepting in one instance which I shall here relate. It was noon near Spottsylvania C.H. [Court House] the fight was raging furiously on our right. I at that time was with the doctor carrying his medical box. An old house on a hill had been taken as a temporary hospital & the doctor & I were there attending to the wounded as they came from the battlefield. I think I can explain better by making a rough sketch & afterwards describing.

[sketch] [273]

While we were thus standing looking down the hill towards the woods on the left-hand side of the paper, out rushed about 1000 Rebels charging across the open space in the direction of the arrows [drawn pointing uphill in the sketch] intent on capturing the battery. At first we could not realize that they were Rebels, but after harm been commenced that they were[,] the battery for which they were charging opened on them, still they charged up & pushed steadily forward and all of us around the house thought we were lost, so close were they to the Battery not further off than from our house to McElderry St.[274] But[?] we knew not what was coming, just at this moment this battery [illegible] concentrating their [illegible] on the left side of the house (& which the Rebs had not seen) poured double shotted grape and canister into the ranks of the Rebs who were just raising a shout of victory & down they were mowed. Still Trychell kept firing & the Rebels confounded & amazed threw up their hands running hither & thither & not knowing whither [illegible] they got into a hornets nest they lost killed [illegible] 7 prisoners 5 [illegible]. Well I was writing about the temptation. All this occurred first in front of me [illegible] came so excited that seizing a wounded man's musket I let fly at the Johnnies four or five shots & felt myself a HERO. That was yealding [sic] to a temptation for the good of my country and I have no regrets what I ever yealded.

I have not received any letters from home yet & cannot divine why it is. I read two papers one directly in your handwriting & one I think in Amelia's hand writing— Write a few lines every day please, until I can have the pleasure of acknowledging the receipt of some missives[?] from home. Address Hd. Qrs 2^{d} Brigade, 1st Div. 9th A.C. I just hear that we move at 6 o'clock this even.

"War is a mean, low and most contemptable thing, which is truly hateful. A Man in the Army lives among brutes all the time. * * * I have a perfect horror for all kinds of military men especially since this campaign. There are some noble souls dispersed throughout the Army, but they are mighty few, or as the soldiers here would say –d –d few. I have seen war in Europe and soldiers to[o], but such corruption of nature I have seen nowheres as in the Army of the United St. of America."
Fortunately, C. A. E. Spamer is counted among his "–d few" noble souls, as is noted shortly below in these letters.

[273] The sketch depicts a house and tree atop a hill; next to is is a figure firing a musket, labeled "Gus Spamer". Halfway down the hill is marked a location labeled, "Battery the Rebs tried to capture". At the bottom of the hill are two wooded locations labeled, "Woods out of which the Rebels charged" and and locale with two labels, "Trychell's Marine Battery" and "Woods concealing Trychell's Battery".

[274] An envelope still associated with this letter is addressed to "Miss Millie Spamer, 130 N. Central Avenue, betwe. Jefferson and McElderry Sts., Baltimore". Today, McElderry and Jefferson Sts. do not intersect with N. Central Ave., cut off by Johns Hopkins Hospital.

This is a long & I know an interesting letter so I will close by praying Heaven's Blessing upon you Give my kind regards to Aunt Lizzie, Aunt [illegible] Cousin Christina & all the rest.
Your loving son Gus

From "Near Petersburg, Va." Gus Spamer wrote to his parents in July 1864. In the letter is a telling tale of resourcefulness as an undercurrent to the usual protocols of military life in combat: [275]

> . . . notwithstanding lateness of the hour must reply acknowledging the receipt of 5 dollars. I did not like to draw on you, but was obliged to by the following reasons: I did not think it worth while mentioning that I had been suffering a little for a week or more from diahroea, and kept getting worse, debilitating and weakening me very much, Capt Clarke was kind & allowed me to do as little as possible. My stomach refused Government rations, hard tack, coffee, pork, bacon, beans & c so there I was; further our cook got very sick and could not get us water which made it bad again, then again The Post Master of whom I spoke as having formed, an eating mess, finally became disagreeable to me by his vanity and love to hear himself talk, as he supposes in the most profound and wise manner upon the [most?] casual subjects; then yesterday he ill-treated the cook saying that he only feigned sick & that he did not want him any more. Mother in contrast let me speak of my conduct in the case. The Post Master spoke thus roughly to the boy, because he did not get him dinner that day—I however having some nice irish [sic] potatoes of which I thought I could eat a little, boiled & smashed, then putting salt & pepper on them after mine and another's share took the balance to the sick boy who at them with zest. Well to revert things went on so with me until three days ago, when I got to be more acquainted with a young man (18 yrs) by name Green, a Canadian, my asisstant clerk he too was very sick and I being the better able to do so in a spirit of charity offered to assit him in whatever he might want and I could do. He accepted is very appreciative, and has money with him which enables him now to procure delicacies from the sutler & c.
> Providence was directing me, for it was when I got some turkey put up in cans which he bought, now we have tea, soft bread & butter all of his purchase, well this & other little articles fitted my stomach and thus gaining nutriment. I gained strength & can more effectually ~~abstain from~~ combat & fight away the diahroea I ate some onions too. Thus by dispensing with Gov. rations using only when I can, & with money to buy from the Sutler & Commissary Green & I will live well I think soldiers, if any should. Mother have good heart, all is good & well. Money matters is a sore evil in these dark days of bloody war, but when the troops come marching home again with gay & gallant tread.

An undated letter from Gus Spamer to his father was written during or after the siege of Petersburg, Virginia: [276]

> Ere this will reach you the particulars of yesterday's conflict will have been published in the papers. Confound the negroes is the hue & cry, but for them I would be writing this letter from Petersburg, Va. I have not time to write of the stirring events which transpired such as the blowing up of a rebel fort[277] and the burial of over 500 Rebs in consequence [of] our three successful charges & finally the disastrous proceedings of the negro troop I am well & "a tree didn't fall on me["] this time, Col Marshall who commands our Brigade was made prisoner, but dear Capt. Clarke came out all right except that his lip was a little scarred & cut by a small piece

Chaplain sends his respects

At about this time, 3rd Maryland chaplain Arthur O. Brickman (who as noted was also the family minister in Baltimore) wrote to the family of Ludwig and Julia Spamer, Gus Spamer's parents. As previously quoted here, he had some very pointed, unfavorable remarks about the kinds of men who inhabit the army ranks. But he commented specifically for their edification: [278]

> Our good Gust is well and his position is a pleasant one; he is in fact better off than most of the officers and men. He is very useful and his capacity as a clerk, is comparatively out of danger and has become quite indispensible to his superiors. As long as he remains in the army he will remain in the position, and as the war must soon come to an end, he finally will come out with as much money (considering the bounty) as any Captain made in the same period. Gust was here in my tent but a few minutes ago and read your letter to me, and also a part of my answer; he requests me to send you all his very best regards. He is unspoiled, and none of us need to entertain the least fear for his future, or his character. He is a good young man, and one that hs unshakeable principles of religious and moral truths. For him the presence in the aRmy is of inestimable value, and he will come out all right and safe. I intend to resign in a couple of weeks and be hoem about October, before the cold weather sets in; and I hope to spend many agreeable hours with the beloved at home. [279]

By the end of November, the headquarters of the 1st Division, 9th Army Corps established itself at Friend's House, two miles from Petersburg, Virginia. Gus Spamer wrote to his parents, describing the house and including a cartoon of the house and grounds, depicting the rows of officers' tents: [280]

> We are settled and pleasantly at that. * * * On the morning of the 29th we clerks formed in line and marched for our destination, leaving our old Hd. Qrs about 9 A.M. About 3 P.M. we hauled up at this place, and now I must describe. For our office we have the South West corner room of the house a large and spacious room about 18 feet long and 15 wide—4 large windows admitting plenty of light and air, very high ceiling, two closets. I have one for my things and it is nice Itell you, then there is the door leading into alarge hall which extends through the building—

[278] Arthur O. Brickman to Mrs. Julie Spamer and Mr. Lewis Spamer, Aug 1864 (accompanying a letter to Olivia Spamer, 30 Aug 1864).

[279] According to Army records, Chaplain Brickman remained with the 3rd Maryland for the duration of the war.

the hall doors upon verandahs north and south. There are eight large rooms in the house and four smaller ones in the 3d Story or garret as it really is. Before the war it must have been a magnificent southern mansion—several of the cornices from which hung the window drapery still remain—many a festive evening has been spent with these capacious walls before this war. We sleep on the floor nice and dry in the office. A plain view of Petersburg can be had from our windows on the west side and the surrounding country for agreat ways, the house being built upon a high hill, and the city of Petersburg lies in the flat ground just two miles from here— We can see down one of their principal streets. tis a peculiar sensation which comes over one when I stand, glass in hand, and view the town, its church spires, large buildings, the Alms house, Seminary. The large white Church on Cemetery Hill and other points of interest. While between here and there long lines of earthworks and forts innumerable bristling with frowning guns are built. At this moment everything is quiet, but a minute hence and the terrific boom of some heavy piece of ordnance may ring its chimes upon the morning air and then possibly other forts may form in with their hoarse chorus. Up at our old Hd. Qrs near the Danville Rail Road there was no firing of this kind, so that it now reminds us of the days of last June & July when we were near here, but a mile or so farther to the left— This house is in plain view of the Rebel Batteries, one of which commands it, but they never shell it for a good reason, on the right of the house about 50 yards are some ugly looking Union muzzles, and the Johnnies no sooner open their battery, than Mr. Union tells him to hush up, and it is a remarkable fact that he always obeys. I am glad of the change, because our quarters are so much more the comfortable and the situation being elevated is more pleasant. The Appomattox river runs along about ½ mile from here. Now for another description. On the South front of the house the Officers hve their quarters in tents. Cedar abounds plentifully, and with it these Head Quarters look beautiful I'll make a rough sketch to give you some idea

[sketch]

In front and over the officers tens are cedar arches and covers. The garden or yard between the front fence and the officers tents is laid off with designs representing the badges of our Corps the cross cannon & anchor, the shield. 1D [stylized] this design represents 1st. Division Stars to indicate that it is a general's Head Quarters[281] & other beautiful designs.

Everything is delightful

By the middle of February 1865, the 1st Division had arrived at City Point, Virginia. Here Gus Spamer wrote to his parents on stationery of the United States Sanitary Commission. He was enroute back to the 1st Division headquarters at Petersburg, after apparently on a furlough home to Baltimore: [283]

After an adventursome and somewhat toilsome journey I have arrived thus far towards my destination, viz—City Point within 6 miles of the good old Head Quarters. I will briefly detail my journey— We left Baltimore at half past four on the 15th inst, and after sticking in the ice the usual length of time arrived at Fortress Monroe at 9 the next morning The most noteworthy

C. A. E. Spamer, in a letter to his parents dated 30 November–1 December 1864, sketched the headquarters of the 1st Division, 9th Army Corps, at "Friend's House", two miles from Petersburg, Virginia, which was occupied during the siege of Petersburg. Note the rows of "officers tents Chimneys in the rear" lining the gravel walk.

incident on this passage was that I lost my overcoat and did not recover it until this afternoon when about 20 miles from City Point in the James River.

In another letter I will tell you the whole circumstance as it was quite an adventure. We got on a tug at Fort Monroe which took us to a transport lying in the stream, did not leave until 4 P.M. yesterday, then only steamed 10 miles, as the pilot was a new one and night coming on, we cast anchor and lay all last night in the middle of James River. Fog this morning delayed us until 10 o'clk, then we struck some half dozen sand bars and finally got off & arrived here just now. Am putting up at the Christian Commission for the night. Will be at H^{d} Qrs tomorrow morning at 6 o'cllk [sic]

Excellent Spirits indeed

Feb. 22d 1865

Well I may as well write again seeing as how I haint got nothin' to do jest now. I arrived here safe & sound with a whole body Saturday morning, being nearly three days on the road It did me a powerful sight of good to see the familiar establishment known as the "Friend House" again, and as I neared the place in the quietude of early morning it felt as though I had been visiting a foreign land, so homelike & comfortable the camps, forts and big guns did look. Knowles & King had not risen from their couches on the floor when I exclaimed "Am glad to see boys" then there was a general congratulation all around, and my purchases were distributed much to the satisfaction of all concerned. Nothing like the pipes I tell you, except perhaps the dough nuts—they did take well by all who ate them. Till's cookery was much admired, But about my nice coat with those nice pockets.

Here Gus Spamer related at some length the story of having lost and recovered his coat; much more of a let-down than a story, actually. After a thief apparently took the coat, and Gus mistaking another man's coat for his, Gus the next day found a man wearing the coat. The man approached Gus and asked if he was the man searching for his coat; and so it was returned.

After the Union army's siezure of Petersburg, Virginia, Gus wrote to his homefolk from the headquarters in that city, noting that the blacks were "overjoyed to see the Yanks" and that they "aint got horns & monkey tails". He also wrote broadly across a captured triplicate blank Confederate promisory note, "I am well & in good spirits". [284]

After the surrender of the Confederate army, the 3rd Maryland was moved to Washington, D.C. Gus Spamer wrote to his sister, Olivia, in June 1865: [285]

Field Head Quarters 1st Div. 9th A.C.
Near Delaney's House, D. C.
Sunday Night June 11th 1865

Dear Sister:—

In acknowledging the receipt of your kind and interesting letter of the 6th inst I must acquaint your all with the fact that I have moved form the dusty, dirty city of Washington. Head Quarters of the Division were established about 1½ mile[s] from Georgetown & 2 miles from Washington in a pleasant oak grove bordering on a public road along which vehicles containing all manner of psersons and things of this world are frequently pasing. I am highly delighted with the change. The Country as you may know is in all its blooming beauty, the foliage luxuriant, the neighboring garden blusing with blossoming roses and beaming with flowers of variegated hues; all nature seems glad and rejoices that sunny peace has gain settled over the land—

[284] Gus [C A. E. Spamer] to Everyone, 4 Apr 1865.

The contrast between the June of this and the June of last year is so remarkably at variance, that I am ever noticing and marking the change.

Did I then see the pretty lambs frisking[,] the good natured cows browsing quietly on grassy hillocks, the honest looking farmer with sturdy horses drawing sweet scented hay; oh how much more beautiful and lovely the face of nature, not torn with the picket's shovel and rude lines of earthworks surrounding us appear, but calmly, quietly nature rests amid soft breeses [sic] and balmy sunshine. I am diverting too much.

As I before remarked we are tented in a beautiful, cool retreat n the shape of an oak grove. About ¼ mile from here a sparkling rivulet dances through the woods, anon in sombre shade, and joyful sunshine. The clerks have discovered a pleasant cove and retired nook where there is a splendid opportunity to bathe in clear chrystal [sic] water whenever one desires to do so.

Yesterday I enjoyed a nice wash there— The living at "Augus Hotel, my recent place of residing, became rather poorer in quality and as we had gotten another and better cook, we have better eating—

Then the country is so much more healthy and refreshing and beautiful that I am redely [sic] entranced sometimes. I only regret that I shall not be able to attend Church as often I as [sic] could were I in the city. My regiment has been temporarily detached from the Davis encamp[?] and are doing guard duty on the Baltimore & Ohio R.R. near Laurel Md and there abouts so you see the Chaplain and I are very far away from each other.

I make no doubt that you desired to write me very much, dear sister, and your apology is ample for everything. I am glad to learn that your substituting has become so acceptable and have little doubt but that you will soon be permanently established as a teacher.[286] How did you succeed with your 2d class?

I was very much taken up with your description of the May soireé [sic] of the Sommerville society and should have been very delighted to witness the performances. I am glad Pap attended.

Mr. Bertholf has not forgotten you by calling as he did, but did he say anthing that he owed me a letter in reply to one I wrote from before Petersburg? I just recollect that in one of your letters you asked me whether I had an acquaintance who inquired after me, asking whether I was your brother in the War Department I have not the honor of his acquaintance

Charles Shaw——I don't remember him.

Good joke about the tobacco on Pap.

There is more Bounty[287] on me than I supposed. I thought it was only $75. Do you know whether that includes the city bounty?

Give my kind love to Mr. Hinkley. [288] Success to Olivia in her fourth year. I admire the decision. It pleased me much to send the money Knowles is out of the service and the responsibility of Chief Clerk at these Hd. Qrs I have assumed.

My address is still the same Hd. Qrs 1st Div 9 A.C. Washington D.C.

By late June, talk of mustering out was circulating through troops in the army. Gus wrote to his sister, Millie: [289]

> There are reports currently based on tolerable reliable informaiton that all Veteran organizations are soon to be mustered out. The Colonel of my regiment told me yesterday that we were soon to be discharged but as I am clerk to higher authority than he ranks and not having seen anything official relative to the fact he asserted, I am not positive that such is the case, although it may be so. Nevertheless we all hope it is to be so, for I do not feel as well satisfied to remain in the service now that the rebellion is over.

However, he added,

> I fear that I shall lose one of my clerks in the office which will entail greater efforts on my part as well as my presence to keep the office in running order. Then again, if it is true that we are to be mustered out . . . I shall be in demand, for on those occasions clerks are wanted more than ever.

On 9 July, Gus Spamer received a furlough effective 12 July, and he expected to travel home. He wrote to his mother, "So prepare a clean Shirt & & c— [sic] Muster out is all the talk—Home again, Home again—"[290] The furlough was brief, as he was back at headquarters on 15 July but with a "continued flow of good spirits": [291]

> Had an excellent dinner over at the Hospital to day—Beef steak roast potatoes pickles bread & butter strawberries in sauce, blackberries and sugar ice-water & cream custard—Think I shall go over there again shortly.

[292] C. A. E. Spamer, passport application, Baltimore, Maryland, 15 Sep 1909 (approved 16 Sep 1909).

After the war, C. A. E. Spamer studied law and was admitted to legal practice in 1870,[293] although in the Baltimore city directory for 1868 he is listed as an attorney. In 1867, he wrote a personal letter to his homefolk from Chestertown, Kent Co., Maryland, written on letterhead which he had with him, "Hinkley & Morris, Attorneys and Counsellors at Law, 43 North Charles Street." [Baltimore].

C. A. E. Spamer was a self-employed solicitor in Baltimore, according to an advertisement in 1903,[294] but the "Spamer Families of Baltimore" notes that after he was admitted to the bar in 1870 he "was an active associate and partner in the firm for 42 years".[295] The 1890 and 1899 Baltimore city directories list C.A.E. Spamer's business address as 215 N. Charles St., which was the address of the Hinkley law firm. During 1909-1912 he was a partner in the law firm, which then was known as Hinkley, Spamer, and Hisky; still at 215 N. Charles St. The "Spamer Families of Baltimore" indicates that "He was a conveyancing specialist."[296]

A photographic studio portrait in the collections of the Maryland Historical Society shows five men of the firm of Hinkley, Spamer and Hisky; it was taken in 1910 but the subjects are not identified. However, the following information is established here. The other partners at the time were John Hinkley (1864-1940) and Thomas Foley Hisky (1865-1936). One must assume that the three seated gentlemen are the partners of the firm. The eldest gentleman in the photo must be C. A. E. Spamer, who was twenty years senior to his partners. In addition, Adolph Spamer (1861-1939) [No. 99] may also be in the photo. A 1st cousin to C. A. E. Spamer, Adolph worked as the office manager for the law firm when it was Hinkley, Hisky and Burger, and likely during other partnerships.[297] One of the younger men standing behind the partners I identify as perhaps being Adolph. I make the suggestion because this man's appearance is strikingly similar to the appearance of John Ward Spamer when he was a younger man. (John Ward Spamer [No. 114] was a 1st cousin to both Adolph Spamer and C. A. E. Spamer; he also was my grandfather.)

Political and Civic Activities. In November 1866, C. A. E. Spamer was already involved in public associations, as a director in the Richard Sheridan Building Association, a loan agency.[298] He was involved in organizations in the public service all during his career. For example, in 1885 he was one of the incorporators of the Charity Organization Society of Baltimore City, which was created for broad purposes and resembles a not-for-profit organization in the support of welfare:

> The objects of the corporation are to organize charitable work in Baltimore; to bring associations and individuals into closer contact in dispensing relief to the sick and destitute; to see that all deserving cases of destitution are properly relieved; to prevent indiscriminate and duplicate giving of alms; to furnish safeguards against imposition and means for the more orderly and efficient administration of relief by collecting and recording for the common benefit the statistics of

The subjects are not identified in the Maryland Historical Society collections, but identifications have been found in a 1967 history of the original Hinkley law firm: "Left to right, C. A. E. Spamer, Louis J. Burger, Thomas Foley Hisky, Frederick J. Singley, John Hinkley." (Wilbur Harvey Hunter, A Baltimore Law Firm; a brief history of Hinkley and Singley and its predecessors, 1817-1967, privately printed at the press of Schneidereith and Sons, Baltimore, Maryland, 1967, p. 30.)

The society has no capital stock."[299]

C. A. E. Spamer was openly active in a variety of civic affairs, including those relating to the Bar. In 1879, he was one of 432 co-signers of an open letter in support of the renewed candidacy of James R. Brewer for the public office of Clerk of the Circuit Court.[300] C. A. E. Spamer was a supporter of the independence of jurists, without affections to a particular political party. In this regard he was one of nearly a hundred signers of the Citizens' Independent Judiciary Movement as endorsed by the Bar of Baltimore in 1882.[301]

He was a Prohibitionist, and he ran on the Prohibitionist party ticket for elected office on at least two occasions. He was nominated by his party to run for Congress in 1892, as is noticed in a brief item in the Baltimore Sun:[302]

> Prohibition Candidate for Congress.—Mr. C. A. E. Spamer has been nominated as the prohibition candidate for Congress from the fourth district. He is a lawyer, a native of Baltimore, and forty-five years old. When under age he entered the Union army and served through the war. He is a graduate of the Baltimore City College. Mr. Spamer is a prominent member of the Swedenborgian church.

The results of the 1893 Congressional election were decidedly unfavorable to C. A. E. Spamer. Rep. Isidor Rayner, the Democratic incumbent, won the election with 21,455 votes against Albertus W. Spates (Republican, 14,646 votes) and C. A. E. Spamer (653 votes).[303]

The Denton (Maryland) Journal for 24 and 31 October 1894 includes a facsimile of the official ballot for the Congressional District to be voted 3 November;[304] C.A.E. Spamer is listed as a candidate for Elector in the Electoral College on the National Prohibition Ticket. The results of the election indicate he received 5,917 votes; the winners received more than 136,000 votes each.[305] (In 1896, he again ran for Elector on the same ticket.[306])

In 1895, he ran as a Prohibitionist for the local office of States' Attorney, but was defeated by the Republican candidate, Duffy (53,866 votes) and runner-up Democrat Campbell (44,128 votes); he received 1,993 votes.[307]

On 28 July 1896, the Maryland State Convention of the Prohibition Party met at Hazazer's Hall, in Baltimore, where presidential candidate Joshua Levering was formally notified of his selection by the National Convention that had met in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. C. A. E. Spamer presided over the deliberations of the State Convention, to elect Presidential Electors and to name the members of a State Committee.[308] The invocation was delivered by Joseph Edmund Smith[309] of the Mt. Vernon Place Methodist Episcopal Church, Baltimore. The candidate was charged by the national convention to "Go to the last voter in this land and preach the gospel of liberty from the slavery of the saloon."[310]

C. A. E. Spamer appeared on the official ballot of the 1st Ward, Baltimore city, nominated as an Elector for the Presidential election, on the Prohibition Ticket. (Also of note on this ballot is the name of J[ames]. Sloan Hoskins, a Democratic candidate for City Council; his wife, Virginia "Jennie" Spamer Hoskins, was a cousin of C. A. E. Spamer.)[311]

Returns for the Baltimore election of 2 November 1897 indicate that C. A. E. Spamer was a candidate for Additional Judge of Supreme Bench in Baltimore City, receiving 1,484 votes (defeated by George M. Sharp, Republican, 54,475 votes).[312]

In 1898, C. A. E. Spamer was Chairman of the nominating convention of the Prohibition Party in the Fourth District.[313]

In 1899-1900 at least, C. A. E. Spamer was Treasurer of the Bar Association of Baltimore.[314]

Regarding the 1906 national reunion of Civil War veterans, C. A. E. Spamer was appointed to the committee for Bull Run Battlefield Monuments.[315] Between 1906 and 1911 C. A. E. Spamer was on the Union Soldiers and Sailors Monument Commission of Baltimore (its Secretary, 1906-1908).[316]

Church Activities. C. A. E. Spamer was an active member in the Church of the New Jerusalem nationally, and worshipped at the church at Calvert and Chase Streets. He was an honorary pall-bearer at the funeral of the church's minister, Rev. Arthur O. Brickman, in 1886.[317]

Although he received his religious indoctrinations through his family's attendance of the Calvert Street church, it is apparent that C. A. E. Spamer sought out additional activities through a wider range of persons involved in the church. In 1867, for example, he visited one J. R. Gray of Chestertown, Kent Co., Maryland, about which he wrote to his homefolk. This letter is the same one, aforementioned, that he wrote from Chestertown on letterhead of Hinkley & Morris, Attorneys and Counsellors at Law, 43 North Charles Street." [Baltimore]. It should be noted, too, that Hinkley was a devoted and active member of the New Church, too. C. A. E. Spamer wrote:[318]

> I cannot adequately describe in words the great pleasure I experience in being here with Mr. Gray. From my observations & former intercourse with him I concluded he must have been an ardent searcher after truth through all the channels of human and divine intelligence, and that was the principal reason of my desiring to have favorable opportunities of knowing him more intimately; I felt he would receive my sphere with pleasure, and it is so. What talks we do have, some people would think he & I were peers of religion to listen to our discussions and readings of the arcana of Christianity and their application to life. I am learning a great deal form him and he is reeiving good from the Lord through me. He is thoroughly educated in all of the principles of the Church, having passed the greater portion of his life in a state of preparation for the reception of truth by a researc[h] into all systems of religion and almost every science—He has found the truth

Interestingly, C. A. E. Spamer seems to indicate that he had proposed a walking trip homeward (from the Eastern Shore to Baltimore!) but decided against it in favor of spending more time with Mr. Gray. He continued, concluding with a recapitulation of his trip to the Eastern Shore:

> I cannot spare time & paper to describe minutely the conversations & therefore have but premised generally the state of affairs, suffice it to say that I have never so fully & with more real pleasure engaged my time in spiritual things and their attendant consequences; what is better he enjoys it so much
> Well, about my trip I should say something. I got to the boat in good season; met old Mr. Start[319] an Eastern Shore client of Hinkley & Morris, who was going to the same place; had a delightful ride down the river, up the bay to Wirton [sic] Creek & up this beautiful creek during a charming shower to the Landing[320]; then rode 4 miles in a stage & was cordially received by Mr. Gray who was watching for me & came down his lane to meet me. He has a model farm of 330 acres; large modern built house with conveniences, well appointed barns and outhouses, plenty of stock &c. in fact is a living farmer of the right stamp. His table is generously supplied with good easting,

The identity of Mr. Gray has thus far not been established, nor his relationship, if any, within the public affairs of the New Church; a search for Gray (or Grey) of the 1860 and 1870 U.S. censuses in Kent Co., Maryland, reveals no one of pertinence. Edward Otis Hinkley (1824-1896) founded the law firm here mentioned; and he was instrumental in converting another family member, Rev. John Edward Smith, from the Methodistic Episcopal faith to that of the New Church (see Part II: Smith Family).

It is apprent from this engagement that C. A. E. Spamer eagerly embraced the tenets of the New Church, and that he sought out discussions with others of similar mind. Given his proclivity for civic affairs, too, it is not unreasonble to assume that his efforts in both church and public drew one from the other.

In 1887, at an annual meeting of the Maryland Association of the New Church, C. A. E. Spamer read the keynote address, which was quoted in the Baltimore Sun as follows:[321]

> Mr. C. A. E. Spamer read the annual address to the receivers of the heavenly doctrines on the uses of assemblies as follows: "Dear Brethren—The highest happiness attainable by man is that which results from the grateful performance of good uses in the spirit of the Lord. Man when first created was imbued with wisdom and his love, not for himself, but for the sake of its communication to and with others. Thus society exists, for otherwise it would crumble to pieces. Uses are infinite in number; those which are spiritual are of love to God, and love towards neighbor; moral and civil uses are of the love of society and of the State. There are natural uses, which are of love of the world and its necessities; and bodily uses, which are of the love of self-preservation, not for the sake of self, but for the sake of higher uses. The uses of man are distinguished in two classes—the natural and the spiritual. The natural have their correspondences in spiritual ones. Spiritual uses, though second in order of time, are first in order of importance because they relate to the soul. By them we acquire knowledge of the Lord. Studying His revelations and listening to His instructions are spiritual uses. The Lord dwells to the man who performs this work, he becomes a church in the least form, and he and his coworkers thus establish the kingdom of the Lord on earth. Too much importance cannot be attached to the familiar doctrine that teaching and doing ought to go together. The priceless truths of the new dispensation have been committed to us in trust, to deliver them until our fellow-man. A generation ago our predecessors, few in number, but strong in spirit, came together in this city to study this trust, and fulfill as best they could the heavenly purposes involved. They pressed forward the good work among difficulties which ever beset the natural man. The members of the church on earth ought so to live that they will become prepared for heavenly choirs and heavenly societies, and find their appropriate places in the Grand Man[322] which is in Heaven. A part of this work can be best performed by drawing near to each other as brethren and learning to do good work together in civil, in social and in religious life. In trusting faith that a little one shall become a thousand and a small one a strong nation, we have come to our annual gathering to fulfill the object of the association by the dissemination of the doctrines of the New Jerusalem and the increase of its goods and truths. Let us pause to consider for a few moments the spiritual import of our meetings and organizations, and try to realize the responsibility resting upon us as standard-bearers of the heavenly truths. In the heavens there are innumerable societies, and each society consists of several individuals, who, by harmony and unanimity, are, as it were, one man. These societies are distinguished from each other according to the differences of mutual love and faith toward the > Lord. These differences are without number, and arranged in the most orderly manner, so that the happiness of all is promoted by each individual. An important spiritual use to which the energies of this association should be directed is the fostering care of isolated receivers of the doctrines. Swedenborg informs us that the communication of societies with other societies is effected by spirits which they send forth, and by whom they speak. These spirits are called 'subjects.' Thus we see the angelic societies send forth missionaries. The territorial limits of our association take a wide range; the missionary work done the past year by our ministers have discovered many precincts containing isolated receivers, and soon they, too, will be engaged in widening the sphere of usefulness."

He was an officer in the Maryland Association of the Church of the New Jerusalem. He was Recording Secretary at least between 1887 and 1905, and in 1898 at least he also was a member of the Executive Committee of the organization.[323] Presumably he served in various other capacities over a long period of time. In a letter written by him in July 1911, he notes that he had been Secretary of the General Convention of the Church of the New Jerusalem for the past 21 years.[324]

In 1898, he was newly elected to the board of managers of the Maryland Sunday-School Union.[325]

As part of a 1906 meeting of the English New Church of Baltimore, "Rev. C. A. E. C. A. E. Spamer's Letter to Conrad Ludwig Spamer of Eichelsachsen, 1911

As noted in the introductory material to this Spamer Family genealogy[329], C. A. E. Spamer's son, Carl Ober, traveled in Germany and met some of the German relatives of the extended family, about whom he wrote to his family in Baltimore. He wrote in that letter:

> I would also like to suggest that Father, Uncle Arthur[330] and Uncle Elmer[331] write letters of greeting (in German) with a short sketch of their personal family history and work to Conrad Ludwig Spamer who would immensely appreciate it.

Carl Ober's father did indeed send a letter; a file copy was transcribed into the "Spamer Families of Baltimore". As C. A. E. Spamer noted at the end of the letter, he had had the letter translated into German to be sent to Cousin Conrad Ludwig. The letter is as follows: [332]

Baltimore, Md.
25 Juli 1911

Herr Conrad Ludwig Spamer
Eichelsachsen, Kreis Schotten
Oberhessen, Germany

My Dear Cousin Conrad Ludwig,

Your grandfather, Hampeter Spamer, and my grandfather, Conrad Spamer, were brothers. Your father, Leonhardt and my father, Heinrich Conrad Ludwig were first cousins which establishes the relationship of second cousins between us.

My father and grandfather emigrated to America nearly eighty years ago and intercourse between the Spamers in America and the Spamers in Germany was thereby interrupted and, so far as I know, not resumed. This has been a source of regret to me and I have always entertained the hope and wish to visit my father's birthplace and hunt up and reestablish friendly relations with the descendants of the brothers, Conrad, Hampeter, and Leonhardt. But the opportunity did not come to me during the course of a busy life in my profession with church work and many other outside matters occupying the spare moments. A way was to be provided for one of my immediate family to make the visit.

My youngest child, Carl Ober Spamer, animated by a desire for world wide travel, started in 1905 on a six years journey and, by the time he had reached Germany, I had furnished him with some information my father had given me before he died, of his native place and childhood days in Oberschmitten.

A few days ago, we had the great pleasure of reading a lengthy account of the visit which my son and his wife had recently made to Oberschmitten, Eichelsdorf and Eichelsachsen where he met you and your family, to Herr Burgomeister [sic] Diehlman [sic] and family and had worshipped in the church of his ancestors. The kind reception which you have to them warmed my heart towards all of you.

I will give you a short sketch of my father's family and my own. My father's brothers and sister (no other children so far as I know) are

Christian Heinrich
Charles
George
Catherine — all of whom are dead, leaving children and grandchildren except George who never married

An interesting circumstance is the fact that your name is the same as that of my father, viz: Conrad Ludwig, the name Heinrich, he rarely used and was generally called Ludwig, or in English, Louis. He married Julia Martin, originally of Mitan, Russia in 1842, she having come to America when a little child. Both are now deceased—father lived to be 83 years and mother 77. They had eleven children of whom I am the eldest:

1. Christian Augustus Emanuel, born September 25, 1843, an attorney at law.
   The others were:
2. Olivia, a retired schoolteacher, residing in Baltimore, Maryland
3. Amelia—deceased
4. Matilda— ″
5. Edith who died very young—the others lived to adult age.
6. Adolph, an engineer, married and has one child, Rosalie. They live in Washington, District of Columbia.
7. Arthur Ludwig—Clerk of the United States Court for the District of Maryland, living in Baltimore. He is married and has two children, Elva and Morris, and besides Alfred who died in babyhood.
8. Reuben O. —a farmer, a widower with two children, Lawrence and Marion. They live in the State of Connecticut.
9. Lillie, married Walter Watters, a farmer. They have five children :
   Archer
   Lawrence
   Eugene
   Alvin
   Agatha
   They live in Harford County, Maryland

10. Elmer—a farmer married and has three children : Jasper Edith Evelyn

11. Miriam, married Joseph J. Robinson who is nearly blind. They have six children:
Olivia
Lewis
Harold
Margary [sic]
Ralph
Miriam
They live in Baltimore City, Maryland

I married Abbie Ober Smith of Boston, Massachusetts in 1870. She died in 1886. I am a widower. We had five children Lois Mae Daisy who died very young
Bona Pearl
Roy died at 4½ years of age and Carl Ober, my youngest, the world wide traveller, not yet 27 years old

From this you will see that Uncle Conrad Ludwig's descendants are quite numerous—eleven children and grandchildren—thirty-six in all.

I served as a Union Soldier in the Civil War between the States in 1864 and 1865 and was with General Grant in his great campaign in Virginia which finally ended the war. I have been active in church work being a member of the New Jerusalem Church and Secretary of the General Convention for the past 21 years besides holding other official positions in the church.

I have been practicing law since 1870 and our firm, Hinkley, Spamer and Hisky, is one of the oldest in Maryland.

My son writes me of the deep impression his visit to his grandfather's birthplace made upon him and especially when he contemplated the fact that he was worshipping in the identical church where my father was confirmed.

My own thoughts are happy ones that my youngest child had been welcomed among the German relatives of his grandfather and I sincerely hope that the way has been opened for continuing the delightful intercourse between us. I was especially pleased to see the photographs of yourself and family which my son sent.[333]

I learn that you have not been feeling very well lately and I trust that you will soon recover and be returned to good health.

I, myself, have suffered a great deal from rheumatism, especially since my return from Japan a year ago and I am obliged to be very careful of my health.

[333] The present location of these photos, if they survive, has not been determined.

As I do not write German, I am having this letter translated by Mr. Stiffers (?)[334] who is a clerk at the German Consulate. I can read German print and manuscript, but cannot write or speak the language correctly.

Please give my affectionate regards to your wife, your son, Otto, and daughters, Emma and Eliza and also to all the other members of the family including all the children and grandchildren.

I shall be most happy to receive a letter from you whenever it may please you to write.

With cordial greetings and hearty wishes for your welfare and prosperity,

Affectionately yours,

Abbie Ober (Smith) Spamer (1841–1886)
(wife of Christian Augustus Emanuel Spamer)

In the "Spamer Families of Baltimore", her given name is spelled "Abbey". Her branch of the Smith family is not related to the Smith family of the Eastern Shore of Maryland, which is the subject of Part II of the present genealogy.

In the "Tyler Genealogy" she is listed as Abigail Ober Spamer, born 7 July 1841.[335] In the 1870 U.S. census she is indexed as "Adelaide". In her obituary published in the Baltimore Sun, her name is Abbie Ober Spamer. Her name as inscribed on the family grave marker is "Abbie Ober Smith Spamer". She is buried in Lot 138 S½, Section X, Loudon Park Cemetery, Baltimore, Maryland.

She was an active member, and on the board of directors of, the Charity Organization Society[336] of Baltimore.

Abbie Smith Spamer's mother is given in the Tyler Genealogy as Abigail Kimball (1 March 1799–Dec 1879). She may have remarried and widowed, as she is noticed in an 1876 item in the Baltimore Sun:[337]

[334] Apparently this is A. M. Spamer's query in transcribing the letter, which may indicate that the original (that is, C. A. E. Spamer's file copy or draft) was handwritten.

[336] The Charity Organization Society was a national group founded in 1876, a volunteer organization in service to the needy; specifically, "to suppress begging, on the one hand, and on the other to help the poor of the city efficiently." Their motto was, "Not Alms, But a Friend". They promoted the Americanization of immigrants and the development of self-reliance skills in community environments. The organization divided its work by the wards of the city, with those having proportionately fewer poor people joined together. Each ward had a governing board and a corps of visitors. 143. Bona Pearl Spamer (1877–1949)

In their younger years, both Lois Mae and Bona Pearl attended the Chapel Hill School, in Waltham, Massachusetts, near Boston.[338]

Neither Lois Mae nor Bona Pearl married, and they lived together all of their lives. While their father was alive they resided in his household; after his death they lived at 2113 N. Calvert St., Baltimore, Maryland. Later, they resided at 4109 Alto Rd., Baltimore.

As noted in the entry for C. A. E. Spamer, Lois Mae Spamer accompanied her father on a trip to the Far East. She applied for a passport at the same time as which her father had applied for one.[339] Her father also acted as witness of identification on her passport, as she had on his.

Bona Pearl Spamer was Secretary of the American League of New Church Young People's Societies, at least during 1898-1901.[340]

Around January 1976, Marie Stein Strange wrote to Katharine S. Spamer in reply to some questions about the family:

> I never knew Bona Pearl Spamer's age, and didn't ever remember meeting her, but I do know that they were friendly with your father's family.[341]

Lois Mae Spamer and Bona Pearl Spamer are buried in Lot 138 S½, Section X, Loudon Park Cemetery, Baltimore, Maryland. Bona Pearl was buried 23 November 1949. Lois Mae was buried 23 June 1959.

Messages From the President of the United States Transmitting Reports of the United States Food Administration and the United States Fuel Administration For the Year 1917.* 85th Congress, 2nd Session, House of Representatives Document 837, 1918, p. 61.)

[343] This may not be his entire service record, but is as much information as has thus far been found in Internet records and the U.S. census (for 1930). Frieda Spamer accompanied her husband to his duty stations overseas.

[344] An undocumented record is given for Spamer as consul in The Netherlands for 1926-1929, but there is reference to "Spamer (The Hague)" in Vol. 6 (4 Jul-30 Dec 1924) of the diaries of William R. Castle (1878-1963), an American diplomat who was ambassador to Japan in 1930 at least; Castle's papers are in the Houghton Library, Harvard University (finding aid accessed 16 Mar 2006 through Harvard University Library OASIS: Online Archival Search Information System).

1916 passport application of Frieda Lorenz Spamer[345]: 2101 North Calvert St., Baltimore, Maryland
ca. 1916: Basel, Switzerland
1918 draft registration: 308 Willard[?] Courts, Washington, D.C.
ca. 1922: Medan, Sumatra [Indonesia]
1924-1929: Amsterdam, The Netherlands
1930 census: U.S. Consulate General, International Settlement, Shanghai, China
1933-1936: Nagasaki, Japan
1937 and 1939 U.S. immigration: 4109 Alto Road, Windsor Hills, Baltimore Co., Maryland (home of his unmarried sisters, Lois Mae Spamer and Bona Pearl Spamer)
In retirement: Washington, D.C. [apartment]
In later retirement: 26 Mountain Ave., Summit, Union Co., New Jersey

Family information gives Carl Ober Spamer's birth date as 12 July 1884; but his own, handwritten (not typed) information on his military draft registration card in 1918 gives the date of 21 July. He signed his name in letters to family as "Carl Ober", thus his usage of a double name is likewise used here.

After the death of Carl Ober's mother, he was raised by a housekeeper, Miss Emily W. Waterhouse. She also taught Sunday School, which was attended by some of the Spamer children. A. M. (Andy) Spamer noted this in correspondence with Katharine S. Spamer in 1983: [346]

> Was my sister's[347] memory correct, did you and your brother[348] take us to Sunday School? My earliest recollections of this Sunday School was [sic] sitting on the little chairs at the front of the room and that Miss Waterhouse was the teacher. Only a few years ago I learned that she was C.A.E.'s house keeper and she raised Carl Ober after the death of his mother. [349] But I cannot remember who took us to Sunday School.

Frieda Lorenz emigrated from Germany to the U.S. at the age of sixteen, arriving in Baltimore, Maryland, on 28 May 1896 aboard the S.S. Neckar[350], which had embarked from Bremen, Germany, on 14 May. She was enroute to Auburn, Indiana. She had not traveled with anyone else by the name of Lorenz, but possibly was in the company of two members of the Brettschneider family, a woman and a young girl [349] Information about Miss Waterhouse is taken from the 1900 and 1910 U.S. censuses. Emily W. Waterhouse was born in Aug 1849 in Pennsylvania. In the 1900 census she is listed a "boarder", and in the 1910 census as "Friend", in the home of C. A. E. Spamer. She has not been located in the 1920 census.

[350] The S.S. Neckar was the first of two steamships of this name. This Neckar was built by Caird & Co., Greenock, Scotland, for Norddeutscher Lloyd Steamship Co., Bremen. She was launched 11 Oct 1873 and began service in Apr 1874 usually on the Bremen-Southampton-New York route. She displaced 3,122 tons, was 107.7 m long 12.2 m beam, 1 funnel, screw propulsion with a service speed of 13.5 knots. In 1886 she was rebuilt at Bremerhaven for the East Asia Imperial Mail. She was scrapped in 1896 in Genoa. (>> Edwin Drechsel, Norddeutscher Lloyd, Bremen, 1857-1970: History, Fleet, Ship Mails, Cordillera Publishing Co., Vancouver, 1995.)

who were enroute to Chicago, Illinois; Brettschneider being the name of the second husband of Frieda's mother (see the Lorenz Family collateral genealogy). But she seems not to have been in the company of her mother. An interesting observation from the Neckar's passenger manifest is that immediately after the line on which Frieda Lorenz is listed there are five people (a woman and four children by the name of Keil or Heil[351]) who are enroute to Fort Wayne, Indiana. Frieda possibly was traveling in their company because Auburn is a small town near to Fort Wayne.

The following details about Frieda Lorenz are recorded in the passenger manifest for the Neckar: her given name is spelled "Frida"; no occupation; aged 16; last residence was "Nd. Hasslau, Sachs." [Niederhasslau, Sachsen[352]]; final destination in the U.S. was "Auburn, Ind." [353]; she held a ticket to that destination; passage was paid for by her brother-in-law; she carried $62.00; she never had been to the U.S.; and she was joining her brother-in-law who was in Indiana. The identity of her brother-in-law is not known, but if the relationship is reported correctly he must have been the husband of an unidentified sister to Frieda.

Nothing further is known of Frieda Lorenz until she meets Carl Ober Spamer probably in Japan or China sometime during the latter part of the first decade of the 1900s. Also see Additions & Corrections

Carl Ober Spamer applied for a U.S. passport on 5 January 1907 in Los Angeles Co., California. [354] He gave his residence as Baltimore, Maryland, and requested that the passport be sent to him at 936 Wall St., Los Angeles, California. He indicated that he was a student.

On 6 April 1910 Carl Ober Spamer filed with the U.S. Consulate at Kobe, Japan, another passport application; presumably it was a renewal or it was to serve as a travel visa. [355] On that application, the clerk indicated that "Mr. Spamer registered as an American Citizen at this Consulate on November 23[?], 1909." Carl Ober Spamer stated on the application that he resided permanently in Baltimore, Maryland, and that he had last departed from the U.S. on 9 March 1907.[356] He further stated that he was a student "temporarily sojourning at Takamatsu, Shikoku, Japan" and that "I desire the passport for the purpose of travelling in Turkey & Russia."

[356] According to a letter written by Carl Ober's father in July 1911, the young "world traveler" had been overseas since 1905. The date could have been in error, or possibly it was mistranscribed by the compiler of the "Spamer Families of Baltimore", in which the letter appears. The letter was written aboard a steamer awaiting to depart, but delayed by onloading heavy freight. also included on it a message "Ma B" is likely Amelia Burr Blakeman, mother-in-law of Reuben O. Spamer [No. 88] who was C. A. E. Spamer's brother. Like many of the Spamers, the Blakemans were closely involved in the affairs of the New Church. C. A. E. and Lois Mae Spamer's trip may have been some time in planning, inasmuch as passport application records indicate that they both applied for passports on 15 September 1907 in Baltimore, Maryland.

their future mailing address, in care of Carl Ober, which is presumably the same address as which Carl Ober wrote on his passport application at Kobe: "Sambancho, Takamatsu, Sanuki, Shikoku, Japan". Lois Mae further indicated in her letter that they—it is not clear whether she meant herself and her father, or if Carl Ober was to travel with them—would be in Manilla (Philippines) at Christmastime. Lois Mae Spamer and her father returned to the U.S. on 14 May 1910, as recorded by the passenger list for the S.S. Mongolia, arriving in San Francisco, California, from Hong Kong. A year later, Carl Ober would return to the U.S. through New York in the company of his German-born bride, Frieda. Having married a U.S. citizen, Frieda automatically became a U.S. citizen herself.

There is no record at this time for the marriage date of Carl Ober Spamer and Frieda Lorenz, but the 1930 U.S. census records that when they were married they were 26 and 30 years of age, respectively, thus they married in about 1910. Carl Ober's U.S. passport application at the U.S. Consulate in Kobe, Japan, on 6 April 1910, did not give any information relating to a wife, where such information would be included on the application. Exactly where Carl Ober and Frieda met is also not clear. He was a teacher in Japan, apparently in mission work; she was a missionary in China. The letter (aforementioned) by his sister, Lois Mae, written while she and her father were enroute to Japan in 1909, mentioned nothing of a forthcoming marriage. We may further infer that because C. A. E. and Lois Mae Spamer arrived back in the U.S. from Hong Kong in May 1910, that the purpose of their visit to Carl Ober did not include a wedding.

We now know that Carl Ober and Frieda married sometime between April 1910 and mid-1911. U.S. immigration records list Carl Ober and Frieda Spamer when they arrived in the port of New York on 31 August 1911 aboard the S.S. Rhein,[358] having sailed from Bremen, Germany, on 19 August. While in Germany, we know that Carl Ober visited the area around the Spamer ancestral towns of Oberschmitten and Ulfa. He wrote a letter to his family describing his visit,[359] but curiously it includes no mention of his wife, Frieda (who may have been visiting her relatives elsewhere in Germany).

Frieda Lorenz Spamer's work in China is reported to have been on behalf of the Methodist Episcopal Church, for which she had worked for five years at the Kucheng Boarding School, Fushken Province.[360] However, other records of her overseas work report that she was in the service of the New Church (as was her husband). What little record we have of the Spamers' missionary work is from American newspaper accounts after Carl Ober and Frieda had married and returned to the U.S. They occasionally spoke to church and civic groups about their work. A few examples that have come to my attention are as follows:

- On 12 April 1915, under the auspices of the Women's Missionary Society, Frieda Spamer spoke about her China experiences to the Fourth Presbyterian Church at 13th and Fairmont Sts., Washington, D.C.[361]

When Carl Ober and Frieda Spamer travelled through Germany in 1911 during their extended honeymoon trip returning from Japan to the United States, they brought presents to their family members. They will tell in an interesting and instructive way of life amongst these peoples."[365]

During 1912-1914, Carl Ober Spamer attended the Law School of the University of Maryland, receiving after a three-year program the Bachelor of Laws degree in 1914.[366] Both he and his wife, Frieda, were graduates of George Washington University, Washington, D.C., in 1916.[367] Carl Ober received an M.A. degree; his thesis is titled, "A Survey of the Leading Duties of the American Consular Officer". In what field Frieda studied, or the degree that she earned, are not known at this time.

Frieda Lorenz Spamer applied for a U.S. passport on 25 August 1916, intending to travel with her husband to his consulate duty station in Basel, Switzlerland, and intending also to visit Norway, Denmark, and Germany enroute to Switzerland.[368] They stated that they would depart the U.S. on 6

September 1916 aboard the S.S. Frederic VIII.[369] Because of Carl Ober's diplomatic status, his passport information from this time is presumably in the records of the former U.S. Consular Service, which have not been examined. Also see Additions & Corrections

After Carl Ober Spamer entered the U.S. Consular Service (in 1924 merged with the U.S. Diplomatic Service and re-established as the U.S. Foreign Service[370]), he and Frieda spent the rest of his career overseas, until his retirement in 1936. They occasionally returned to the U.S. Immigration and travel records include some of their debarkations and embarkations, as noted in the paragraphs that follow herein.

U.S. immigration records list Carl and Frieda Spamer arriving in the port of New York on 4 July 1917 aboard the S.S. Espagne,[371] which sailed from Bordeaux, France. The information lists the Spamers' U.S. address as "Consular Bureau Department of State Washington DC".

While he was consul at Medan, Sumatra, as part of his duties Carl Ober communicated with Wilfred H. Schoff, a researcher at the Philadelphia Commercial Museum who was studying the nature of gum camphor and its cultural effects. The communiqués are noted here as an example of a consul's duties in providing materials and information, mentioned of course because Carl Ober Spamer is credited. Schoff published a paper in 1922, in which he noted, regarding the production of imitation camphor:[372]

> . . . I am informed by C. O. Spamer, American Consul at Medan, Sumatra, who has kindly supplied me specimens of the true Dryobalanops camphor and camphor oil, and of the counterfeit Chinese production.

"special" handling due to Carl Ober Spamer's position as a consul; also the fact that it was approved the same day as the application was made.

Other references to both flags are noted from Internet sources. Frederick VIII (1843-1912) was King of Demark, 1906-1912.

They identify export markets, negotiate international agreements, and interpret US policies and interests for foreign governments, opinion leaders and public. They provide a wide range of service to American tourists, businessmen and residents. They issue visas to foreign nationals, provide development assistance, and arrange cultural exchanges." [372] Wilfred H. Schoff, "Camphor", Journal of the American Oriental Society, vol. 42 (1922), p. 357. Dryobalanops camphora is the plant source of true camphor, which commands high prices; thus not surprisingly other parts of the world produce imitations based upon other kinds of plants and sell them as though they were made from the authentic Indonesian plant. The imitation Chinese camphor is noted to be produced from Blumea balsamifera.

In a postscript, Schoff wrote: [373]

> After this paper was presented to the [American Oriental] Society, additional details were received through Consul Spamer at Medan, including an unpublished Batak legend [regarding the origin of camphor and how it may be successfully located], which it seems worth while to append.

> The consul has also obtained from Bona haju (chief of camphor expeditions) Pa Tambok of Pardomuan (Barus) an account of the legendary origin of camphor as told by the Bataks.

Similarly while C. O. Spamer was the American Consul in Medan, he reported upon the trade in second-hand newspapers in the region, hundreds of tons of which came from the United States. A Kansas City newspaper summarized from this report from an account originally in The New York Times: [374]

> These newspapers are largely used by Chinese tradesmen for wrapping and packing goods for local delivery. The market demands clean, full sized newspapers, without colored supplements, packed in bales of 250 kilos (about 550 pounds). The market at present is somewhat overstocked and prices are low, but the leading importers will be glad to receive samples and prices of old newspapers offered by American houses.

A passenger list published in The New York Times on 1 August 1925 lists Mr. and Mrs. C. O. Spamer among other passengers aboard the S.S. Nieuw Amsterdam,[375] departing New York for England, France, and Holland.[376]

Carl Ober Spamer is mentioned in a 1927 newspaper article about dried-fruit imports in The Netherlands, which is another example of a consul's duties: [377]

> In a report prepared by American consul C. O. Spamer at Amsterdam, Netherlands, it is stated that imports of dried fruit advanced considerably during 1926, the total for that year being 13,373 short tons, valued at $2,180,146. America's share in this trade increased from 7618 tons in 1925 to 8994 tons in 1926. While imports of dried apples and prunes advanced, miscellaneous dried fruit imports decreased.

U.S. immigration records list Carl Ober and Frieda Spamer arriving in the port of New York on 11 August 1928 aboard the S.S. Volendam,[378] having sailed from Rotterdam on 1 August. He is listed as the "American Consul for The Netherlands at Amsterdam".

U.S. immigration records list Carl Ober and Frieda Spamer arriving in the port of New York on 21 September 1929 aboard the S.S. America,[379] having sailed from Southampton, England, on 12 September. Their U.S. address is given as 4109 Alto Ave., Baltimore, Maryland, which was the residence of Carl Ober's unmarried sisters, Lois Mae and Bona Pearl Spamer.

At about the time that Carl Ober Spamer was transferred to the American consulate in Nagasaki, Japan, Frieda Spamer paid a visit back to the United States. She is listed in the ship's passenger list for the S.S. Washington, [380] arriving in New York on 1 June 1933, having sailed from Hamburg, Germany, 24 May. Her U.S. address is given only as "Dept. of State, Washington, DC".

Very shortly after their arrival in Nagasaki, Japan, a newspaper article from October 1933 mentions the Spamers' attendance at the wedding of the American vice-consul in Yokohama.[381]

An informal history of the American Consulate at Nagasaki, Japan, takes brief note of the Spamer tenure there:

> Glen Bruner, a local Methodist missionary, was serving as Vice-Consul in Nagasaki at the time of [Consul Henry] Hitchcock's death [1 March 1933]. He operated the consulate there until October 1933, when Carl O. Spamer of Maryland came to assume the office of Consul. Bruner remained as Vice-Consul. Little is known of Spamer's three year tenure in Nagasaki. He served as Consul

After World War I the Amerika was seized by the U.S. government and turned over to the United States Line and renamed S.S. America. (In 1940, the ship was refitted as the Army troop ship *Edmund B. Her maiden voyage, New York-Southampton-Hamburg, embarked 10 May 1933, thus Frieda Spamer must have sailed on the Washington's second voyage, returning to New York. The Washington was 24,289 tons, 705 ft long, 86 ft broad; a twin-screw vessel capable of 22.7 kts. In 1941, she was conscripted by the U.S. Navy and renamed U.S.S. Mount Vernon, serving as a troop transport. She was purchased by the U.S. Government on 26 Sep 1942, and subsequently altered to 22,846 tons. In 1945 she was named again S.S. Washington, released from Navy service 18 Jan 1946, delivered to the U.S. Maritime Commission, and laid up. She saw post-war service with the United States Line, reconditioned in 1948 to 23,626 tons, and again in 1949, 29,627 tons. In Oct 1951 she was handed over to the U.S. Maritime Commission for the Military Sea Transportation Service, and laid up in the Hudson River Feb 1953. She was sold 30 Jun 1964 to Union Metals and Alloys, New York, arrived in Kearney, New Jersey, 28 Jun 1964, and broken up by Lipsett, Inc. U.S. immigration records list Carl and Frieda Spamer arriving in the port of New York on 28 November 1935 aboard the S.S. City of Hamburg,[383] having sailed from Hamburg, Germany, 16 November. Their U.S. address is given as the Alto Rd. residence of Carl Ober's sisters.

U.S. immigration records list Carl and Frieda Spamer arriving in the port of Baltimore, Maryland, on 1 May 1937 aboard the S.S. City of Hamburg, having sailed from Hamburg, Germany. This immigration record is their return to the U.S. upon Carl's retirement from the Foreign Service. Again, their U.S. address is given as the Alto Rd. residence of Carl's sisters.

After their return to retirement in the U.S., Carl Ober and Frieda Spamer also maintained an apartment in Washington, D.C. Sara Whiteford Giles, a distant relation (her aunt married Jasper Noble Spamer [No. 154] of "Rockland", a Spamer homestead), recalls: [384]

> I also remember that Carl and Freida had a lovely apartment in Washington after their return from Japan and I remember them inviting my friends and I there for dinner one evening. Aunt Eliz. told how on visits to the USA before retirement they used to come to Rockland and camped in a tent set up in a scenic area so Cousin Carl could paint.

Sometime during Carl Ober Spamer's career he prepared woodcut illustrations for Souls Undaunted, a 23-page booklet of poetry written by leprosy sufferers in Oshima, Japan, published in English translation by Carl Ober and Frieda Spamer were members of the American Association of Nagasaki, which had been established by consul Henry Hitchcock on 4 July 1923. The purpose of the Association was, among other objectives, "to unite the Americans in this community in upholding the ideals and and maintaining the traditions of the United States" (Lane R. Earns, "We Americans Have Carried On Much As Usual: The American Association of Nagasaki", website http://www.uwosh.edu.home_pages/faculty_staff/earns/amassoc.html (accessed 30 Nov 2004). The fate of the Nagasaki Foreign Settlement ismore ignoble, having fallen into disrepair, disinterest, and destruction in the decades after World War II: "After World War II, the former foreign settlement was little more than an empty shell, and few of the Japanese inhabitants of the old buildings had any interest in its history or the stories of the people who once lived there. The demolition of historic buildings and their replacement with modern structures continued unchecked, and by the end of the 20th century less than one tenth of the buildings of the former foreign settlement remained." the American Mission to Lepers in New York.[385] The booklet is undated, although the American Mission to Lepers was begun in 1917, having formerly been the American Chapter of the United Kingdom's Mission to Lepers.[386] The booklet's existence, heretofore not mentioned in family affairs, reveals an artistic side to Carl Ober also not otherwise recorded—although a recent (2008) recollection by a family member states simply that "Cousin Karl [sic] . . . was an Artist."[387] His personal and professional interests in the Orient and in Christian missions do not help date the booklet because he held life-long interests in these areas. Nevertheless, the booklet represents one of numerous small publications that have come to be known as "leprosy literature", which burgeoned in the 1930s, which helps date Souls Undaunted, probably circa 1935.[388] Considering that Carl Ober Spamer was the American consul in Nagasaki during 1933-1936, it stands to reason that he and his wife, former Christian missionaries in the Orient, would have been interested in the American missionary affairs at Oshima (relatively nearby to the northeast, on the Inland Sea) while they lived in Nagasaki. I obtained my copy of Souls Undaunted serendipitously in 2007; whatever else might be discovered that relates to the Spamers' activities while they worked overseas during most of their lives will likewise be serendipitous finds. Regretfully, there is no known record of the Spamers' reaction to the destruction of Nagasaki in August 1945, when the second atomic bomb was dropped on Japan. Also see Additions & Corrections

The Spamers did return overseas at least once after his retirement from the Foreign Service. They are listed on passenger manifest of the merchant ship S.S. American Farmer,[389] arriving in New York on 17

[385] Souls Undaunted: Verses from the Christian Poetry Club at the Hospital for Lepers, Oshima, Japan (Lois Erickson, translator; illustrated by C. O. Spamer) (American Mission to Lepers, New York, no date). A copy in Earle Spamer's possession includes a printing code 45-23-10, which may not reflect a date of publication given the assumed date of circa 1935 and the restrictive conditions of the war that soon enveloped the world. However, several university libraries have catalogued this title with a 1945 date, perhaps based upon the presumption of a dated printing code. The booklet also seems to have been reprinted, as one was noticed for sale (on an Internet website) with a 1960 date. Another apparent reprinting carries a revised title: Escaped as a Bird: Verses From the Christian Poetry Club at the Oshima Leprosy Hospital in Japan (Lois Erickson, translator; illustrated by C.O. Spamer) (Leprosy Mission, London, 1970).

[386] In 1950, the American Mission to Lepers was renamed American Leprosy Missions, which continues to serve as a worldwide Christian faith-based charity, now focusing on sufferers of leprosy and Buruli ulcer. [388] Japan's "leprosy prevention law" of 1907, promulgated in 1931, confined leprosy sufferers for life in a national system of leprosaria, or "leper colonies"; one of them was on the small island of Oshima in Kagawa prefecture off the coast of Shikoku in the Inland Sea. The law was not repealed until 1996, forty years after effective drug treatments for the diseases had been developed. Particularly during the 1930s the culture of "leprosy literature" evolved. Patients–inmates–in the leper colonies disseminated their writings to a widely interested world group of readers, venues ranging from established literary journals to small pamphlets distributed by health, civic, and ecclesiastical institutions and organizations. In the process, the publications not only promoted but legitimized the system of confinement. (>>Susan L. Burns, "Making Illness into Identity: Writing 'Leprosy Literature' in Modern Japan", Japan Review, vol. 16 (2004), pp. 191-211; Calvin Sims, "Oshima Journal; After 90 Years, Small Gestures of Joy for Lepers", New York Times, 5 Jul 2001.)

[389] The S.S. American Farmer was built in 1924 for the American International Shipbuilding Corp., Hog Island, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. She was a 7,430-ton merchant ship, 436 ft long, 58 ft in breadth; a single-screw, steam turbine vessel capable of 15 knots. She was flagged under the American Merchant shipping line. In 1940 she was renamed S.S. Ville de Liege and was torpedoed and sunk by a German submarine in April 1941. Carl Ober Spamer (1884–1957) [No. 145] was the U.S. Consul at Amsterdam, The Netherlands, during 1924–1929 (consulate at left). He had married his wife, Frieda Lorenz of Germany, ca. 1910 apprently while they were in Japan or China working as missionaries. She is seen (right) in her passport photo, August 1916.

When C. O. Spamer was the U.S. Consul in Nagasaki, Japan, 1933–1936, he prepared wood-cut illustrations for a collection of Christian poetry written by leprosy sufferers at a colony in Oshima, published by the American Mission to Lepers in New York. The cover and title-page of the booklet are reproduced here.

A few of the ships aboard which Carl Ober Spamer is known to have sailed are shown below.

S.S. Rhein, aboard which he arrived in New York on 19 August 1911

S.S. Nieuw Amsterdam, the vessel of this name built in 1906. C.O. Spamer departed New York aboard her on 1 August 1925

January 1939, having embarked from London on 6 January. Again, their U.S. address is given as the Alto Rd. residence of Carl Ober's sisters.

Later in their retirement, Carl Ober and Frieda Spamer lived at 26 Mountain Ave., Summit, Union Co., New Jersey.

Tyler Family
Collateral Genealogy
(52 descendants)

The genealogy of the Tyler family, as it relates to our Spamer lineage (specifically the direct lineage to Abbie Ober Smith), and as currently understood, is as follows:[391]

Descendants of Job Tyler

Generation No. 1

1. Job[1] Tyler was born about 1619. He married Mary.

Children of Job Tyler and Mary are:

+	2	i.	Moses[2] Tyler, born between 1641-1642 in Andover or Roxbury, Massachusetts; died 02 October 1727 in Andover, Massachusetts.
	3	ii.	Mary Tyler, born about 1644.
	4	iii.	Hopestill Tyler, born between 1645-1646.
	5	iv.	Tyler, died 28 January 1645/46. [Died in infancy.]
	6	v.	Hannah Tyler.
	7	vi.	John Tyler, born about 1650; died 28 September 1652 in Andover, Massachusetts.
	8	vii.	John Tyler, born 16 April 1653.

NOTES

1. Job Tyler (ca. 1619–)

His birth is attributed to have been in Shropshire, England, but without evidence; and his death is not recorded. "The first known of Job Tyler in this country may be found in the 'Rhode Island Collections', p. 92, as follows: 'Inhabitants admitted at the Towne of Nieu-Port since the 20th of the 3rd 1638 . . . Job Tyler.' No other person of this name is known except the Job Tyler who appeared soon after in the Massachusetts Bay Colony."[392] He is credited as the first immigrant settler of Andover, Massachusetts; a bronze tablet erected in 1901 gives his dates as 1619-1700.

Mary Tyler
(wife of Job Tyler)

When Mary married Job Tyler, she possibly was a widow Horton, according to a descendant of Job Tyler.[393]

Generation No. 2

2. Moses[2] Tyler [Quartermaster Moses Tyler] (Job[1]) was born between 1641-1642 in Andover or Roxbury, Massachusetts, and died 02 October 1727 in Andover, Massachusetts. He married (1) Prudence Blake 06 July 1666, daughter of George Blake and Dorothy. She was born 15 April 1647, and died 09 March 1688/89. He married (2) Sarah Hasey. She was born about 1647, and died 1718; she was from Malden, Massachusetts. He married (3) Mrs. Martha Fisk 25 July 1718. She was born about 1649, and died 13 February 1734/35.

Children of Moses Tyler and Prudence Blake are:

	10	i.	Moses[3] Tyler, born 16 February 1666/67.
	11	ii.	John Tyler, born 14 September 1669.
	12	iii.	Joseph Tyler, born 14 September 1671; died 1699 in Salem, Massachusetts, or the West Indies. He married Martha; born about 1674; died 11 February 1744/45.
+	13	iv.	Ebenezer Tyler, born 18 September 1673 in Rowley Village, Massachusetts; died 01 December 1743.
	14	v.	Job Tyler, born 16 December 1675.
	15	vi.	Samuel Tyler, born 02 May 1678.
	16	vii.	Nathaniel Tyler, born 14 August 1680.
	17	viii.	Jonathan Tyler, born 08 March 1682/83.
	18	ix.	James Tyler, born 07 May 1685.
	19	x.	Joshua Tyler, born 04 July 1688 in Boxford, Massachusetts.

Child of Moses Tyler and Sarah Hasey is:

	20	i.	Jacob[3] Tyler, born 09 January 169–.

NOTES

2. Moses Tyler (1641/42–1727)

In Andover, he was a selectman, committee-man, surveyor, constable, etc.; in 1685 he was on a committee to lay out highways. He acquired the title of "Quartermaster" after overseeing the town's ammunition supply, which function be began on 14 August 1696. His will was probated 13 October 1727 (Case 28452, Salem, Massachusetts).[394]

Sarah (Hasey) Tyler (ca. 1647–1718)
(wife of Moses Tyler)

She had several daughters by her first marriage, to Sprague.

12. Joseph Tyler (1671–1699)

"In 1692, he had been among the 'confessed' witches; led into it (with two cousins, Martha and Joanna Tyler) 'by Abigail Faulkner."[395] He died intestate.

Generation No. 3

13. Ebenezer[3] Tyler (Moses[2], Job[1]) was born 18 September 1673 in Rowley Village, Massachusetts, and died 01 December 1743. He married Elizabeth Walker, daughter of Richard Walker. She was born about 1668, and died 09 April 1745.

Children of Ebenezer Tyler and Elizabeth Walker are:

	21	i.	Samuel[4] Tyler, born 09 May 1694.
	22	ii.	Joseph Tyler, born 06 September 1695.
	23	iii.	Prudence Tyler, born 04 November 1697.
	24	iv.	Richard Tyler, born 14 February 1698/99.
+	25	v.	Nathaniel Tyler, born 14 April 1702 in Boxford, Essex Co., Massachusetts.
	26	vi.	Ebenezer Tyler, born 17 February 1702/03.
	27	vii.	Elizabeth Tyler, born 04 December 1708. She married Philip Chaplin 29 May 1738; he was from Boston, Massachusetts.
	28	viii.	David Tyler, born 05 June 1710.
	29	ix.	Sarah Tyler, born 05 June 1712.
	30	x.	Susanna Tyler, born 1713; died June 1750 in Boxford, Essex Co., Massachusetts. She married Jonathan Larrabbee; born 07 October 1713; he was from Boston, Massachusetts.

NOTES

Ebenezer Tyler (senior) (1673–1743) [No. 13] resided in Boxford, Massachusetts. "His name is on the tax list of 1711 in Boxford; also in 1714; in 1721 he deeds thirty-seven acres to his son Samuel."[396]

Philip Chaplin, husband of Elizabeth Tyler [No. 27], was probably the son of William and Martha Chaplin.[397]

Susanna Tyler (1713–1750) [No. 30] was recorded in 1744 as "widow and spinster" in Boston.[398]

Generation No. 4

25. Nathaniel[4] Tyler (Ebenezer[3], Moses[2], Job[1]) was born 14 April 1702 in Boxford, Essex Co., Massachusetts. He married Sarah Wood 14 May 1741. She was born about 1725; she was from Rowley, Massachusetts.

Children of Nathaniel Tyler and Sarah Wood are:

	31	i.	Jesse[5] Tyler, born 04 April 1742; died 07 October 1748.
	32	ii.	Eunice Tyler, born February 1742/43. She married Nathaniel Pettingill, III, 09 February 1769.
	33	iii.	Betty Tyler, born 01 September 1745.
	34	iv.	Nathaniel Tyler, born 04 October 1747.
	35	v.	Sarah Tyler, born 29 October 1749. She married Joseph Cross 05 March 1772.
	36	vi.	Jesse Tyler, born 08 March 1751/52.
	37	vii.	Simeon Tyler, born before 27 January 1754.
	38	viii.	Daniel Tyler, born September 1756 in Dracut, Massachusetts.
+	39	ix.	Polly Tyler, born 1770 in Methuen, Massachusetts; died 1847.

NOTES

The Tyler Genealogy lists the date of birth for Nathaniel Tyler (senior) [No. 25] as 4 April 1702 (Vol. 1, p. 44) and 14 April 1702 (Vol. 1, p. 75). "His name appears on a muster roll, dated Boston, 1755. He was a 'Centinel' and the service was from February 9, 1755, to March 31, 1755. In March, 1765, he was dismissed to the church at Dracut, Mass. He was a chairmaker."[399]

Generation No. 5

39. Polly[5] Tyler (Nathaniel[4], Ebenezer[3], Moses[2], Job[1]) was born 1770 in Methuen, Massachusetts, and died 1847. She married Samuel Kimball 08 April 1788, son of Nathaniel Kimball and Martha Coross. He was born 11 November 1750, and died 19 June 1825; he was from Methuen, Massachusetts.

Children of Polly Tyler and Samuel Kimball are:

Occupations of Adolph Noble Spamer (from U.S. censuses, Baltimore city directories, and other sources):

1870 census: Apprentice printer

1872 city directory: Clerk

1880 census: Fireman apprentice
1882 city directory: Engineer
1911 (correspondence of his father, C. A. E. Spamer): Engineer
[Locomotive engineer on the Pennsylvania Railroad, operating trains between Washington, D.C., and Philadelphia, Pennsylvania[407]]

Regarding his occupation at the time of the 1880 U.S. census, he might have been an apprentice fireman for the Baltimore & Potomac Railroad. A year later, a report in the Baltimore Sun notices that "A. Spamer" was one of four railroad firemen who were pall-bearers at the funeral of Bernard L. McKeever, another fireman killed while on the job on this railroad.[408]

In a commemorative volume for celebrations of the Baltimore Sesquicentennial in 1880, Adolph Spamer is noted in the "Public Schools" parade: "First company . . . First Lieutenant, Adolph Spamer."[409]

Nothing is had of Arthur L. Spamer's younger years at this time, nor of his personality, but when he was about 25 years of age he was mentioned in a letter by his brother, Elmer, written to sister, Olivia: [413]

> I know Arthur misses the nice dishes that Ma makes up, she sent me the letter to read, that Arthur wrote, he is having rough old time of it, that is in the line of eating as he says he gets only midlin onions potatos and dry bread you know that this is no favorite dish of his, but he is enjoying his self in other respects . . . .

Apparently even by 1880, Arthur, his sisters and parents desired to have a place in the country (Baltimore County) and the means by which to support themselves by it, but he also recognized that he knew not much about that life. After spending the Fourth of July with his brother, Elmer, he returned to Baltimore aboard a "long yellow stage coach, two horses and a leader", observing later in a letter to his brother: [414]

> Every evening I come home & often the last thing when leaving in the morning some one gives me a parting word on the country.—It[']s hard to tell who wants to go the most, Mother, Oliie or tilly. Mother's whole soul is longing to go. She thinks of it by day and dreams of it by night. She is constantly planning how to manage all sorts of little things that she thinks will pay, especially Poultry. Tilly sighs for it and I know she would work like a Turk, besides how healthy it wouldmake her. As it tis [sic] now, she has a hard time to keep up her strength.—Of course it would only be a place of recreation for Ollie, but she needs that badly enough, after teaching so hard all the year round.—Pap doesn't say much, but listens very attentively toa all I have to say, and I know from what he has said that nothing would delight him more than to work independently in the country. Dont be discouraged Elmer, I am sure I am not, I have determined to see the family settled in some nice little country home, if my health is spared and Providence permits. * * * The passengers all talked country with a will, everybody seemed to know all about it.—I felt as if I could say that certain fields had good corn in it, others had fine oats, some was poor land & others rich, but I didn't say much for fear I might show what a green city man I was.—
> Elmer dont let me hear you say you wish you were back in the City, for when it began to loom up I longed to be back with you. As long as I rode th[r]ough the pretty country out by a through Long Green [sic] I felt splendit, but as soon as I began to draw near town then Oh how I did wish I could gather up all our loved ones at Home & take them in the country with you and have a good time together. Never mind I think it[']s coming.—Keep on cooking and let me know of any small places you hear of, either for sale or rent.—We may be able to rent with previlege of buying.—I suppose as soon as all the crops are off & persons that intend selling will make it known I do wish I had a good horse & Jagger to drive around the country hunting up & looking at places.

Ella (Robinson) Spamer (1860–1915) (wife of Arthur L. Spamer)
and their children
Elva Lillian Spamer (1884–1949) [No. 149]
Morris Arthur Spamer (1891–1947) [No. 150]

Soon afterward, apparently, Arthur Spamer married, and his good job kept him in the city. It does not seem that he ever achieved his aspiration for a country home, although, as noted further below, he may have, some fifteen years later.

In 1891, "Arthur L. Spamer was appointed deputy clerk of the United States Circuit and District Courts to succeed Henry T. Meloney."[415]

On 16 November 1898, court officials Arthur L. Spamer and A. S. Dunham were appointed Special Masters in the foreclosure sale of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, in the U.S. Circuit Court, Baltimore, Maryland.[416] Their role was to review the accounts of the railroad and to report to the court on the nature and amounts of indebtedness and all claims against the company. In January 1900, the Special Masters cancelled the old B & O mortgage indebtedness and receivers' certificates, and most of the filed claims and demands against the railroad were adjusted and paid.[417] The first of their reports to the court was finally filed on 26 April 1899.[418]

A. L. Spamer was involved in the Maryland Association of Swedenborgians; one newspaper record in 1898 reported that he was a member of the Executive Committee of the organization,[419] and presumably he served in some capacity in the organization over a period of time.

In 1915, it seems that Arthur L. Spamer was in some measure a co-owner of a historic property in Kingsville, Baltimore Co., Maryland. The Maryland Historical Trust State Historic Sites survey includes this property amongst its architectural descriptions. Although there is "no historic name given" for it, it is also described as "Beverage House" (site BA-2404), located at 11901 Woodberry Place, Kingsville. The record of the chain of title for the property indicates that on 24 August 1899 it was sold by Andrew D. Jones and Albert A. Blakeney to the Mt. Vernon Woodberry Cotton Duck Co.; then on 3 September 1915 Arthur L. Spamer and Mt. Vernon Cotton Duck Mills, Inc., sold the property to Mt. Vernon Woodberry Mills, Inc.[420] At the time of the State Historic Sites survey, it was owned by Roy F. and Catherine D. Beverage, who had acquired title 14 June 1978. Just how Arthur Spamer figures into the chain of title, whether it was as a function of his position as a clerk of the U.S. District Court, or whether this was, at last, a country residence for him, is not clear. In any case, the brief description of the property (without accompanying photographic documentation), which then occupied approximately 0.26 acre, is as follows:[421]

[Statement of Significance]

Franklinville was a small mill community built on the banks of Little Gunpowder Falls, a suitable natural resource for a water powered industry. Franklinville Mill was constructed in 1826 and changed ownership several times during the nineteenth century. It was one of seven maryland [sic] properties incorporated by Mt vernon [sic] Woodberry Mills in 1899, a national industry specializing in the highly efficient production of cotton duck. Under the management of this large corporation, Franklinville with its Presbyterian church, dance hall and general store with post office, took on the character of a 19th century planned mill community. Company employees occupied duplex houses clustered around the mill and were provided with their essentials right there in the village. Franklinville's standard of living hinged upon the responsible management of Mt[.] Vernon Woodberry, Inc. which derived its success from the profits of each mill under its control.

This residence contains the materials and structural elements representative of most of the Franklinville mill houses. It is a very simple mid nineteenth century frame building. It was a duplex with a massive central chimney serving both families, most importantly for the cooking fireplace located in the basement kitchen of this bankhouse.

11901 Woodberry Place is a two story frame bank house with a central chimney projecting from a gable and roof which runs east to west. It is four bays wide of regular and even fenestration (altered 2/2 resting on a stone foundation of uncoarsed rubble. The present siding is asbestos shingling.

The main facade, facing north, is characterized by an enclosed full shed roof porch. It is four bays wide, the entrance occupying the two inner bays. The west end is blind, except for a central basement window in the foundation. The first story of the south facade extends to the south by an enclosed full shed roof porch, obliterating the basement and first floor. The e[a]st end is identical to the west end; earlier clapboards and nailers are visible through a hole in the siding.

Victoria (Hayden) Spamer (1869–)
(wife of Arthur Ludwig Spamer)

Regarding the family of Victoria Hayden, only her parents and siblings are thus far known, as follows:

John F.[1] Hayden was born October 1847 in Pennsylvania. He married Victoria about 1865. She was born September 1849 in Maryland.

Children of John Hayden and Victoria are:

i. Edith[2] Hayden, born September 1866 in Maryland.
ii. Maria M. Hayden, born February 1868 in Maryland.
iii. Victoria Ogle Hayden, born September 1869 in Maryland. She married Arthur Ludwig Spamer.
iv. Celeste Hayden, born October 1871 in Maryland.
v. John F. Hayden, Jr., born July 1875 in Maryland.

NOTES

Occupations of John F. Hayden (from U.S. censuses):
1870, 1880: Railroad clerk
1900: Bookkeeper

Residences of John F. Hayden (from U.S. censuses):
1870: 12th Ward, Baltimore, Maryland
1880: 363 Lanvale St., Baltimore, Maryland
1900: 1415 W. Lanvale St., Baltimore, Maryland

At the time of the 1870 census, an Elizabeth Hayden, aged 90, born (about 1790) in Maryland, also resided in the household.

The father and mother of Victoria Hayden were born in England and Maryland, respectively.

At the time of the 1900 census, John F. Hayden, Jr., was occupied as a cashier.

Spamer Family genealogy continues after the following collateral genealogy

Robinson Family
Collateral Genealogy
(12 descendants)

The genealogy of the Robinson family, as it relates to our Spamer lineage, and as currently understood, is as given below. It relates to the families both of Miriam J. Spamer Robinson [main Spamer genealogy, No. 91] and Arthur Ludwig Spamer [Spamer genealogy, No. 86].

Descendants of Joseph Robinson

Generation No. 1

1. Joseph J.[1] Robinson was born about 1816 in Maryland. He married Emily, born about 1820 in Maryland.

Children of Joseph Robinson and Emily are:

+	2	i.	Lewis[2] Robinson, born about 1838 in Maryland.
	3	ii.	George Robinson, born about 1840 in Maryland.
	4	iii.	Octavia Robinson, born about 1843–1847 in Maryland.
	5	iv.	Edwin Robinson, born about 1845 in Maryland.
	6	v.	Sarah Robinson, born about 1849 in Maryland.
	7	vi.	Joseph J. Robinson, Jr., born 1850 in Maryland; died 1924. He married (1) Mattie E. Byrne. He married (2) Miriam J. Spamer.
	8	vii.	Emma Robinson, born about 1854 in Maryland.
	9	viii.	Melvin or Melville Robinson, born about 1856 in Maryland.
	10	ix.	Ella Robinson, born March 1860 in Maryland; died 15 April 1915. She married Arthur Ludwig Spamer.
	11	x.	Anna Robinson, born about 1862 in Maryland.

See main Spamer genealogy for information about Joseph and Miriam (Spamer) Robinson, and for Ella (Robinson) and Arthur Ludwig Spamer and their descendants (Arthur Ludwig Spamer, No. 86; Miriam J. Spamer, No. 91).

NOTES

The ages of some the Joseph and Emily Robinson children are confused between the 1860 and 1870 censuses, and thus also their calculated dates of birth, as follows:

	1860	1870
Octavia	17	23
Sarah	12	18
Joseph	10	20

The ca. 1851 date of birth for Joseph J. Robinson, Jr. is accepted based on his age as given in successive censuses. The birth order of Octavia, Edwin, and Sarah are approximated based on the order of children's names as listed in successive censuses (when they do appear), with that of Octavia being the least well established.

At the time of the 1860–1880 U.S. censuses, Joseph J. Robinson (senior) (ca. 1816–) [No. 1] was a brickmaker, residing in the 1st Ward, Baltimore, Maryland. He has not been located in earlier censuses.

At the time of the 1860 census, George Robinson (ca. 1840–) [No. 3] was a brick maker, residing with his parents.

At the time of the 1900 census, Octavia Robinson (ca. 1850–) [No. 4] resided with her sister and brother-in-law, Arthur L. and Ella Spamer; her birth date is there listed as September 1842, aged 57 (other records indicate a date about 1850).

Generation No. 2

Also see Additions & Corrections

2. Lewis[2] Robinson was born August 1838 in Maryland. He married Mary A. Rusk, born August 1845 in Maryland.

Children of Joseph Robinson and Emily are:

12 i. Oscar[3] Robinson, born June 1871 in Maryland.

NOTES

2. Lewis Robinson (1838–)

At the time of the 1860–1880 U.S. censuses, Lewis Robinson was a lawyer (retired at the time of the 1900 census).

Residences of Lewis Robinson (from U.S. censuses):
1860: 1st Ward, Baltimore, Maryland (with parents)
1870: 1st Ward, Baltimore, Maryland (with wife)
1880: 1st District, Baltimore, Maryland
1900: 204 25th St., Baltimore, Maryland

At the time of the 1880 census, the household included Mary's parents, Levi and Mary M. Rusk, aged 69 and 67, respectively, and unmarried sisters, Emma E. and Clara A. Rusk, aged 32 and 34, respectively.

At the time of the 1900 census, the household included Mary's unmarried sisters, Emma and Clara Rusk.

12. Oscar Robinson (1871–)

Occupations of Oscar Robinson (from U.S. censuses and Baltimore city directory):
1899 city directory: Bookkeeper
1900 census: Manufacturer of sash doors
1910 census: Bookkeeper at a grain mill

Residences of Oscar Robinson (from U.S. censuses and Baltimore city directory):
1899 city directory: 918 N. Calhoun St. [probably his parent's address]
1900 census: 204 25th St., Baltimore, Maryland (with parents)

1910 census: 1716 PresburySt., Baltimore, Maryland (lodger)

In the 1899 Baltimore city directory, there is a listing for O. Oscar Robinson, employed at L. H. Robinson and Co., Catonsville; the firm is a manufacturer of sash, doors, and blinds, operated by Lewis H. Robinson, Jr., Walter P. Richardson, and O. Oscar Robinson, at 14 N. Schroder St. The city directory also lists Oscar W. Robinson, bookkeeper, 918 N. Calhoun St.

At the time of the 1910 census, Oscar Robinson was a lodger in the home of Esther Pruett, widow, aged 40. Also in the household were Esther's children, R. Edwin, 16, and B. Marion Pruett, 6, and her sister, Ida M. Myers, single, 44.

Additional Notes on Robinson

There may be some undiscernible conflict between different Oscar Robinsons and Lewis H. Robinsons, as follows:

An obituary notice appeared in the Baltimore Sun, reporting the death of Lewis H. Robinson, Sr., on 23 December 1876.[422] His age and address, however, are illegible in the copy seen, and the obituary was not located in any other issue of the newspaper.

A series of newspaper reports relate to Lewis H. Robinson, Jr., which could coincidentally refer to two different L.H.R. Jr.'s, although this is uncertain. An 1864 newspaper advertisement was seen in the Baltimore Sun, regarding a real estate transaction, signed Lewis H. Robinson, Jr., attorney for the owner; many more similar notices have been seen. During the 1870s–1880s, various*Sun* newspaper notices include the name of Lewis H. Robinson, Jr. In 1898, a series of newspaper articles report on legal charges brought against Lewis H. Robinson, an Immigrant Inspector employed by the U.S. Department of the Treasury. Over a period of time, extensive reports follow the charge and the investigation, which eventually resulted in the clearing of Robinson.[423] Thereafter, Robinson continues to appear in brief articles relating to immigration affairs.

The names mentioned may may be coincidental to those Robinsons who are the subject of this collateral genealogy.

In the 1910 census, Reuben's given name is spelled "Rueben". In the 1920 census his name is spelled "Ruben" and is misindexed as "Ryben". His name has been misspelled as "Ruben" in various family references, too.

He is buried in Section B, Putney Cemetery, Stratford, Fairfield Co., Connecticut. Also see Additions & Corrections

Mattie (Blakeman) Spamer (1868–1909)
(wife of Reuben Olive Spamer)

Mattie C. Blakeman's middle initial might have been "E."

The Blakeman family in Connecticut during the mid-1800s is numerous, and the identities of individuals have not been traced with the precision necessary to include a Blakeman collateral lineage in this genealogy. An early Blakeman genealogy (one which does not include Mattie Blakeman or her father, James Henry Blakeman) appears in A History of the Old Town of Stratford and the City of Bridgeport, Connecticut. The "Spamer Families of Baltimore" notes: [425]

> Mattie Blakeman was a classmate, at the Chapel Hill School in Boston[426], of Lois Mae and Bona Pearl.[427] They visited each other several times and on one visit Mattie was introduced to Reuben. After Mattie and Reuben were married, they lived on the large family farm owned by her father James Henry Blakeman. Reuben settled into taking care of the farm and producing milk. Reuben's son Laurence [sic], after attending Storrs Agricultural College, settled in the milk business and spent his whole life at it.

Mattie Blakeman spent two years in the Waltham New-Church School "and was baptized [into the New Church] soon after her return home by the Rev. Joseph Pettee." She was active in the affairs of the Connecticut Association of the New Church and was the first president of the Connecticut League. [428]

She was the postmaster for Stratford, Connecticut, at least in 1899, as indicated in the Stratford city directory.

Her sister, Grace Emily Blakeman, was the first wife of Sherman Willard Eddy. After Grace's death, he married Mattie's daughter, Marion Pearl Spamer [No. 153].

Mattie Blakeman Spamer's funeral service took place on 1 October 1909, conducted at her former home by Rev. Arthur Mercer of Brooklyn, New York. She is buried in Section B, Putney Cemetery, Stratford, Fairfield Co., Connecticut.

Collateral Genealogy
(11 descendants)

The genealogy of the Blakeman family, as it relates to our Spamer lineage and as currently understood, is as follows:

Descendants of James Blakeman

Generation No. 1

1. James[1] Blakeman was born about 1804 in Connecticut. He married Cornelia. She was born about 1808 in Connecticut.

Childrn of James Blakeman and Cornelia are:

2 i. David Y.[2] Blakeman, born about 1834 in Connecticut.

Generation No. 2

3. James Henry[2] Blakeman (James[1]) was born 20 November 1841 in Connecticut, and died 21 September 1918. He married Amelia J. Burr 24 October 1866, daughter of Isaac Burr and Mary Babbitt. She was born 19 March 1845 in Connecticut, and died 13 March 1913.

Children of James Blakeman and Amelia Burr are:

\+ 4 i. Mattie C.[3] Blakeman, born 1868 in Connecticut; died 1909.

\+ 5 ii. Grace Emily Blakeman, born 24 November 1876 in Stratford, Fairfield Co., Connecticut; died 27 March 1919 in Simsbury, Hartford Co., Connecticut.

NOTES

3. James Henry Blakeman (1841–1918)

Also see Additions & Corrections

At the time of the 1870 U.S. census, James Blakeman was a farmer. Also possibly residing in the same household at this time may have been his parents and a brother: James Blakeman, aged 66, farmer; Cornelia Blakeman, 62; and David Y. Blakeman, 36, who worked on the farm.

During the Civil War, James H. Blakeman served in Co. D, 17th Connecticut Volunteers. [429]

James Henry Blakeman is buried in Sec. C, Putney Cemetery, Stratford, Fairfield Co., Connecticut. His cemetery marker includes a Grand Army of the Republic flag.

The Putney Cemetery includes numerous Blakemans, but thus far they have not been researched for this genealogy.

Amelia J. (Burr) Blakeman (1845–1913)
(wife of James Henry Blakeman)

The ancestry of Amelia Burr may be traced back to Juhue Burr (1596–1670/72, born in Roxbury, Suffolk, England) and Elizabeth Cable (1600– , born in Springfield, Massachusetts).

Amelia Burr Blakeman is buried in Sec. C, Putney Cemetery, Stratford, Fairfield Co., Connecticut.

Generation No. 3

4. Mattie C.[3] Blakeman (James Henry[2], James[1]) was born 1868 in Connecticut, and died 1909. She married Reuben Olive Spamer, son of Heinrich Spamer and Julia Martin. He was born 16 March 1860 in Maryland, and died 1927 in Stratford, Fairfield Co., Connecticut.

Children of Mattie Blakeman and Reuben Spamer are:

6 i. Spamer[4]. [Died in infancy]

7 ii. Lawrence Blakeman Spamer, born 31 July 1893 in Stratford, Fairfield Co., Connecticut; died 12 September 1970 in Bridgeport, Fairfield Co., Connecticut. [No. 152 in main Spamer family genealogy]

NOTES

89. Elmer Jasper Spamer (1862–1947)

An 1868 record in the Baltimore Sun reported an accident that supposedly happened to "a son of Elmer Sparmer [sic]". The reporter seems to have erred, as the subject is surely Elmer Spamer himself:[432]

> Run Over and Injured—Two small boys, one a son of Elmer Sparmer, about four years old, residing at No. 358 Aisquith street, and the other a son of Mr. Stewart, residing on the same street, while playing on Harford avenue, near John street, about two o'clock on Saturday afternoon, were run over by a butcher's wagon, owned and driven by Mrs. Tablin, living on the Harford road. Mr. Sparmer's son had his left thigh fractured and his head severely injured. The other boy was injured about his arm and hand, but not severely. They both received the professional services of Dr. Norris.

Occupations of Elmer Jasper Spamer (from U.S. censuses and Baltimore Co. directories):

1880 census: Farm laborer
1900–1930 censuses: Truck farmer
1915 Baltimore County Farmer's Directory: Farmer

Residences of Elmer Jasper Spamer (from U.S. censuses and Baltimore Co. directories):

1880 census: 11th District, Baltimore Co., Maryland (in David and Susan Harlan household)
1900 census: 11th District, Baltimore Co., Maryland [This and the remainder of the citations refer to "Rockland"]
1910 census: W. Windy Edge Rd., Baltimore Co., Maryland
1915 Baltimore County Farmer's Directory: "R1 Fullerton Distr. 11"
1920 census: North Wind Ave. [Ferguson Rd.], Baltimore Co., Maryland
1930 census: Ferguson Rd., Baltimore Co., Maryland

Morris "Bud" Spamer [No. 217] also notes that Elmer Spamer resided his family until Elmer's death, when Bud was about 14 years of age.[433]

In the 1880 census Elmer Jasper Spamer's name is spelled "Sparmer".

In 1881, Elmer J. Spamer obtained "Rockland", a 10-room stone residence on Ferguson Road in Perry Hall[434], Baltimore Co., Maryland. He was 19 years of age and thus below the age of majority; it was in fact relatives who pooled resources to acquire the property, whom Elmer subsequently repaid to acquire ownership. Nancy Spamer MicKey inquired of Morris "Bud" Spamer about the age and ownership issues, with the following comment received from him:[435] Also see Additions & Corrections

> I did ask him about how a 19 year old could buy a farm of that size. He said that he was told that several of the older family members pitched in to buy the farm and lived there until they died. He also told me that Elmer did farm work for Bettie[']s family and saved his money to buy the farm.

In one example from public records, properties were transferred to Elmer Spamer in 1886 from his brother and sister-in-law, Arthur Ludwig and Ella Robinson Spamer, and from Levi Ferguson (granduncle of Elizabeth Ferguson Spamer, wife of Elmer's son, Jasper). The real estate transfer was noticed in the Baltimore Sun:[436]

> Arthur L. Spamer and wife to Elmer J. Spamer, parts of tracts called "Darnall's Camp," "Darnalls' Sylvania" and "Michael's Chance," between Harford and Belair turnpikes, 71 acres 2 roods 29 square perches, now known as "Rockland," $2,500. Levi Ferguson and wife to Elmer J. Spamer, part of a tract called "Darnall's Sylvania," 1 acre, 2 roods 8 15/33 square perches, $200; also, right of way, 1 4/33 square perches. [437]

The "Rockland" house has remained in the Spamer family from 1881 to the present day.[438] However, the property has been greatly reduced in size through subdivision. Today, modern communities abutt the remaining 12 acres. The earliest known owner of the house was Daniel Chambers, who acquired it in 1827.[439]

At Rockland, Elmer J. Spamer also established the family cemetery, "Rocky Rest", which continues to be used by the family. (See more about "Rocky Rest" in the discussion of "Rockland", farther below.)

In 2002, the Maryland Historical Trust wrote a descriptive survey of the property, when it was occupied by William J. Spamer (grandson of Elmer Jasper Spamer) and Hazel Eck Spamer, his wife. This report is transcribed farther below.

Nancy Spamer MicKey provided the following annecdote from the courtship of Elmer and Bettie Blakely Spamer: [440]

> My father[441] has told me in the past that his grandfather (Elmer) used to row his boat across the Gunpowder River to "date" his grandmother, Bettie.

In fact, Daniel Chambers did not build the house but purchased it in 1827; its date of construction is unknown. In 1881, when Elmer Spamer obtained it, the house had ten rooms; at least five Spamer generations subsequently occupied the house, and it has been enlarged to three stories and sixteen rooms. Elmer J. Spamer is buried at "Rocky Rest", near "Rockland", Perry Hall, Baltimore Co., Maryland.

Bettie May (Blakely) Spamer (1860–1925)
(wife of Elmer Jasper Spamer)

Although it seems that "Bettie" is her familiar name rather than her given name, her birth name is not exactly certain. The 1860 U.S. census lists the three-month-old child as Rebecca; the 1870 census lists her as Elizebeth [sic]; and the 1880 census lists her as Bettie. After her marriage, she is listed as Bettie M. in the 1900 and 1910 censuses; in the 1920 census she is Betty M. Her grave marker gives her name as Bettie.

Bettie Blakely Spamer is buried at "Rocky Rest", near "Rockland", Perry Hall, Baltimore Co., Maryland.

Additional Note

The Blakely homestead was on the Gunpowder Falls. About this, Nancy Spamer MicKey reports: [444]

> "Cliflyn Sadler [No. 222] said that they called the Blakely homestead 'The Mountain'. He was not sure if that was an official name or just what they called it because of the steep hill they had to

He did say that the last time he was there, he could not find the remains of the house or the row of stones. They [had] built a Nike base[445] around there and you can't get to everything."

End of Blakely Family collateral genealogy

"Rockland", or "Spamer Homestead"

"Rockland", or the "Spamer Homestead" so called by some historical reviewers, is the property named by Elmer Jasper Spamer. He acquired it 1881 and lived there with his maiden sisters; and eventually with his own family. As recalled by Sara Whiteford Giles, "Rockland got its name because the land was extremely rocky. Every spring after plowing we youngsters had to help clear away the rocks so the fields could be planted."[446]

One may notice that Elmer Spamer was but 18 years of age when he acquired "Rockland". Being under the age of majority at the time, it seems that other relatives must have consolidated the funds required to buy the property; Elmer repaid them to acquire ownership. Along with the principal owners, numerous other Spamer family members have resided at "Rockland" at one time or another. The 18-room structure has been divided into two residences. As of 2008, the residents at "Rockland" are William Spamer [No. 215] and his son and grandson, Stanley and Christopher Spamer [Nos. 287e, 349j].

"Rockland" is also the site of "Rocky Rest", the Spamer family cemetery (see farther below).

The property was created from a part of what originally was "Darnall's Sylvania" and "Michael's Addition", both historic properties of the Perry Hall area along the stream called Great Gunpowder Falls. The original survey of "Darnall's Sylvania" was made for John Darnall, 28 September 1683; a deed was recorded among land records of Baltimore County, 14 August 1782. It had been land that was "condemned as British property" during the Revolutionary War.[447] It was subsequently returned to the heirs of Col. Young; they in 1782 sold it to Hercules Courtney.[448] [N.B.: There is another "Rockland" in the vicinity, which is unrelated to the Spamers' "Rockland". It is in Green Spring Valley, at 10214 Falls Road.[449]]

[445] During the Cold War, the U.S. military built missile batteries at sites ringing many of the nation's cities; they were fitted with the Nike [pronounced nigh-key] series of ground-to-air missiles designed as line-of-sight defenses against enemy nuclear bombers. The batteries were operational from about 1952 to 1974, when they were made obsolete by the threat of intercontinental ballistic missiles.

(Spamer 3803)

The earliest known views of “Rockland”; undated, but presumably after its acquisition by Elmer Jasper Spamer in 1881.

At one time, the location was farmland and rural, but today the remaining acreage is encroached by residential development. It is located off of Ferguson Road (at one time also called Windy Edge Road); but in keeping with modern land registration practices and public safety concerns (such as 911 emergency location information) "Rockland" now has a precise street address at 9811 Oak Park Drive, Baltimore. Still in 1933 the property was secluded, as noticed in a newspaper record in Towson's The Jeffersonian:[450]

> It would take a detective or a tax assessor to find "Rockland". Originally one could drive to it from the Belair Road, but that way is now closed and he who would see this beautiful old home must go in by the way of Windy avenue, which breaks off the Joppa Road about a quarter of a mile to the west of the Belair Road and persevere through twists and turns, fields and woods, rises and falls, sand and rocks until the primeval grove is reached where the house bursts upon him with a suddenness that is startling. The home is so surrounded by tall trees and shrubbery that it is almost invisible until one is at its door.

The original house at "Rockland" was built prior to 1827. The earliest recorded date for the structure refers to the 1827 acquisition of the property by Daniel Chambers, who then enlarged the existing house. After Elmer Jasper Spamer acquired ownership in 1881, he enlarged the structure in 1888, to which in turn his son, Jasper Noble Spamer, added to create its present configuration in 1957. A description by M. Lacey summarizes:[451]

> Center part of house 1½ stories with delicate colonial stairway, large fireplace, no basement[;] believed to have been built by Colonel Young who acquire the property in 1683.
> Major Daniel Chambers bought the property and added a Dutch Colonial 2 story and attic addition to the house enlarging it to ten rooms.
> In 1881 Mr. Elmer Spamer bought the property and added a 3 story Mansord effect addition on the south side.
> In 1957 Mr. Jasper Spamer added another addition (all in stone). The house now has 18 rooms.

An earlier description by Lacey elaborated more about the property that would become "Rockland" and the house there: [452]

> This history of the land comprising Rockland Farm carries back to two original grants. It is made up of parts of Darnell's Sylvania and Michael's Addition. Darnell's Sylvania was surveyed for John Darnell in 1683. In 1727 it was conveyed to John Diggs of Price George County who in 1734 sold it to Samuel Hyde[;] from Hyde the property passed to Colonel Young, who entered into an agreement to transfer it to the Nottingham Co. but died before the transaction was completed. During the Revolutionary War the tract was confiscated but later returned to the heirs of Colonel Young, who in 1782 sold it to Hercules Courtney and [sic] Irish immigrant who resided in Baltimiore but who built a summer home on the property. Part of the land remained in the Courtney family as late as 1850.

Regarding the Patterson property, the following notes were passed along by Sara Whiteford Giles, which have the added advantage of distinguishing between the two Patterson houses, neither of which now survive. The following recollection mentions only the principal Patterson home, not the tenant house:[455]

> Our grandmother and grandfather Patteson[456] lived there until grandmother died. On the morning of her funeral it was very cold and icy and our grandfather went to the barn to feed their horse and slipped on the ice and broke his hip He was not able to go to her funeral after they set his hip[.] They moved him over to Rockland so your grandmother (his daughter) [457] could take care of him. They fixed his bed in what is now your dad's[458] living room and it was rigged with pulley's, etc. so he could help himself move up and down n the bed. After he was able to be up and about he came to live with my mother and father and I until my mother[459] died. He then went back to [453] The configuration of the house was changed later, and the former back door is now the main entrance.

[454] Reference to the tree is made more clearly in another source (seen as a photocopied page 66 from an unattributed book):

> "During the War of 1812, he [Daniel Chambers] spotted the British navy from a giant tree on his property, dispatching messengers to warn Fort McHenry of an impending attack. [note "i"]
> [note "i"]: The tree had a circumference of 24 feet, and it stood on the hill that can be reached by Hickory Falls Way near Seven Courts Drive. It was still there in 1914 when then Baltimore News reported its connection to the War of 1812, although the tree was later struck by lightning."

> Rockland and later went to live with Cousin John and Cousin Annie Patterson at Manor View.[460] He stayed there until his final illness when they called Aunt Elizabeth and she and Uncle Bill[461] went and got him. He died at Rockland in the room that was yo[u]r dad's room during his growing up years. While all this was happening Aunt Elizabeth, Uncle Bill and my mother had an auction sale and sold their possessions that were not divided among the family and your grandfather (Jasper N. Spamer [No. 154]) bought the remaining farm including the buildings. From that time on the Patterson home was used as a rental house and I do not now who all the renters were. I only remember a Mr. and Mrs. Bissell was one of them. My mother and father were married on the lawn of that house . . . .

At "Rockland" there is a recessed block over the main door of the house, in which is carved, "Rockland 1827–1912". The earlier date apparently commemorates when the early structure was first acquired and enlarged by Daniel Chambers. The significance of the 1912 date is not now recalled by family members.

In addition to the information given above, the field sheet for the National Register of Historic Places includes the following information: [462]

> In Hopkins Baltimore County Atlas of 1877, name of "Renshaw" appears to be either owner or tenant.

Part of the original history of "Rockland" relates to a painting of Daniel Chambers, which remains in the home. As explained in The Jeffersonian newspaper article in 1933: [463]

> Over the mantle of the living room, in a deep gilt frame, is a large oil portarit [sic] of Daniel Chambers, who made the place his home from 1827 until his death in the latter pat of the eighteen hundreds. When Mr. Chambers died and the property was sold to Mr. [John] Fox, Mrs. Chambers moved to Baltimore, but when she heard that Mr. [Elmer] Spamer had taken the homestead, she visited him and requested that he take the painting of her husband and give it its old place over the mantle in the living room and always allow it to remain there. Mr. Spamer promised to carry out her wishes in the matter, went to Baltimore, got the portrait, and hung it as directed[.] "And it shall stay there as long as I live," he says, "and when I go I shall hand down my promise to Mrs. Chambers to my children and grandchildren." Mr. Spamer never knew Mr. Chambers, but became well acquainted with Mrs. Chambers, who, until her death, often visited her old home, where she had come as a bride and which she described, in making her request with reference to the portrait, as "the fairest spot that e're the sun shone on."

Elmer Spamer's son and daughter-in-law, Jasper and Elizabeth Spamer, died in 1971. At that time, Hazel Spamer, wife of Jasper's son, William, gave the portrait of Daniel Chambers to Camp Chapel United

A very similarly styled portrait of an unknown woman also accompanied the portrait of Mr. Chambers. It is likewise in a heavy gilt frame, one which is more ornamented than the plain frame embracing Mr. Chambers' portrait. This woman's portrait is still held by the family and might portray a relative of Elizabeth Patterson Spamer (wife of Jasper Spamer).[465]

The Jeffersonian article also took notice:

> Mr. Spamer selected [Rockland] well for the seclusion he wanted, but he also selected it well for its possibilities as a spot for developing rural beauty—and he has demonstrated he knew how to develop it.

Many of the Spamer residents of "Rockland" were farmers here, and although the area is no longer a farm, to this day the Spamers here practice horticulture on a rather large scale.

Sara Whiteford Giles recalled in correspondence to her cousin, Nancy Spamer MicKey: [466]

There should be pictures of their camping trip in the picture album that El has.

Nancy Spamer MicKey, who also currently resides in a separate residence on the Rockland property, added a few comments to her cousin's message: [478]

My room had the only heat, a cole [coal] oil stove that needed to be refilled by can.

"Rockland" is included in various historical sites surveys. A 1970 field sheet for the National Register of Historic Places notes that the site, BA-XI-136, is on Ferguson Road in Cub Hill, Maryland. More specifically it gives the following location information:

> 39º25′03″ N. lat., 76º28′57″ W. long. About 1 mi. west-northwest of Perry Hall, at the end of a dirt lane extending beyond the end of Ferguson Rd., 0.9 mi. east of the Gunpowder Transformer Station, and about 800 ft. south of Gunpowder Falls.

The Maryland Historical Trust conducts a statewide Historic Sites Survey by an Act of the Maryland Legislature. These surveys are "prepared for information and record purposes only and do not constitute any infringement of individual property rights". The survey for the 11.91-acre Spamer Homestead was made 23 August 2002, as follows:[480]

[481] Perry Hall originated in a 1,000-acre estate, "The Adventure", purchased in 1774 by Harry Dorsey Gough, a wealthy planter. He renamed the estate Perry Hall after his family's home in Great Britain. (Note: Elsewhere in the present genealogy, Part II, Smith Family, notice is made of a home named Perry Hall, in Easton, Talbot County; it is a different place from that under discussion here.) After the Civil War, in 1875, the plantation was sold to Eli Slifer of Philadelphia, who subdivided the property, selling the parcels as farms to immigrant families. It came to be known as subdivided and other landholders began to construct residential buildings. The 1850 Sidney map denotes the Spamer Homestead as belonging to John Fox. Between 1867 and 1886, the Baltimore and Jerusalem Turnpike Company Inc. completed a turnpike following the path of Belair Road to the existing bridge over Little Gunpowder Falls. During the early-20th century Perry Hall expanded and absorbed the small farming community of Germantown. The suburba[ni]zation of Perry Hall occurred after the Great Depression when many Baltimore residents relocated to the suburbs. The Spamer family has been residing at 9811 Oak Park Drive since 1881.

Facing Northeast and sited on a wooded lot next to a 1990s development, the random-rubble stone house, constructed circa 1820, is three bays wide and two-and-a-half stories high. It has a center entry containing a single-leaf wood door and a 1-light transom. The 6/6 windows are supported with thin slate sills. The roof has been replaced with a half-gambrel clad with asphalt shingles. The façade features three gable dormers, not original to the house. Several additions have been made to the dwelling. One addition is a is a [sic] two-and-a-half story random-rubble stone section capped with a mansard roof clad with variegated wood shingles. A shed roof dormer with paired 2/2 double-hung sash windows was later added to the house. Associated with this property are four historic and three non-historic secondary buildings.

The original house of the Spamer Homestead was constructed circa 1820 and is nestled in a suburban development. Mature trees and shrubs screens [sic] Gunpowder Falls from view. The property has a gravel driveway and is surrounded by overgrown vegetation. The random-rubble stone house, original to the property, is three bays wide and two-and-a-half stories high. It has a center entry containing a single-leaf wood door with a 1-light transom. The 6/6 windows are supported with thin slate sills. The roof has been replaced with a half-gambrel clad with asphalt shingles. The façade features three gable dormers, not original to the house. Several additions have been made to the dwelling. One addition is a is a [sic] two-and-a-half story random-rubble stone section capped with a mansard roof. The roof is clad with variegated wood shingles. The windows in this section are 2/2 double-hung wood sash with square-edged wood sills and lug wood lintels. A shed roof dormer with paired 2/2 double-hung sash windows was later added to the house.

Associated with this property are four historic and three non-historic secondary buildings. Close to the main dwelling is a two-and-a-half-story dwelling of wood frame construction clad with weatherboards. Dating circa 1890, the first story contains a double-leaf diagonal-board doors [sic] and is covered with a pent roof. The upper stories feature 6/6 double-hung wood sash windows. The upper half story is clad with square-butt and diamond-shaped slate tiles. The building is capped with a front gambrel roof featuring overhanging eaves, a boxed wood cornice, and a wood soffit. Next, is a circa 1900 barn. It is wood frame construction and is clad with vertical-board siding. It features a 4-light wood casement window and one single-leaf vertical-board door. It is covered with a side gambrel roof sheathed with corrugated-sheet metal. A central cupola is clad with corrugated-sheet metal. Next to the second dwelling is a wood-frame shed, dating 1940, standing one-and-a-half stories with a front-gable roof clad with corrugated sheet metal. The building is covered with asphalt roll and features overhanging eaves and a boxed wood cornice. One window is missing in the upper-half story. Next to this shed is a non-historic shed dating from the 1960s. It is constructed of cinderblock with a gambrel roof clad with asphalt shingles. A rebuilt machine shop, dating circa 1960, is constructed of cinderblocks. It stands one-and-a-half stories high and is three bays wide. It has one single-leaf wood door, and a multi-light wood window, and a sliding corrugated-sheet metal door. The shop is capped with a side gambrel roof and features two shed-roof dormers. The third non-historic building is a wood-frame tractor shed, dating circa 1980. It is capped with a shed roof with corrugated-sheet metal.

Facing northeast, this dwelling known as the Spamer Homestead, was constructed circa 1820. The property is located near the historic village of Germantown and Perry Hall in the Eleventh District of Baltimore County. In 1775, Henry Dorsey Gough purchased a mid-18th century Georgian estate from Corbin Lee and renamed it Perry Hall. This property was located in the vicinity of the current intersection of Belair and Joppa Roads. Belair Road connected Baltimore to the town of Bel Air as early as the mid-1700s. Dating to the 1730s, Joppa Road connected settlements along the Patapsco River with Joppa, the original Baltimore County seat located on the Big Gunpowder River. The Perry Hall estate was located a short distance to the north of the intersection of these two important Colonial period roads. This arrangement set the area on a course for development as a crossroads community.

By the mid-19th century, the lands associated with Perry Hall had been greatly subdivided, and several other landholders in the area began to construct residential buildings along either side of Belair Road. The 1850 county atlas shows at least nineteen residential structures located between the two rivers. In addition to these, three taverns were clustered around the center of the community near the intersection of Joppa and Belair roads. The name Germantown came to this settlement in the 1860s, when a significant number of German farmers began to settle in and around the area.

Between 1850 and the mid-1870s, the Germantown community grew considerably. From the nine residential structures in 1850, the town grew to at least thirty-seven in 1877. This number continued to increase, for the county history published shortly thereafter records the population as fifty inhabitants. At that time, a general store, two blacksmith shops, a schoolhouse, three churches, and [sic] tavern, and sawmill were located in the small settlement.

In 1867, the Baltimore and Jerusalem Turnpike Company incorporated with the intent of creating a better road from Baltimore to the town of Jerusalem. The turnpike was slated to follow the path of Belair Road until it reached the Little Gunpowder Falls, at which point it would veer off and follow Jerusalem Road for the remainder of the distance. The Turnpike Company completed the first eight miles of the road to just south of Perry Hall with the remainder of the road left unimproved. Due to complaints by local citizens and administrative changes in the company, the road was completed for an additional four miles to the existing bridge over Little Gunpowder Falls in 1886. [482]

Since the mid-20th century, the landscape of Germantown has greatly changed. To begin, the community was absorbed by the town of Perry Hall to the immediate south, which developed more through the early 20th century than Germantown. The rural character of the area did not change until after the Great Depression. Increased out[ward] migration from Baltimore and development of the surrounding area led to the suburbanization of Perry Hall. Belair Road, now a main thoroughfare through the town, was widened in the latter half of the 20th century and is now a four lane highway. Commercial buildings, churches, and other institutional buildings now

[482] Later, Elmer J. Spamer was an activist against the presence of toll highways, In 1901, "The question of the abolition of tollgates" was discussed by him and others at a meetnig of the Good Road and Anti-Toll Organization, in Perry Hall. ("For Good Roads and No Toll", The Sun [Baltimore], 6 Feb 1901.)

intermingle with a few pockets of residential construction along Belair Road just north of its intersection with Joppa Road.

The Spamer Homestead is shown on the 1850 Sidney map [as] belonging to John Fox. By 1877, the property had transferred to Renshaw. In 1915, W. Spamer was the resident of the dwelling at 9811 Oak Park Drive. In 2002, screened by mature trees and overgrowth, the property is nestled within a 1990s suburban development. The owner of the property in 2002, is William J. Spamer. The Spamer's have resided at this located [sic] since 1881.

A typewritten note from 1965 is included in the historical site survey file, which obviously reflects information that was incompletely known as of that date:

A handwritten emendation at the top of this page reads, "demolished prior to June, 1980 GJA". Why the house had been indicated to have been demolished is not clear. The razed house to which the annotation refers was probably the Patterson home adjacent to Rockland [483], not to be confused with an adjacent Patterson tenant house[484] where lived Bud and Nora Spamer[485] after moving from Rockland. (The tenant house was likewise razed, but by developers later when the property was sold. [486])

John G. Folks

In the 1933 Jeffersonian[487] newspaper article, the "Rocky Rest" was made to be a serene, little-occupied place:

> On the crest of the ridge, a little to the south of the house, and one of the highest points of the grove, is the well-kept family burial ground of the Spamers, which is reached by way of a winding, rock-bordered lane that curls up the hillside from the entrance road. Here are buried Mr. Spamer's father, mother, wife and one child, while over in one corner, at a spot where he wont to come often and medidate, is buried a farm hand, who worked on the Spamer place for forty years.

The farm hand was John G. Folks (1867–1931).[488] His grave marker reads "Brother John G. Folks"; the signifance of the salutatory "Brother" is not clear, whether it is from the respect of religious acknowledgement or that of a fraternal organization.

The cemetery is in fact pleasantly spaced and peaceful, shaded by tall trees. Many of the grave markers are substantial and well ornamented stones, quite unlike the image usually held of the traditional, small family cemetery. The cemetery is still used, and the graves are tended to by a family trusteeship. The remains at "Rocky Rest" are as follows, ordered by date of decease:[489]

[488] As determined from U.S. census records, John G. Folks was born in Maryland, the son of John E. and Lina Folks, also both of Maryland. John E. Folks was the son of German immigrants; Lina's father and mother were born in Germany and Maryland, respectively. John E. Folks was a carptenter, residing in 1870 in the 9th District, Baltimore Co. (Towsentown post office) and in 1880 in Waverly, Baltimore Co. At the time of the 1880 census, John G. Folks was the oldest listed sibling of William E., Jacob M., Lillie M., Frederick S., and Amanda J. Folks; all born in Maryland. Residing with them in 1880 was one Sarah Whittaker, aged 78, born in Maryland, who could be Lina Folks' mother. Also at the time of the 1880 census, an adjacent listing (probably in the same household) was Augustus and Ruth H. Folks, likely a brother and sister-in-law of John E. Folks. Augustus Folks was a baker. (Approximate birth dates for these individuals are as follows, based on ages given in the 1880 census: John E. Folks, 1838; Lina, 1842; William, 1868; Jacob, 1870; Lillie, 1872; Frederick, 1874; Amanda, 1878; Augustus Folks, 1834; Ruth, 1834; Sarah Whittaker, 1802.) John G. Folks is recorded in the 1900 and 1910 censuses residing on the Elmer J. Spamer farm; in 1900 he is a farm laborer (with birth date there given as April 1864), and in 1910 a hired hand on a truck farm. He has not been located in the 1920 or 1930 censuses.

[489] These graves are corroborated in photographs of markers received from Nancy Spamer MicKey, Feb 2008. Robert Lee Robinson is thus far not included in the present genealogy. Although he clearly was a member of the family, who his parents were has not been determined as of the date when this text was prepared.

NOTES

90. Lillie (Spamer) Watters (1865–1949)

Variant spellings seen for the given name of Lillie Spamer are "Lilie", and "Lylie", and "Lylly".

The marriage of Lillie Spamer to Walter Watters was officiated by Rev. Thomas Allibone King[490] of the Church of the New Jerusalem, Baltimore.

Lillie Spamer Watters is buried at "Rocky Rest", near "Rockland", Perry Hall, Baltimore Co., Maryland.

Walter Archer Watters (Sr.) (1864–1961)
(husband of Lillie Spamer)

Walter Archer Watters was a farmer.

Residences of Walter Watters (from U.S. censuses):
1880: Fallston, Harford Co., Maryland (with parents)
1900: Fallston, Harford Co., Maryland (misindexed as "Watson")
1910, 1920: Marshall, Harford Co., Maryland
1930: District 4, Harford Co., Maryland

Regarding the Watters family, see the Watters Family collateral genealogy, below.

Information from the "Watters Family of Harford County, MD"[491] includes the following:

> Walter Archer Watters grew up on the family farm, "Charles Neighbor", at the intersection of Pleasantville and Fallston Roads. In a deed dated 24 November 1885 he purchased the family farm from his brother and sisters, borrowing money to pay them over a period of years. In order to keep the farm, Walter and Lillie Watters "were indebted to Martha Twining for $2,000 at 5% interest per year."
> Later, on 29 November 1901,
> Walter and Lillie sold one-half acre of land at "Charles Neighbor" to the Odd Fellows fraternal organization from Upper Cross Roads for $75. Land records show the Watters family took out a mortgage for $600 from James O. Morgan on Dec. 24, 1903. "Charles Neighbor" was used as collateral [in addition to livestock and farm implements]. At some time around the turn of the century when Walter and Lillie were raising their growing family, they experienced a devastating house fire at "Charles Neighbor" which required them to move. They were able to buy a farm belonging to the Twinings on Pleasantville Road. This is the farm we all remember as children. "Charles Neighbor" was sold on Feb. 25, 1907 to Joseph Twining for $3,750. Walter Watters was

Watters Family
Collateral Genealogy
(67 descendants[492])

The genealogy of the Watters family, as it relates to our Spamer lineage, and as currently understood, is as follows.

A letter from Benjamin Waters (1789-1863) to his nephew, Charles Emory Waters, son of Freeborn G. Waters (1795-1858), the original of which is in the Maryland Historical Society, Watters family file, is transcribed into the "Watters Family of Harford County, MD" [493] It provides additional information that pertains to the early Watters family: [494]

Alexandria, Va.,
Dec. 10th, 1862.

Dear Emory,

Your letter requesting me to give you such information as I was in possession of in relation to the Waters family from as early a date as I could, which I will do so far as I have been able to collect a history of them, but it must necessarily be imperfect as this is the first time I have ever written a line on the subject.

I learned from the late Rev. Wm. Waters (who was the first native born American Methodist traveling preacher) that two brothers, descendants of the Wates family in Wales (whose father died in Dartmouth prison for his religious principles) emigrated to this country to enjoy liberty of conscience and settled in Virginia, on the James River. As this was at an early period in the history of Virginia they had to make a settlement in the wilderness and depend on their dog and gun for game until they could raise grain and stock to subsist on. That one of the brothers subsequently settled on the eastern shore of Maryland from which branch of the family, he and the now numerous stock of Waterses on the eastern side of the bay sprang. They spell their name with two 't's' which Wm. Waters (said) had been improperly introduced into the name, s their forefathrs inEurope use but the one 't' as we do. Our ancestors came from the brother that remained on this side of the Bay, and from Virginia they spread into Maryland on the western shore of the Chesapeake Bay, settling on the Patuxent River in Anne Arundel and Prince Georges Counties.

I further learned from Mrs. Quarls near Darlington, in Harford Co., Md., who was a daughter of the late Edward Waters of Prince George's county, Md., (who by the way is a woman of more than ordinary observation and information) that the history given me by Wm. Waters was correct so far as it went, but he did not account for the separation of the two brothers who it would be natural to expect were from circumstances greatly attached to each other. Mrs. Elizabeth Quarls (I believe her name is) informed me that after a settlement was made by these brothers so that grain could be raised they still depended on the forest for meats, which abounded in game and while the one that settled on the eastern shore of the Bay was out with his dog and gun he discovered a party of Indians between him and their settlement and he fled to the Bay shore, the Indians pursuing him closely and the Bay being frozen over took to the ice. After traveling some distance, he discovered a long dark streak in the ice which he approached with caution and striking on the ice the breech on his gun went through and the Indians still in pursuit. Invention, "the mother of necessity" devised a plan to deliver him in this critical moment and his gun having a very long barrel he laid it across the dark streak and walked over on the barrel, and pursued on to the eastern shore.

After getting across and the ice breaking up, thee was no way of returning, there being no vessels to navigate the Bay and from the force of circumstances he had to settle where providence had placed him.

It would be well worth a trip to Darlington to see this lady if she is living, and a sister of the late Rev. John Davis (Miss Sallie) who I expect lives with a nephew of hers (James Davis, a carpenter living in Old Town) could tellyou whether she [is] still alive, as she is the mother of Frank Quarls who married Virginia Davis. From Baltimore to Darlington is but a day's ride to go by Bel Air, and a beautiful road in good weather, but it might be better to go by rail to Havre-de-Grace an get a conveyance from there to Darlington (Miss Davis could give you nformation of the place where Mrs. Quarls lives near Darlington.)

Your grandfather Waters (Benjamin Waters was the son of Mordecai Waters of Prince Georges County, and your Grandmother Waters was the daughter of Samuel Waters of Mongtomery County, but very distantly if at all connected. (Benjamin and Nancy were their names.)

* * * * *

P.S. I expect Mrs. Quarls could give you names and dates and much other information that would be of value ot ou and refer you to history for a further description of the father who died in prison. B. W.

The present genealogy bases its lineage upon the one reported by Linda Watters Amoss in "Watters Family of Harford County, MD". [495]

NOTES

8. Godfrey Watters (1703–1754)

He removed from Anne Arundel Co. to Baltimore Co., Maryland, about 1750. He was a vestryman at St. John's Episcopal Church, Joppa, Maryland, a Church of England denomination.

14. Mary (Watters) Divers (1727–1789)

She is buried at Watters Meeting House, Thoms Run Road.

24. William Watters (1751–1827)

Rev. William Watters, born at the Watters farm on Thomas Run Road, was the first American-born circuit rider in the Methodist ministry. His brother, John, invited early Methodist preachers to the home, which became a regular stop for the circuit riders. He had no children.

> "William was only 21 years old when he, too, decided he was called into the ministry as an itinerant circuit rider. Stephen and Nicholas Watters also traveled as circuits [sic] riders for the Methodist Church, but not for the length of time as their brother William. In 1773, William went to Phliadelphia to the first Methodist Conference in America, and was there admitted to the traveling ministry. The Methodists [sic] ministers at that time were a body which included only ten men--nine of them Englishmen, with one American, William Watters. Hence, our uncle is considered the first American-born Methodist circuit rider. William's assignments were anot annual, but were made very three months. In his first two years, William Watters served 4 circuits. His first appointment was Kent Circuit, which included the whole Eastern Shore of Delaware, Maryland, and Virginia. It took six weeks to ake one round of preaching. Next, he was assigned to Baltimore Circuit, then Trenton Circuit in New Jersey (where he witnessed John Adams & John Hancock passing through N.J. on their way to Philadelphia). William also served at Chester in Pennsylvania, Frederick in Maryland, Fairfax Circuit, and three circuits in southern Virginia; 12 assignments in 4 years. In some of them he was able to preach only twice at each place before he was moved on to his next circuit. During the Revolutionary War years, William rose to a place of leadership in the Methodist Church. The English preachers were going home, so William was apponted to 'act for the general assistant' in 1777, as John Wesley's superintendent in the Colonies. When the sixth American conference met in Leesburg in 1778, William Watters precided. * * * Soon he was appointed to the Baltimore Circuit where his wife lived at his family's farm on Thomas Run Road while he attended his pastoral duties. However, by 1783, William Watters' health had so failed that he decided to permanently locate at what is now McLean, Virginia in a log home. He continued to preach in that circuit in Virginia until his health had improved. William entered the traveling ministry again, preaching in Berkley County (now West Virginia). When he went home again to McLean, he spent the next 15 years farming and serving as a local preacher once again. He was assigned to Alexandria, Georgetown, and also at a brand new church in what was known as 'Washington City', while still living in the vine-covered cottage at McLean. William Watters spent the last 21 years of his life at McLean, remaining very active in Nelson's Chapel, the local Methodist Church. His eyesight began to fail before he died and soon he became totally blind." [496]

NOTES

15. Henry Watters (1731/32–1812)

Henry Watters took over the family farm at Thomas Run after the death of his brother, John, in 1774.

"He donated a portion of the farm to build a Methodist meetng house which wuld be called for many years 'The Watters Meeting House'. The original building was said to have been a log structure. The present stone building was built int eh 1840's and was recently rebuilt after a 1996 fire. This church was the beginning of all the Methodist churches in central Harford County. Francis Asbury made himself a frequent guest in the Watters household on his travels along the east coast, as did many other notable Methodist ministers. Judge James D. Watters, a descendent [sic] of Henry Watters was the last man with the Watters name to live on the farm. he was a judge at the Bel Air Court House for more than 30 years. NOTES

37. John Watters (1788-1829)

In 1843, Eden Chapel was built on land donated by the Watters family. Earlier, a Sunday School class of the Methodist Episcopal church had been held in the home of Esther Young Watters home in Cooptown. Some of the John Watters children donated land for the present William Watters memorial Church, which replaced Eden Chapel, named after their uncle, William Watters (1751-1827), the first American-born Methodist circuit preacher. Esther Watters' home was located on the present-day Rigdon Road just before the William Watters Church. [499] John Watters died by his own hand. [500] He is buried at Watters Meeting House, Thomas Run Road.

Esther (Young) Watters (1788–1860)
(wife of John Watters [No. 37])

She is buried in William Watters Memorial Church cemetery.

54. Sarah Elizabeth Watters (1826–1899)
55. Susan Jane Watters (1829–1888)
56. Edwin Dorsey Watters (1829–1893)

Generation No. 8

44. Mary F.[8] Watters (Walter[7], Walter[6], Godfrey[5], Henry[4] Waters, John[3], John[2], Waters[1]) She married Benjamin Rigdon 13 January 1846.

Child of Mary Watters and Benjamin Rigdon is:

57 i. George Benjamin[9] Rigdon.

45. Alexander Young[8] Watters (John[7], Walter[6], Godfrey[5], Henry[4] Waters, John[3], John[2], Waters[1]) was born 18 June 1806, and died 15 February 1872 near Pleasantville, Maryland. He married Catherine Amos 1837.

Child of Alexander Watters and Catherine Amos is:

58 i. Walter[9] Watters, born 1856.

49. Robert Archer[8] Watters (John[7], Walter[6], Godfrey[5], Henry[4] Waters, John[3], John[2], Waters[1]) was born 20 March 1816 in Eden Town [Cooptown], Maryland, and died 03 March 1885 in Harford Co., Maryland. He married Elizabeth Hahn 22 February 1846, daughter of William Hahn and Susan Gough. She was born 1821 in Baltimore(?), Maryland, and died 28 June 1880 in Harford Co., Maryland.

Children of Robert Watters and Elizabeth Hahn are:

\+ 59 i. John William Henry[9] Watters, born 1848 in Maryland; died 1887.

\+ 64 vi. Walter Archer Watters, born 14 November 1864 in Harford Co., Maryland; died 10 July 1961 in Harford Co., Maryland.

NOTES

49. Robert Archer Watters (1816–1885)
and Elizabeth (Hahn) Watters (1821–1880)
(wife of Robert Archer Watters)

In 1843, Robert Archer Watters purchased "Traveller's Rest", 115 acres, which he sold in 1857 for $4,000.

Their marriage was officiated by Rev. S. A. Roezell. "The Bel Air Court House clerk listed the bride's name as Elizabeth Harlan, but every other record available indicates this to be a mistake. Lawrence Spamer Watters stated that he had always been told her name was 'Hahn'. She is not named in any of Robert's land purchases, and her tombstone merely states her name as Elizabeth Watters." [501]

Robert Archer and Elizabeth Hahn Watters are buried at Friendship Church [Fallston United Methodist Church, Fallston, Maryland].

60. Susan (Watters) Harlan (1848–1940)

She had no children.

One of the interesting historical connections to our family comes through the marriage of Robert Archer Watters and Elizabeth Hahn. Through Elizabeth's maternal lineage is a connection to the Onion family of Maryland, who in addition to their historical position in Colonial-era iron manufacturing have an historical incident of significance in the Revolutionary War. Accordingly, the Onion family descendancy is inserted here for the historical perspective it provides:

Descendants of Susannah Onion

Generation No. 1

1. Suannah[1] Onion was born 1700. She married John Barnett. He was born about 1696.

Child of Susannah Onion and John Barrett is:

\+ 2 i. Zacheus Barrett[2] Onion, born 09 November 1740 in Albrighton, Shropshire, England; died November 1781 in Joppa, Maryland.

Generation No. 2

2. Zacheus Barrett[2] Onion (Susannah[1]) was born 09 November 1740 in Albrighton, Shropshire, England, and died November 1781 in Joppa, Maryland. He married Hannah Bond 02 December 1757 in Joppa, Maryland, daughter of Thomas Bond and Elizabeth Scott. She was born between 1738-1740 in Harford Co., Maryland, and died 1792.

Children of Zacheus Onion and Hannah Bond are:

3 i. Elizabeth[3] Onion, born 02 February 1759. She married Nicholas Day McComas 1794.

4 ii. Stephen Onion, born 21 August 1760; died 26 January 1761.

5 iii. Stephen Onion, born 19 November 1761; died 25 September 1865. He married Kitty Graybell Crone 1783.

[501] Linda Watters Amoss, "Watters Family of Harford County, MD", 2000, p. 49.

	6	iv.	Thomas Bond Onion, born 01 February 1762; died 16 December 1812. He married (1) Adriane; born 12 July 1792. He married (2) Elizabeth McCall 1781.
	7	v.	John Barrett Onion, born 23 May 1764; died 27 June 1813. He married Juliet Mabry Pendergrast 1787.
	8	vi.	Zacheus Onion, born 12 April 1765.
	9	vii.	William Francis Heath Onion, born 29 March 1769.
	10	viii.	Corbin Lee Onion, born 08 May 1770.
+	11	ix.	Martha (Patty) Onion, born about 1772.
+	12	x.	Susannah Onion, born about 1774.
	13	xi.	Hannah Onion, born about 1776. She married John Marche 1794.
	14	xii.	Sarah Onion, born about 1778; died before May 1809.
	15	xiii.	Charity Onion, born about 1780. She married John Divers 1804.

Notes

2. Zacheus Barrett Onion (1740–1781)

"Zacheus Barrett Onion, son of Susanna Onion and John Barrett, took the last name Onion in accordance with his Uncle Stephen Onion's will that he must take that name in order to inherit his uncle's property. 'Onion's Pasture Ground' and the Onion Ironworks were located near the Gunpowder Falls. Stephen had been known as the 'great ironmaster and almost the father of the iron industry in this country, a gentleman of good character and plentiful fortune.' Zacheus Barrett Onion had been a First Lieutenant in the company of Captain James Gittings of the Gundpowder Upper Hundred, May 1776 on the eve of the Revolutionary War. Land: 'Onion's Inheritance' 400 acres, 'Hethcote Cottage'', 'Thompson's Choice' 'Jerusalem', 'Rebecca's Cottage', 'Onion's Pasture', 'Betts Prosperity', 'Prospect Hills', 'Turkey Hills', and Lower Merchant Mill. Taxable in Bush River Lower Hundred in 1774, with servants Thomas, Conrway and Henery Hutchins, and Negroes Jack, Dick, Sampson, Sam, Lonon, Jack, Frank, Lydia, Amea, Sall, and Jane." [502]

Zacheus Barrett Onion is supposed to have been buried at St. John's Episcopal Church's old burial ground in Joppa, Maryland.

15. Charity (Onion) Divers (ca. 1780–)

An anecdotal note in the family, pertaining to a visit from George Washington, comes through a comment written into the family Bible of Ellie Mason Dewlin. If it is a true account—there is no reason to doubt it at this time—surely Washington's visit was as a result of his travels. Dewlin's note reads:

"My great grandmother, Charity Onion, was the youngest child of Zacheus Barrett Onion. General Washington came to their house one day for tea. They let my great grandmother, being the youngest in the family, take the head of the table to pour out tea for General Washington. It was thought she might be the longest to tell this story." [503]

The tradition of the youngest capable girl of the family pour refreshments at a family gathering or to visitors is a well-established part of contemporary etiquette.

Generation No. 3

11. Martha (Patty)[3] Onion (Zacheus Barrett[2], Susannah[1]) was born about 1772. She married Harry Dorsey Gough, son of John William Gough. He was born 1766, and died 22 October 1807.

Children of Martha Onion and Harry Gough are:

+	16	i.	Susan[4] Gough, born about 1799 in Baltimore, Maryland?; died about 1866.
+	17	ii.	Harry Dorsey Gough, died 02 December 1867.
	18	iii.	Hannah E. Gough. She married Preston McComas.
	19	iv.	Prudence Gough. She married Joseph Bannister.
	20	v.	Charity Gough. She married John Bannister.

12. Susannah[3] Onion (Zacheus Barrett[2], Susannah[1]) was born about 1774. She married Frederick McComas 1789.

Child of Susannah Onion and Frederick McComas is:

21 i. Henry G.[4] McComas, born 20 September 1795; died 12 September 1814 at North Point, Baltimore, Maryland.

Notes[504]

Frederick McComas, husband of Susannah Onion [No. 12], was a carpenter from Harford Co., Maryland. He and his wife, also from Harford Co., removed to Baltimore between 1810-1814, where they resided on Comet St. in "Old Town".

Henry G. McComas (1795–1812) [No. 21] was an apprentice in the leather industry when he joined Capt. Edward Aisquith's rifle company under the command of Maj. Heath. Fighting alongside Daniel Wells, both young men shot and mortally wounded British General Ross while the British force traveled on North Point Road. Brtish forces killed both McComas and Wells. Today at the corner of Gay and East Monument Sts., Baltimore, is a memorial to the young men.

Generation No. 4

16. Susan[4] Gough (Martha (Patty)[3] Onion, Zacheus Barrett[2], Susannah[1]) was born about 1799 in Baltimore, Maryland?, and died about 1866. She married William Hahn 21 December 1820 at Zion German Lutheran Church, Gay St. and Court House Plaza, Baltimore, Maryland, son of Adam Hahn and Magdalena. He was born 1796.

Children of Susan Gough and William Hahn are:

\+ 22 i. Elizabeth[5] Hahn, born 1821 in Baltimore(?), Maryland; died 28 June 1880 in Harford Co., Maryland.

23 ii. Edward T. Hahn, died 15 October 1844.

Notes

The marriage of Susan Gough and William Hahn was officiated by Rev. M. Kurts.

---

17. Harry Dorsey[4] Gough (Martha (Patty)[3] Onion, Zacheus Barrett[2], Susannah[1]) died 02 December 1867. He married Mary Honora O'Brien.

Children of Harry Gough and Mary O'Brien are:

24 i. Helen Theresa[5] Gough.
25 ii. Octavia Gough.
26 iii. Charles Hays Gough.
27 iv. Henry Onion Gough.
28 v. William Thomas Gough, born about 1834 in Maryland; died 26 May 1867 in Aurora, Nevada.
29 vi. Mary Gough.
30 vii. Harrison Gough.
31 viii. Martha Gough.
32 ix. Matilda Gough. She married Argalus G. Hennisee 19 Dec 1865 in Baltimore, Maryland.

Notes

Harry Dorsey Gough (–1867) served in the War of 1812. His sons emigrated to California; all of them died without heirs.

William Thomas Gough (ca. 1834–1867) [No. 28] was educated at Dickinson College, Carlisle, Pennsylvania. He emigrated to California in 1852, residing in San Mateo andSan Francisco. He removed to Aurora, Nevada, about 1862. Extensive remarks about the man and his life with the citizens of Aurora was published in the Baltimiore Aegis, 3 January 1868. He was a lawyer. He was buried in San Francisco, California.

Mary Gough [No. 29] never married.

[504] From Harford Historical Bulletin, no. 76 (Spring 1998).

Argalus G. Hennisee, husband of Matilda Gough [No. 32] sued for divorce in the Vigo County Court of Common Pleas, Indiana, 24 August 1869.

Generation No. 5

22. Elizabeth[5] Hahn (Susan[4] Gough, Martha (Patty)[3] Onion, Zacheus Barrett[2], Susannah[1]) was born 1821 in Baltimore(?), Maryland, and died 28 Jun 1880 in Harford Co., Maryland. She married Robert Archer Watters 22 Feb 1846, son of John Watters and Esther Young. He was born 20 Mar 1816 in Eden Town [Cooptown], Maryland, and died 03 Mar 1885 in Harford Co., Maryland.

See Watters Family collateral genealogy for information relating to Elizabeth (Hahn) and Robert Archer Watters and their descendants.

End of Onion lineage

Watters Family collateral genealogy continues:

Generation No. 9

59. John William Henry[9] Watters (Robert Archer[8], John[7], Walter[6], Godfrey[5], Henry[4] Waters, John[3], John[2], Waters[1]) was born 1848 in Maryland, and died 1887. He married Anna Dance. She was born 1856, and died 1944.

Child of John Watters and Anna Dance is:

65 i. Miriam Lucile[10] Watters, born 04 November 1886; died 10 December 1902.

61. Esther Young[9] Watters (Robert Archer[8], John[7], Walter[6], Godfrey[5], Henry[4] Waters, John[3], John[2], Waters[1]) was born 26 April 1853 in Maryland, and died 03 April 1901 in Baldwin, Maryland. She married Calvin Smith Harlan 11 February 1879, son of Harlan and undetermined wife. He was born 27 September 1846, and died 08 November 1906 in City Hospital, Baltimore, Maryland.

Child of Esther Watters and Calvin Harlan is:

\+ 66 i. Ada Lillian[10] Harlan, born 21 October 1881; died 08 August 1982.

NOTES

Calvin Smith Harlan (1846–1906), husband of Esther Young Watters [No. 61], was killed when he drove his horse and buggy into the patch of an express train on the Northern Central Railway just south of Ashland station. He died shortly after taken to City Hospital in Baltimore.[505] His elderly mother died in grief the next day. He is buried at Friends' Meeting House, Fallston, Maryland.

---

63. Elizabeth K.[9] Watters (Robert Archer[8], John[7], Walter[6], Godfrey[5], Henry[4] Waters, John[3], John[2], Waters[1]) was born 18 April 1859 in Maryland, and died 28 October 1945. She married Philip G. Scarff. He was born 05 September 1859, and died 06 November 1918.

Child of Elizabeth Watters and Philip Scarff is:

67 i. Alice[10] Scarff. She married Stanley Preston.

[505] Aegis (Baltimore), 16 Nov 1906.

64. Walter Archer[9] Watters (Robert Archer[8], John[7], Walter[6], Godfrey[5], Henry[4] Waters, John[3], John[2], Waters[1]) was born 14 November 1864 in Harford Co., Maryland, and died 10 July 1961 in Harford Co., Maryland. He married Lillie Agatha Spamer 07 September 1886 in "Rockland", Perry Hall, Baltimore Co., Maryland, daughter of Heinrich Spamer and Julia Martin. She was born 20 April 1865 in Baltimore, Maryland, and died 21 April 1949 in Fallston, Maryland.

See main Spamer family genealogy for information relating to Walter Archer and Lillie (Spamer) Watters and their descendants. The descendants of this couple are omitted from the remainder of the Watters Family collateral genealogy.

End of Watters Family collateral genealogy

91. Miriam J.[5] Spamer (Heinrich Conrad Ludwig[4], Johann Conrad[3], Johann Conrad[2], Johannes[1]) was born 10 February 1868 in Maryland, and died 22 June 1951. She married Joseph J. Robinson, Jr. 24 September 1889 at Church of the New Jerusalem, Baltimore, Maryland, son of Joseph J. Robinson and Emily. He was born February 1850 in Maryland, and died 1924.

Children of Miriam Spamer and Joseph Robinson are:

	162	i.	Olive D.[6] Robinson, born 25 January 1891 in Maryland; died 22 June 1950.
	163	ii.	Joseph Lee Robinson, born September 1892 in Maryland.
+	164	iii.	Harold Spamer Robinson, born 05 June 1895 in Maryland.
+	165	iv.	Marjorie Joy Robinson, born 08 October 1897 in Maryland; died 07 September 1959.
+	166	v.	Ralph Louis Robinson [Sr.] born 22 October 1900 in Maryland; died 17 March 1962.
+	167	vi.	Miriam Elinor Robinson, born 28 October 1904 in Maryland.

NOTES

91. Miriam (Spamer) Robinson (1868–1951)

In the 1910 U.S. census, Miriam J. Robinson is listed as "Marian J. Robinson".

The wedding of Joseph J. Robinson and Miriam (Spamer) Robinson was officiated by Rev. Thomas A. King[506]; both were from Baltimore.

At the time of the 1930 census, widowed Miriam Robinson resided at 17 Lanvale St., Baltimore, Maryland.

Miriam Spamer Robinson is buried at "Rocky Rest", near "Rockland", Perry Hall, Baltimore Co., Maryland.

Joseph J. Robinson, Jr. (1850–1924)
(husband of Miriam Spamer)

Joseph J. Robinson, Jr. was the brother of Ella Robinson, who married Miriam's brother, Arthur Ludwig Spamer [No. 86]. Also see the Robinson Family collateral genealogy, which follows the entry for Arthur Ludwig Spamer.

Joseph J. Robinson, Jr., had an earlier marriage than his marriage to Miriam Spamer. The following information is known about that marriage:

Joseph J.[2] Robinson, Jr. (Joseph[1]) was born February 1850 in Maryland, and died 1924. He married (1) Mattie E. Byrne, daughter of Henry F. Byrne and Anna M.D. She was born about 1852 in Maryland, and died 09 October 1887 in Baltimore, Maryland.

No children are thus far known from the marriage of Joseph and Mattie Robinson.

The following information is known regarding the family of Mattie E. Byrne:

Henry F. Byrne was born about 1817 in Washingotn, D.C., and died 12 June 1892 in Baltimore, Maryland. He married Anna M.D. She was born about 1824 in Maryland.

Children of Henry Byrne and Anna are:

i. Sarah Maria Byrne, born about 1849 in Maryland.
ii. Chrisotopher L. Byrne, born about 1850 in Maryland.
iii. Mattie E. Byrne, born about 1852 in Maryland; died 09 October 1887 in Baltimore, Maryland.
iv. Nettie Byrne, born about 1856 in Maryland.
v. Blanche Byrne, born about 1860 in Maryland.
vi. James Byrne, born about 1862 in Maryland.
vii. Charles Bryne, born about 1866 in Maryland.

Notes

Occupations of Henry F. Byrne (from U.S. censuses):
1850: School teacher
1860: Druggist
1870: Apothecary

Residences of Henry F. Byrne (from U.S. censuses and other sources):
1850, 1860 censuses: St. Michaels, Talbot Co., Maryland
1870 census: 1st Ward, Baltimore, Maryland
1887 (obituary notice of daughter, Mattie Robinson): Old York Road, Waverly, Maryland
1892 (obituary notice of H.F. Byrne): Waverly, Maryland

In the 1860 U.S. census, Mattie Byrne is listed as Martha Byrne, and her sister, Nettie, is listed as Harriet.

A 1911 letter by Christian Augustus Emanuel Spamer states simply, "Miriam, married Joseph J. Robinson who is nearly blind."[507] When Joseph began to go blind is not known, although by attention to his occupations (see below) one might conclude that he left the coal business between 1900–1910 to find occupations more suited to his affliction.

[507] Christian Augustus Emanuel Spamer to Conrad Ludwig Spamer of Oberhessen, Germany, 25 Jul 1911, as transcribed on p. A-39 in "Spamer Families of Baltimore", appendix pp. A-38-A-40. This letter is also transcribed in the present genealogy under C. A. E. Spamer [No. 81].

Occupations of Joseph J. Robinson (from U.S. censuses and Baltimore city directories):

1870 census: Store clerk
1880 census: Coal dealer
1899 city directory: "The Robinson Coal Company, Joseph J. Robinson Jr., President", northeast corner Central Ave. and Lombard St.
1900 census: Coal dealer
1910 census: "Talisman, Foreign C . . ." [sic [508]; illegible abbreviation, possibly "Commodities"]
1912 city directory: [no occupation noted]
1913 city directory: Clerk
1920 census: Chair caner

Residences of Joseph J. Robinson, Jr. (from U.S. censuses and Baltimore city directories; special notes will be found at the conclusion of this list):

1870 census: 1st Ward, Baltimore, Maryland (with parents)
1880 census: 317 Stricker St., Baltimore, Maryland (with first wife)
1899 city directory and 1900 census: 1614 St. Paul Street, Baltimore, Maryland*
1910 census and 1912 city directory: 2202 N. Guilford Ave., Baltimore, Maryland
1920 census: 2246 N. Guilford Ave., Baltimore, Maryland†

*This property was obtained by Miriam J. Robinson at auction in April 1899, as noticed in a real estate record published in the Baltimore Sun; purchased for $1,725[509]; the deed seems to have been conveyed to her in November 1899

†At the time of the 1920 U.S. census, the Robinson family resided in the same household as with the family of Harvey F. Ero (or Erv). When Miriam Spamer Robinson's nephew, Lawrence Spamer Watters [No. 158], registered for the military draft in 1917, he gave his address as "2202 Guilford Ave." He presumably had acquired this house from his aunt and uncle.

The 1890 Baltimore city directory lists a Joseph J. Robinson working at the firm of G. W. Robinson and Son, 1012 St. Paul St. Whether this is the Joseph J. Robinson of interest is uncertain. Also of note in the same directory is Elizabeth Robinson, widow of Joseph, residing at 728 W. Franklin St.; whether these Robinsons are of relation to those under discussion here is uncertain.

Joseph J. Robinson, Jr., is buried at "Rocky Rest", near "Rockland", Perry Hall, Baltimore Co., Maryland.

162. Olive D. Robinson (1891–1950)

Occupations of Olive Robinson (from U.S. censuses):

1913 city directory: Teacher
1920 census: Railroad clerk
1930 census: Deputy clerk, U.S. Court

At the time of the 1913 Baltimore city directory and 1920 U.S. census, Olive Robinson resided with her parents; at the time of the 1930 census, with her widowed mother.

[508] "Talisman" is a mistaken occupation. The census taker apparently misunderstood Robinson's occupation; probably he had been informed that Robsinson was some kind of "–man", which sounded to him like "talisman".

[509] "Real Estate At Auction", The Sun (Baltimore), 27 Apr 1899.

Olive Robinson is buried at "Rocky Rest", near "Rockland", Perry Hall, Baltimore Co., Maryland.

163. Joseph Lee Robinson (1892–)
"Lee"

Occupations of Joseph Lee Robinson (from U.S. censuses and Baltimore city directories:
1910 census: "Office work, manufactory".
1912, 1913 city directories: Clerk

At the time of the 1912 and 1913 Baltimore city directories, Joseph Lee Robinson resided with his parents.

William Spamer was the only member of the Spamer family who remained actively in a maritime occupation after the family's tragic affairs with the tugboat Ella (about which see more with the genealogical sketch of George Spamer [No. 44]). William was not involved in those affairs. He was, at least in 1880, Secretary of the Towboat Engineer's Beneficial Association, No. 1, a Baltimore-based professional organization of tugboat engineers. A notice in the Baltimore Sun, over his name, indicates that the Association would after September change their meeting place from their hall on Broadway to a new hall "at the intersection of Fawn, Gough and South Central avenue".[510] In 1901 at least, he was elected as Corresponding Secretary of the Marine Engineers' Beneficial Association, No. 5; in the newspaper notice his name is spelled "Spanner".[511] He also was a member of the Free and Accepted Masons.

A record of legal proceedings in the Circuit Court in Baltimore, in 1887, notices "William Spamer vs. Virginia E. Spamer; bill for divorce a vinculo matrimonii filed."[512] Note that this post-dates by six years the death of Virginia Shackleford Spamer, whose burial record corroborates her death in 1881. She is the putative mother of Joseph [No. 172], thus it may be possible that William married another Virginia shortly after the death of his second wife, and she may be the mother of Joseph. The very fact that proceedings were filed against Virginia Spamer indicates, obviously, that a woman of that name was present at the time; but who she was is not clear, nor when the putative marriage took place.

The legal definitions for divorces a vinculo matrimonii may reveal legal difficulties not now known fully by the family.[513] Some family members, now long deceased, may have been aware of these problems and discreetly avoided mention of them, which in turn may have contributed to the ambiguous and contradictory information that we now have. The divorce petition has not been seen, thus the grounds for it cannot be speculated here. Whether the birth of Joseph A. Spamer in any way precipitated these proceedings is conjecture.

[512] "Proceedings of the Courts", The Sun (Baltimore), 1 Aug 1887. [Notice from the genealogical information with Virginia (Shackleford) Spamer, above, that the Virginia Shackleford of Virginia, who has been located in the 1870 U.S. census, is listed in that census with the middle initial "C." Either the census taker misunderstood "E." for "C.", or the newspaper record of the 1887 divorce petition by William Spamer erred by inserting the middle initial "E."]

[513] The term, a vinculo matrimonii, means "from the bond of marriage". This is a simple enough term to understand, but in the arena of legal proceedings it has more precise, but broadly interpreted, meanings that may vary depending upon the judicial jurisdictions in which the cases are filed. A divorce of this kind may be more recognizable in its ecclesiastical sense as an annulment of marriage. The broadly defined legal interpretations descend to our American legal system from English law. In general, such a divorce is decreed when there is proved some kind of legal or canonical impediment that existed at the time of the marriage, which voids the legality of the marriage. Examples may include bigamy, adultery, impotence, and desertion for a period of time. (>> References include: websites http://www.lectlaw.com/def/a124.htm, Wikipedia website http://en.pediax.org/ Divorce [both accessed 22 Jul 2007]; and a contemporary source in E. Cobham Brewer, Dictionary of Phrase and Fable, Giving the Derivation, Source, or Origin of Common Phrases, Allusions, and Words That Have a Tale To Tell, Claxton, Remsen, and Haffelfinger, Philadelphia, 1877 [with later editions].)

Complicating matters is the fact that no published public record, such as in a newspaper, has thus far been found for the marriage intentions of William Spamer and any woman named Virginia, including the woman known certainly to have been his second wife. Neither William's marriage to Virginia Shackleford, nor his supposed marriage to a second Virginia, have thus far been located. Just as oddly, Virginia (or Jennie) Spamer, William's second wife, has thus far not been located under death notices; the only certain record we have is from the Baltimore Cemetery Company. These issues are perplexing, and the coincidences of so much missing information is frustratingly peculiar.

At the time of the 1910 U.S. census, when William Spamer resided with his daughter and son-in-law, Harry and Mary Hobbs, under the heading for his occupation is written, "Private Income".

William Spamer was buried 26 January 1912 in Lot 283/297, Area I, Baltimore Cemetery, Baltimore, Maryland.

His death seemed to have been noted in the diary of Rev. John Faulkner Potts[514] of the Church of the New Jerusalem (also known as the New Church) in Bryn Athyn, Pennsylvania. The Potts diary for 23 January 1912 (two days after William Spamer's death) notes concisely, "Death of Mr. Spamer".[515] However, Potts had noted, apparently on the date that he had been informed, the death of Christian Augustus Emanuel Spamer [No. 81], a cousin of William Spamer, who had died 7 January. C. A. E. Spamer was closely involved in national affairs of the New Church as well as with church affairs in Baltimore.

Caroline (Krumm) Spamer (1848–1871)
(wife of William Spamer)

The "Spamer Families of Baltimore" notes her marriage to William Spamer and their child,Willard, with question marks, adding, "These names are included at this point since the bodies are buried in the lot purchased by Christian, and also because they do not fit anywhre else in the family tree."[516] Her death as the wife of William is corroborated in the Baltimore Sun obituaries. The identity of Willard as their son is corroborated by the marker on his grave.

Caroline Krumm Spamer was buried 9 December 1871 in Lot 283/297, Area I, Baltimore Cemetery, Baltimore, Maryland. In cemetery records her surname is spelled "Sparmer".[517]

Lots 283/297, Area I, were purchased by Christian Spamer (presumably in 1861 at the same time as whch his brother, Ludwig [No. 37], had purchased Lots 284/298. The first interment in Christian's lots was in 1870–his infant grandson, Willard Andrew Spamer [No. 168], son of William and Caroline (Krumm) Spamer. A year and a half later Caroline was second to be buried in the lots.

Virginia (Shackleford) Spamer (ca. 1853–1881) Also see Additions & Corrections (wife of William Spamer)
"Jennie"

Both she and her mother were known as "Jennie".

In the "Spamer Families of Baltimore", her maiden name is given as "Virginia Ellen Shakeford".[518] However, the surname Shakeford appears nowhere in U.S. census records of the time, and because of this I have assumed that the name as provided by A. M. Spamer is incorrect. Whether the error came as the result of misinformation from, or obtained by, his sister, Frances, or similarly through his own research, has not been determined.

I have attempted to locate Virginia in the U.S. census records. There is but one pertinent record, from the 1870 census, which lists a "Virginia C. Shackleford", aged 18 (thus born about 1853), born in Virginia. She is listed as the eldest child residing with her parents and siblings in Bland Township, Prince George's Co., Maryland; the daughter of W. S. and Sarah J. Shackleford, farmer and teacher, respectively, who both were born in Virginia. This could be the Virginia who within a couple of years married William Spamer. I have not located any other pertinent Virginia or Jennie of similar age under any variant spellings of Shackleford. In the 1870 census record just mentioned, Virginia Shackleford's siblings and their ages are listed as follows: Anna E., 15; Lula L., 14; Lottie B., 11; William T., 12; Edward F., 10; John, 6; all born in Virginia, as were their parents. (Note, however, that in the 1880 census, Virginia Spamer, wife of William, is listed with the notations that her father was born in Maryland, her mother in Virginia.)

Also of note is a record in the family genealogy of one Pleasant Alice (Shackleford) Anderson (born about 1885), daughter-in-law of Emma S. (Bopst) Anderson (1850-1937), wife of Thomas A. Anderson (1844–1933). Emma Bopst was the aunt (by marriage) of George Edward Bopst (1875–after April 1930), who married Cecelia E. Spamer (1880-1927) [No. 189]. Thus there is likely to be a genealogical connection between Virginia Shackleford and Pleasant Shackleford, but which is as yet undetermined.

The 1880 U.S. census lists Virginia Spamer's age as 21, which yields for her a calculated date of birth about 1859; but her age as given there is likely in error. Thus far we have only the authority of the lot record card from the Baltimore Cemetery Co., which notes the interment of "Virginia Spamer May 3, 1881 [aged] 28 yr".[519] Accordingly, her calculated birth date is about 1853. Note that the 1853 date agrees with the information recorded for "Virginia C. Shackleford" in the 1870 census of Bland Twp., Virginia, mentioned above.

Virginia Shackleford Spamer was buried at Baltimore Cemetery in Lot 298, Area I, a lot originally purchased by Ludwig Spamer [No. 37].[520]

Spamer (8 Jul 1975, reproduced in facsimile in "Spamer Families of Baltimore", appendix pp. A-41-A-42), "As our office was downtown at the time of the Baltimore Fire [in 1904] our detailed records were destroyed." However, the corroboration of the photocopied lot record card records on both front and back of the card Virginia Spamer's interment date of 3 May 1881; the writing is very clear.

[520] Baltimore Cemetery Co. to Earle Spamer, photocopy of lot record card, Nov 2007. Ludwig Spamer [No. 37], brother of Christian Spamer [No. 38], had purchased adjacent Lots 284/298, Area I.

168. Willard A. Spamer (1869–1870)

He was buried 19 July 1870 in Lot 283/297, Area I, Baltimore Cemetery, Baltimore, Maryland. In cemetery records his surname is spelled "Sparmer".

The "Spamer Families of Baltimore" [521] queried Willard's relationship to William and Caroline Spamer, but Willard's grave marker specifically notes that he is the son of "William & C. E. Spamer".

170. Walter Benjamin Spamer (1876–1945) Also see Additions & Corrections

He had no children. His World War I draft registration card (1918) gives his date of birth as 13 April 1877, listing there that his occupation was a machinist at the Calvert Machine Co., 849 S. Bond St., Baltimore. His occupation is listed as a machinist also in the 1899, 1912, and 1913 Baltimore city directories, and the 1900, 1920, and 1930 U.S. censuses.

Krumm Family
Collateral Genealogy
(24 descendants)

The genealogy of the Krumm family, as it relates to our Spamer lineage and as currently understood, is as follows:[522]

[521] "Spamer Families of Baltimore", p. 11.

[522] A much more extensive descendency has been determined by Philip Robert Gant, but only the relations to the generation of the Krumm-Spamer marriage are recorded here. The more complete descendency is recorded in the Spamer-Smith database and is likewise held in files. (Philip Robert Gant, "Descendants of Frederick Christian Andrew Krumm", 2005; received in correspondence, P. R. Gant to Earle Spamer, 2005.)

Generation No. 1

1. Krumm[1] was from Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany.

Children of Krumm are:

+ 2 i. Frederick Christian Andrew[2] Krumm, born 19 January 1819 in Frankfurt, Germany; died 19 April 1878 in Baltimore, Maryland.
3 ii. Jacob Krumm, born about 1829 in Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany. He married Lizzie; born about 1829 in Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany.

NOTES

Philip Gant (informant) assumes that Jacob Krumm is a sibling, since he is listed in the 1850 U.S. census for the household. His occupation then was piano maker.

Generation No. 2

2. Frederick Christian Andrew[2] Krumm (Krumm[1]) was born 19 January 1819 in Frankfurt, Germany, and died 19 April 1878 in Baltimore, Maryland. He married Christina Engle, daughter of John Engle and Sophia. She was born 13 September 1825 in Hessen-Darmstadt, Germany, and died 02 February 1914 in Baltimore, Maryland.

Children of Frederick Krumm and Christina Engle are:

4 i. Louis Phillip[3] Krumm, born 1845 in Maryland; died 1904. He married Mary A. Causewell 1870 in Baltimore, Maryland; born about 1849 in Maryland.
+ 5 ii. Caroline E. Krumm, born 03 February 1848 in Maryland; died 07 December 1871 in Baltimore, Maryland.
+ 6 iii. Emma Alice Krumm, born 09 July 1850 in Garibaldo Hotel, Fell's Point, foot of Broadway, Baltimore, Maryland; died 31 October 1914 in Baltimore, Maryland.
7 iv. Leopold Frank Krumm, born 1853 in Maryland; died 23 September 1904.
8 v. Elizabeth Lizette Krumm, born 1856 in Maryland; died 1935. She married Nathan Baer.
9 vi. Henry Krumm, born 1856 in Maryland; died 08 June 1860.
+ 10 vii. Nettie T. Krumm, born 1861 in Baltimore, Maryland; died 1945 in Baltimore, Maryland.
11 viii. Henry Frank Krumm, born 1864 in Maryland; died 1928.
+ 12 ix. Matilda Krumm, born 16 March 1868 in Baltimore, Maryland; died 04 July 1950 in Baltimore, Maryland.

NOTES

2. Frederick Christian Andrew Krumm (1819–1878)

He immigrated to Baltimore, Maryland, about 1840. He was a piano maker, tavern keeper, and ship yeoman.

He was buried 22 April 1878 in Baltimore Cemetery, Baltimore, Maryland (Area S, Lot 471).

Christina (Engle) Krumm (1825–1914)
(wife of Frederick Christian Andrew Krumm)

At the time of the 1910 U.S. census, she resided with her daughter and son-in-law, Emma and Soren thor Straten. The date of death on her grave marker is 17 December 1914.

4. Louis Phillip Krumm (1845–1904)

He was occupied as a tobacconist.

7. Leopold Frank Krumm (1853–1904)

He was a member of the Knights of Pythilas, Shield of Honor, and Foresters of America. He was a member of St. Mark's German Lutheran Church. In 1878 he was a shipjoiner. He was buried 26 September 1904 in Baltimore Cemetery, Baltimore, Maryland.

Generation No. 3

5. Caroline E.[3] Krumm (Frederick Christian Andrew[2], Krumm[1]) was born 03 February 1848 in Maryland, and died 07 December 1871 in Baltimore, Maryland. She married William Spamer 15 November 1868, son of Christian Spamer and Elizabeth Schroeder. He was born 21 March 1847 in Maryland, and died 21 January 1912.

See main Spamer genealogy, above, for information relating to Caroline (Krumm) and William Spamer.

6. Emma Alice[3] Krumm (Frederick Christian Andrew[2], Krumm[1]) was born 09 July 1850 in Garibaldo Hotel, Fell's Point, foot of Broadway, Baltimore, Maryland, and died 31 October 1914 in Baltimore, Maryland. She married Soren Julius thor Straten 10 October 1869 in Trinity Lutheran Church, State St., Baltimore, Maryland, son of Nicholas Straten and Dorothea Stubbe. He was born 29 March 1841 in Herfolge Parish, Denmark, and died 20 December 1913 in Baltimore, Maryland.

Children of Emma Krumm and Soren Straten are:

14 i. Christina Doris thor[4] Straten, born 21 April 1871 in Baltimore, Maryland; died 03 November 1961 in Maryland General Hospital, Baltimore, Maryland. She married Silas Wesley Ennis 17 January 1891 in Baltimore, Maryland; born 08 August 1868 in Virginia; died 22 March 1930.

15 ii. Louis Philip thor Straten, born 19 February 1873 in Baltimore, Maryland; died 17 February 1943 in Baltimore, Maryland. He married (1) Catherine Flynn; born about 1885; died 27 November 1974 in Baltimore, Maryland. He married (2) Mary Agnes Aldridge 19 August 1895 in Baltimore, Maryland; born 24 July 1878 at 372 Laurel St., Baltimore, Maryland; died 01 August 1955 in Westville, Gloucester Co., New Jersey.

16 iii. Frederick Christian thor Straten, born 07 July 1875; died 28 November 1879.

17 iv. Henry Jacob thor Straten, born 27 June 1885 in Baltimore, Maryland; died 11 January 1946 in Baltimore, Maryland. He married Wilhelmina Helen Schoeffer 14 April 1909 in Baltimore, Maryland; born 26 May 1885 in Baltimore, Maryland; died 14 February 1940 in Baltimore, Maryland.

18 v. Nettie F. thor Straten, born 25 June 1888 in Baltimore, Maryland; died 12 December 1970 in Magnolia Hall Nursing Home, Chestertown, Kent Co., Maryland. She married Oskar Torleif Gulbrandsen 12 December 1914; born 29 March 1891 in Oslo, Norway; died 19 June 1963 in United Memorial Hospital, Baltimore, Maryland.

10. Nettie T.[3] Krumm (Frederick Christian Andrew[2], Krumm[1]) was born 1861 in Baltimore, Maryland, and died 1945 in Baltimore, Maryland. She married Jacob P. F. Bosch about 1881. He was born about 1855 in Germany, and died before 1930.

Children of Nettie Krumm and Jacob Bosch are:

19 i. Tilly[4] Bosch, born about 1883 in Maryland.

20 ii. Julia Krumm Bosch, born about 1887 in Baltimore, Maryland; died in Baltimore, Maryland. She married Thomas Peter Cunningham about 1906; born about 1884 in Maryland.

21 iii. Emma Bosch, born 16 January 1889 in Baltimore, Maryland; died 10 December 1921 in Baltimore, Maryland.

NOTES

Information from database of Philip Gant: “There may be another child born of this marriage. A Nettie M. Bosch was buried in the Krumm family plot on August 31, 1884 at the Baltimore Cemetery. She died of Cholera according to Myrtle Miller in her email dated 18 April 2004. Note also the surname is sometimes spelled Busch instead of Bosch.”

Jacob P. F. Bosch (ca. 1855–before 1930), husband of Nettie T. Krumm [No. 10], immigrated to the U.S. in 1855 and was a naturalized citizen in 1875.

Tilly Bosch (ca. 1883–) [No. 19] never married. At the time of the 1930 census, she was occupied as a “saleswoman, poultry for wages”.

Emma Bosch (1889–1921) [No. 21] never married. She was buried 12 December 1921 in Greenmount Cemetery, Baltimore, Maryland.

12. Matilda[3] Krumm (Frederick Christian Andrew[2], Krumm[1]) was born 16 March 1868 in Baltimore, Maryland, and died 04 July 1950 in Baltimore, Maryland. She married William Elliott Miller 25 May 1892 in Baltimore, Maryland. He was born 12 March 1866 in Auburn, Placer, California, and died 11 December 1939 in Baltimore, Maryland.

Children of Matilda Krumm and William Miller are:

22 i. William Allan[4] Miller, born 12 April 1893 in Baltimore, Maryland; died 16 June 1948 in Bel Air, Maryland. He married Myrtle Marie Flack 15 June 1913 in Rockhall, Maryland; born 03 September 1894 in Baltimore, Maryland; died 02 February 1973 in Bel Air, Maryland.

23 ii. Nettie Miller, born about 1896; died 27 February 1898.

24 iii. Jacob Edward Miller, born 18 May 1899; died November 1982. He married (1) Mabel Janet Beurrier; born 1900; died 1979 in Baltimore, Maryland. He married (2) Dorothy; died 1998.

NOTES

Matilda (Krumm) Miller (1868–1950) [No. 12] died as the result of falling on a curb. She was buried 6 July 1950 in Greenmount Cemetery, Baltimore, Maryland. In 1898 she had resided at 238 Milton Ave., Baltimore, Maryland.

At the time of the 1930 U.S. census, William Elliott Miller (1866–1939), husband of Matilda Krumm, was occupied as a clerk in the ice industry.

At the time of the 1920 census, William Allan Miller (1893–1948) [No. 22] was occupied as a shipping clerk in a machinery company. He is buried in Bel Air Memorial Gardens, Bel Air, Maryland.

Myrtle (Flack) Miller (1894–1973), wife of William Allan Miller, is buried in Bel Air Memorial Gardens, Bel Air, Maryland.

Nettie Miller (ca. 1896–1898) [No. 23] is buried in Greenmount Cemetery, Baltimore, Maryland.

At the time of the 1920 census, Jacob Edward Miller (1899–1982) [No. 24] was a medical student. He is buried in Greenmount Cemetery, Baltimore, Maryland.

94. Mary Elisabeth[5] Spamer (Christian[4], Johann Conrad[3], Johann Conrad[2], Johannes[1]) was born February 1849 in Maryland, and died 02 August 1906 in 1723 E. Lanvale St., Baltimore, Maryland. She married George August Pausch 25 December 1871, son of George Pausch and Louisa. He was born about 1849 in Maryland; died before 1899.

Children of Mary Spamer and George Pausch are:

173 i. Arthur[6] Pausch, born 30 November 1873; died 11 July 1903.

174 ii. Matthew Pausch, born about 1876 in Georgia.

175 iii. Mary Pausch, born about 1877 in Georgia.

176 iv. Walter Pausch, born about 1879 in Georgia.

\+ 177 v. George Pausch, born 04 April 1885 in Maryland; died 02 July 1972 in Maryland.

NOTES

94. Mary (Spamer) Pausch (1849–1906)

In the "Spamer Families of Baltimore", Mary Elisabeth Spamer's birth date is given as 21 March 1847; this was the birth date of her brother, William Spamer. According to the "Spamer Families of Baltimore", George and Mary Pausch had seven children who died in early childhood, with only Arthur and George surviving to adulthood.[523] The 1900 U.S. census indicates that she was a widow and had had ten children, two of whom survived at the time of the census.

George August Pausch (ca. 1849–before 1899)
(husband of Mary Spamer)

Occupations of George August Pausch (from U.S. censuses and Baltimore city directories): 1864 city directory: Tobacconist, 118 E. Madison St.
1870 census: Salesman
1880 census: Tobacconist

Residences of George August Pausch (from U.S. censuses):
1860, 1870 censuses: Baltimore, Maryland
1880 census: Savannah, Georgia

At this time only the parents and siblings of George August Pausch are known. Information about them is as follows: Also see Additions & Corrections

George Pausch was born about 1813 in Prussia. He married Louisa. She was born about 1824 in Wurtemburg, Germany.

Children of George Pausch and Louisa are:
i. John H. Pausch, born about 1838 in Maryland.
ii. Margaret Pausch, born about 1843 in Maryland.
iii. George August Pausch, born about 1849 in Maryland. He married Mary Spamer.
iv. Louisa Pausch, born about 1858 in Maryland.
v. Frederick Pausch, born about February 1860 in Maryland.
vi. Sophia Pausch, born about 1862.

NOTES

At the time of the 1860 and 1870 U.S. censuses, George Pausch was a tobacconist.

Residences of George Pausch (from U.S. censuses):
1860: 8th Ward, Baltimore city, Maryland
1870: 5th Ward, Baltimore city, Maryland
1880: Henry St., Savannah, Chatham Co., Georgia

At the time of the 1860 census, John H. Pausch was a cigar maker.

An obituary in the Baltimore Sun for 11 December 1884 notices the death of "George Pausch" on 10 Dec, "in the 73d year of his age". The funeral was to depart from "his late residence, No. 125 North Gay street".[524] This might refer to the George Pausch the present subject; and if so, it seems that he had returned to Baltimore.

In the 1899 Baltimore city directory, Frederick Pausch was a cigar manufacturer, residing at 442 N. Gay St.

[525] "Spamer Families of Baltimore", p. 13. A. M. Spamer may have cited a more recent name of the law firm.

1917 (draft registrations for David Adolph Spamer and Henry Edward Spamer): 2815 Overland Ave., Baltimore, Maryland

As noted under Christian Augustus Emanuel Spamer [No. 81], there is a studio portrait in the collections of the Maryland Historical Society that shows five men of the firm of Hinkley, Spamer and Hisky; it was taken in 1910. The subjects of the photo are not identified in the Maryland Historical Society record, but the eldest gentleman is C. A. E. Spamer. Adolph may be in the photo, too. A 1st cousin to C. A. E. Spamer, Adolph worked as the office manager for the law firm when it was Hinkley, Hisky and Burger, and perhaps during other partnerships.[526] The resemblance of one man standing behind the partners, perhaps Adolph, is strikingly similar to John Ward Spamer when he was a younger man. (John Ward Spamer was a 1st cousin to both Adolph Spamer and C. A E. Spamer; he also was my grandfather.)

Adolph Spamer was the president of the Citizens' Improvement Association of Northeast Baltimore, at least in 1912 and 1913 (as noticed in the Baltimore city directories for that year, others of which are as yet not seen).

In 1896 at least, Adolph Spamer was Secretary of the Grand Court of Maryland (chapter) of the Foresters of America,[527] and in 1898 was the Assistant Chief Ranger of the Court Stars and Stripes.[528]

In 1897, the U.S. Coast and Geodetic Survey acknowledged one "A. Spamer" of Baltimore, Maryland, as having on 6 December 1895 reported information on "Geographical positions of 4 trigonometrical stations in the vicinity of Sparrow Point, Md."[529] The only "A. Spamer" individuals who this might have been is either Adolph Noble Spamer [No. 85] or Adolph Spamer [No. 99]. Given the nature of the work and his other known and inferred civic activities, one might expect that it was this Adolph Spamer who provided the information. Also see Additions & Corrections

Frances (Thomas) Spamer (1853–1931)
(wife of Adolph Spamer)
"Fannie"

It is through the Thomas family that we have a genealogical connection with the family of Rev. Thomas Allibone King. Mary Irene Thomas, sister of Frances (Thomas) Spamer, married Rev. King. See below for collateral genealogies for the Thomas, McKnew, and King lineages as they relate to our Spamers.

180. Cora Allethia Spamer (1887–1905) Also see Additions & Corrections

She apparently never married. At the time of her death she resided in Baltimore, Maryland. At the time when the 1910 Baltimore city directory was compiled, she resided at 2607 E. Preston St. In 1942, when her brother, Hubert, registered with the draft, she resided with him at 2919 Overland Ave., Baltimore.

Francis King (senior) (–before 7 May 1753) [No. 6] was baptized 8 November 1676 at Saint Anna ter Muiden, Zeeland, The Netherlands.

Generation No. 5

7. Francis[5] King (Francis[4], Peter (Pieter de Coninck)[3], Pieter[2] de Conninck, François[1] de Coninck) was born about 1720 in probably New Castle Co., Delaware, and died before 09 December 1794 in probably New Castle Co., Delaware. He married Ann. She died after 1794.

Children of Francis King and Ann are:

+	15	i.	Francis[6] King, born between 1750-1755 in New Castle Co., Delaware; died before 13 January 1832 in Cecil Co., Maryland.
	16	ii.	Elizabeth King, born about 1750 probably in New Castle Co., Delaware; died before 03 January 1794.
	17	iii.	Isaac King, born between 1750-1770 probably in New Castle Co., Delaware; died after 24 May 1804.
	18	iv.	Ann King, born between 1750-1770 probably in New Castle Co., Delaware; died after 03 January 1794.

Generation No. 6

15. Francis[6] King (Francis[5], Francis[4], Peter (Pieter de Coninck)[3], Pieter[2] de Conninck, François[1] de Coninck) was born between 1750-1755 in New Castle Co., Delaware, and died before 13 January 1832 in Cecil Co., Maryland. He married (1) Susanna. She died before 1800. He married (2) Vandyke about 1799. She died before 1805. He married (3) undetermined wife.

Children of Francis King and Susanna are:

	19	i.	Ann[7] King. She married Levirnge.
	20	ii.	Rachel King. She married Pugh.
	21	iii.	Elizabeth King, born about 1785; died 21 December 1860. She married John Biddle Price.

Children of Francis King and Vandyke are:

+	24	i.	Francis[7] King, born 24 January 1800 in New Castle Co., Delaware; died 15 March 1876 in Cecilton, Cecil, Maryland.
	25	ii.	John King, born before 1805.

Children of Francis King and undetermined are:

22 i. Jacob[7] King, died in Alive 1830.
\+ 23 ii. Temperance A. King, born about 1830 in Delaware; died 11 August 1882.

NOTES

Rev. Francis King (1750/55–before 13 January 1832) [No. 15] may have had up to 17 children by at least three marriages. He was one of the earliest Methodist ministers.

Generation No. 7

23. Temperance A.[7] King (Francis[6], Francis[5], Francis[4], Peter (Pieter de Coninck)[3], Pieter[2] de Conninck, François[1] de Coninck) was born about 1830 in Delaware, and died 11 August 1882. She married Thomas Broxson 09 October 1848 in Cecil Co., Maryland. He was born between 1819-1820, and died after 1880.

Children of Temperance King and Thomas Broxson are:

26 i. Thomas[8] Broxson, born between 1858-1859 in Maryland; died after 1880.
27 ii. Francis Broxson, born between 1862-1863 in Maryland; died after 1880.
28 iii. Mary Broxson, born between 1864-1865 in Maryland; died after 1880.
29 iv. Richard A. Broxson, born about 15 May 1867 in Maryland; died 24 April 1884.
30 v. James W. Broxson, born between 1869-1870 in Maryland; died after 1880.
31 vi. Harry E. Broxson, born between 1872-1873 in Maryland; died after 1880.

NOTES

Francis Broxson (1862/63–after 1880) [No. 27] was known as “Frank”.

24. Francis[7] King (Francis[6], Francis[5], Francis[4], Peter (Pieter de Coninck)[3], Pieter[2] de Conninck, François[1] de Coninck) was born 24 January 1800 in New Castle Co., Delaware, and died 15 March 1876 in Cecilton, Cecil Co., Maryland. He married (1) Frances Broxson about 1820 in Appoquinimink Hundred, New Castle Co., Delaware, daughter of John Broxson. She died before 09 December 1837. He married (2) Deborah Mears 09 December 1837 in Cecil Co., Maryland. She died before 10 October 1846. He married (3) Mary S. Pantry 10 October 1846 in Cecil Co., Maryland. She died before November 1853. He married (4) Sarah M. Canan 09 November 1853 in Cecil Co., Maryland.

Children of Francis King and Deborah Mears are:

32 i. Francis[8] King, born between 1843-1844 in Cecil Co., Maryland; died after 1865.
33 ii. Rebecca J. King, born between 1845-1846 in Cecil Co., Maryland; died after 1860.

Children of Francis King and Mary Pantry are:

34 i. Mary Eliza[8] King.
35 ii. Lewis Patterson King, born October 1851 in Maryland.

Children of Francis King and Sarah Canan are:

\+ 36 i. Thomas[8] King, born 15 November 1856 in Cecil Co., Maryland; died 12 January 1927 in Jacksonville, Florida.
37 ii. David E. King, born between 1858-1859 in Cecil Co., Maryland; died after 1860.
38 iii. Arthur V. King, born between 1860-1861 in Maryland; died 1944 in near Galena, Maryland.
39 iv. Sarah Ella King.
40 v. George E. King, born April 1865 in Maryland; died after 1900 in Wilmington, Delaware.

NOTES

Francis King (senior) (1800–1876) [No. 24] resided 1820–1828/1831 in Appoquinimink Hundred, Delaware; thereafter for the rest of his life he resided in Cecil Co., Maryland. He is buried in Maryland City Cemetery (today Cecilton Zion Cemetery), Cecilton, Maryland.

A recollection of Methodist ministry Bishop L. J. Coppin recalled a boyhood meeting of Francis King, and, years later as a minister, meeting again Francis' son, Rev. Thomas Allibone King, just as King was beginning a New Church ministry in Baltimore, Maryland (and about which see more, below, in the notes about Rev. King):

> "At the age of twelve I went on the fourth day of April to help a farmer by the name of Francis King plant corn. I remained with him the balance of the year. He gave me twenty dollars and a suit of clothes for nearly ten months. It was from there I went with Billy Cannon—Mr. King's grandson—to Freeman's Mill, at the head of the Sassafras River. Francis King was a big, fat man, who had been married four times. He did not own slaves, but hired both slave and free labor. His youngest child, a boy, was named Thomas Alabone [sic]. This was in 1860. Alabone was about seven years old, I suppose.[531] When, in 1881, I went to take charge of Bethel Church, Baltimore, I found the Rev. Thomas A. King pastoring a church there; of course we were glad to meet each other."[532]

Arthur V. King (1860/61–1944) [No. 38] never married. He resided with his sister, Ella, in Galena, Maryland.

Generation No. 8

36. Thomas Allibone[8] King (Francis[7], Francis[6], Francis[5], Francis[4], Peter (Pieter de Coninck)[3], Pieter[2] de Conninck, François[1] de Coninck) was born 15 November 1856 in Cecil Co., Maryland, and died 12 January 1927 in Jacksonville, Florida. He married Mary Irene Thomas 1879, daughter of Elias Thomas and Catherine McKnew. She was born 09 August 1857 in Baltimore, Maryland, and died 02 October 1942 in 7345 La Jolla Blvd., San Diego, California.

36. Thomas Allibone King (1856–1927)

Rev. Dr. Thomas Allibone King was a minister in the Church of the New Jerusalem, principally in Baltimore, Maryland, and near Chicago, Illinois. On 22 December 1925, while in Toledo, Ohio, he was stricken by a stroke, after which he retired to the home of his daughter, Mrs. Beulah Mallette, in Jacksonville, Florida; but in two years he died, after partially recovering. He was buried in Lorraine Park Cemetery in Woodlawn, Baltimore Co., Maryland.

[531] Thomas A. King was just four or five years of age.

[532] L. J. Coppin, Unwritten History (A.M.E. Book Concern, Philadelphia, 1919), pp. 85-86. Rev. King had shortly before been ordained into the Church of the New Jerusalem, having left the Methodist Conference, although in his memoir Bishop Coppin took no notice of King's withdrawal.

Rev. Levi Jenkins Coppin, D.D., LL.D., was a black man, made in 1900 the thirtieth bishop of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, the historic Methodist denomination founded by Richard Allen and others in Philadelphia in 1816. (>>Richard R. Wright, Centennial Encyclopaedia of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, Book Concern of the A.M.E. Church, Philadelphia, 1916, pp. 74-75.)

Although many of the Spamer family were members of the New Church in Baltimore, it is not certain where many specific individuals worshipped. Some of the family of Henry Spamer [No. 41], including Henry, are known to have left the Calvert Street church (where Rev. King preached 1881-1893) in favor of a smaller mission elsewhere in Baltimore. However, the circumstances for this are not known now, and which may have post-dated King's tenure.[533] Other Spamers (most notably Christian Augustus Emanuel Spamer [No. 81] and his daughters) were very involved in the affairs of the New Church.[534]

When Rev. King was a minister in Baltimore, he also was a colleague and friend of Rev. John Edward Smith, the father of Lora Smith who married John Ward Spamer [No. 114]. King and Smith established a summer church camp on the Eastern Shore of Maryland mid the mid-1890s. Rev. Smith's son, Edward, wrote of this camp: [535]

> The summer vacation of the Smiths and Kings on the Linchester River[536], near Preston, and the Choptank River and Wright's Landing:
> The "Minnie Wheeler",[537] one of the river boats plying the Choptank River between Cambridge and Denton, had as her captain Captain Perry[538], whom Papa met through his friend, William Potter Richardson of Tuckahoe Neck, Caroline County. Papa asked Captain Perry to recommend a spot for a summer camp, where there would be found [533] When Rev. George Albutt left the Calvert Street church to minister a small mission in West Baltimore, Henry Spamer and his family followed him. When this was is not certain, although it seems to post-date Rev. King's tenure at the Calvert Street church.

[534] At the 1889 annual meeting of the Maryland Association of the New Jerusalem, held that year in Washington, D.C., officers were elected as follows: Rev. Jabez Fox, presiding minister; Rev. J. B. Parmelee, vice president; and C.A.E. Spamer, recording secretary ("The Swedenborgian Society", The Sun (Baltimore), 23 Feb 1889). Rev. Fox is noticed in the current sketch. Rev. Parmelee is noticed in the Smith Family genealogy (see Part II) as a colleague of Rev. John Edward Smith when they both were members of the Methodist Conference, and for whom Rev. Smith's son, Ralph Parmelee, was named. C. A. E. Spamer [No. 81] is noticed elsewhere in the present part of this genealogy. At least within part of the Spamer family the Calvert Street church figured prominently in their lives.

[536] The Linchester River was formerly known as Hunting Creek. Its name was changed by act of the General Assembly of Maryland, approved 18 Feb 1890. (>>"An Act to change the name of Hunting creek, a navigable stream of water dividing a part of the counties of Caroline and Dorchester, to that of Linchester river." General Assembly of Maryland, Session Laws, Vol. 396, p. 35.)

[537] The Minnie Wheeler was a steamer launched in Baltimore in 1881. She was 260 tons, 124 ft long, 24-ft beam, and 8-ft draft. She carried 42 first-class passengers and 54 deck passengers (even in the weather), with separate men's and women's cabins fore and aft of the salon, respectively, and a separate cabin aft of the main deck for non-white passengers. The cargo hold could carry 5500 bushels of grain. She was named for Capt. Caleb Clark Wheeler of the Wheeler Transportation Line, headquartered in a granary on Hillsboro Wharf, Hillsboro, Maryland, and serving the lower Choptank and Tuckahoe Rivers. The Wheeler Transportation Line also provided service to Baltimore; the fare between Hillsboro and Baltimore was 50 cents, with staterooms and meals each being an additional 50 cents. Fare for deck space on short journeys on the rivers was 30 cents. Wheeler's was the only steamboat service then based on the Eastern Shore. When Capt. Wheeler died intestate in 1901, the Minnie Wheeler and two other vessels were sold to the Baltimore, Chesapeake and Atlantic Railway Co., and thereafter she carried only freight. In 1916 she was sold to the Bethlehem Steel Co., Baltimore, and used as workers' quarters. She was scrapped soon after World War I. (>>Ralph E. Eshelman and Carl W. Scheffel, Jr., Maryland's Upper Choptank River and Tuckahoe River Cultural Resource Inventory (April 1999); "Steamboats and Their Captains", from Preston News and Farmer, 24 Sep 1942, in "Choptank and Tuckahoe RiverGuide", website http:// www.Riverheritage.org/Riverguide/; accessed 21-24 Jul 2006.)

good fishing and crab[b]ing. He recommended a site near Wright's Landing not far from Preston on the Linchester River (sometimes called Hunting Creek).[539] Linchester River is a tributary of the Choptank River and empties into that river near Wright's Landing.

Through friends in Preston, Papa made arrangements with a farmer whose land was on the Linchester River to use the site selected for a summer cottage. It was a joint project by Papa and Rev. King of Baltimore, as I remember the name was John Otis King; he and his family were also Swedenborgian.[540] The farmer agreed to allow the land to be used for this purpose and to allow access thereto, in return for the lumber used in the construction of the cottage. The cottage was built along the lines of the cottages used for Camp meetings in the area. It had to be good sized because both the Kings and Smiths had growing children. It was rectangular, with side walls about five feet high. The roof was a peak high enough for a second floor room and the wings extended to take care of bunks on the first floor off the space for adequate living quarters and the dining table, made of boards and extending from the front to the back of the cottage. A lean-to was at the back for cooking, in which was a kerosine [kerosene] stove. At some distance from the back was also a tripod on which hung an iron kettle. It was comfortable and accommodated all, but it was not painted and had no special water-proofing on the roof—when it leaked we just rubbed the knots with soft yellow soap.

There was a row boat of which we had use. All of the King family came and the Smith family too, except Grandmother and my sister Lora. The idea did not appeal to Lora, and Grandmother stayed in Easton with her. All seemed to enjoy the summer. Quinine was doled out regularly because of the nearness of the water and marshes across the river. Roberta did not enjoy the quinine.

After a stormy day a single masted sail boat, no sails, drifted past our camp and we tied her up to our little landing. There was a fence to the edge of the water and extending a little into the river, so we had a little landing. The sail boat was great fun until the owner recovered it.

Suitable table scraps were dumped in at the landing, so soon we had a good supply of crabs. White and yellow perch were caught, and one of the regular fishermen gave me a couple of fine Pike fish.

Papa and Rev. King carried drinking and cooking water across the field from the farm house in large buckets. For kerosine [sic] they would row to the wharf on the Choptank. Mr. King and Gilbert went one day when the Choptank was quite rough, and Gilbert remarked that is "looked as if they would soon be in the Heavenly Kingdom". In relating this, Mr. King said it looked as if they would.

The Preston people, Mr. and Mrs. Charlie Whitby, Colonel Ed Douglass and his wife and daughter, Mattie, and others came down on Saturday or Sunday and would bring friend[s] chicken and an abundance of food. As summer wore on Mother found along the river bank quantities of wild plums and grapes, which we picked with the assistance of the boat.

Vacation time was ending and we were planning to return to Easton when word came that a fire had damaged the basement of the school and that it would not open on time, so we stayed on. Prof. Murdaugh had discovered the first before it made much headway. I heard that later a Doctor Lannon has since built his waterfront cottage on the site of the Smith-King summer cottage.

[539] Hunting Creek is the former name of the Linchester River. It was renamed by act of the Maryland General Assembly in 1890.

[540] This is certainly Rev. Dr. Thomas Allibone King (1856-1927), who had a son, Otis Hinkley King (1887-1941). The son was named for the Baltimore lawyer, Edward Otis Hinkley, who (as noted earlier in the present sketch) helped introduce Rev. J. E. Smith to the doctrines of the New Church. Rev. King was pastor of the New Jerusalem Church in Baltimore. Rev. King's sister-in-law, Francis Allethia Thomas, was the wife of Adolph Spamer (1861-1939); Adolph was a successful legal clerk in the Baltimore law firm of Hinkley, Spamer and Hisky (where his cousin, Christian Augustus Emanuel Spamer, was a partner).

> Camp Meetings and Camp Meeting Grounds were quite an institution in those days. They were usually built in pleasant groves and people built cottages, some quite convenient and substantial, and when the summer work on the farms slacked off, religious services were held. The cottages were arranged in orderly rows and streets laid out, and a large tent was raised for the services and activities. The camps were an important part of the religious and social life of the community.

An uncredited newspaper clipping from The Denton Journal indicates that when Rev. King was still a minister in Baltimore, he > "bought the old academy building and the grove in which it is situated in Preston. He will remodel the house, which is a large one, and make it a summer residence for his family. It is in a magnificent grove of large primeval white oaks, so few of which now remain on the Eastern Shore. The wood covers 90 square perches of land. The house was built in 1863."[541]

Two biographical sketches of Rev. King were published in The New-Church Messenger; one, a background of the man who then was serving in the Chicago Society of the New Church in 1900, in Englewood, Illinois, and the other a biographical recollection at the time of his death, in 1927. Beginning with the 1900 sketch:[542]

> "The Rev. Thomas A. King was born in Cecil Co., Maryland, November the sixteenth, 1857 [sic]. He is descended on both sides of his family from a line of Methodist ministers. His paternal grandfather was one of the earliest preachers of methodism, and his maternal grandfather was also a Methodist minister of prominence in the early days. He was therefore brought up under the influence of Methodist teaching. He showed in childhood the bent of his mind, and began t hold religious services at the age of ten years. When he was seventeen he was licensed to preach and placed under the care of the Theological Faculty of the Maryland Conference of the Methodist Church. After one year he was received as a probationer into the Conference, and while engaged in preaching, continued his theological studies and was graduated by the Theological Faculty and ordained into the ministry in 1879. Mr. King has two brothers also in the Methodist ministry.
> "Two years prior to his ordination and while yet a student, his mind began to be exercised greatly on the doctrine of the Trinity. Shortly after this, he was led to the study of the Writings of the New Church, making in all six years of service in the Methodist Church. He had been largely vastated of all the old doctrines, especially that of the tri-personality and the vicarious atonement, and also the resurrection of the material body. It is unusual for vastation to take place at so early an age. It was during one of his theological examinations that he first heard of Swedenborg. The examination was upon the Trinity, and after it was over, the examining professor asked each member of the class to give his idea of the Trinity. A student sitting near Mr. King answered as follows, "There is one God, in whom is a divine Trinity which is Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, which make one like the soul, body and operation in man." The professor asked him where he obtained this idea, and he said it was from the writings of Swedenborg. The professor, turning to Mr. King, asked how he would explain the Trinity. Mr. King said, "I would say exactly what my brother has said." The astonished professor exclaimed, "Have you also been reading Swedenborg?" Said Mr. King, "I never heard of him before, but I see, clearly that if man is made in the image of God, he must be finitely what god is infinitely."
> "After the class adjourned, Mr. King made further inquiries concerning Swedenborg and was told about the gift books and how he could procure them.

Kent County circuit in Maryland. His first sermon was on the future life, in which he postulated the doctrine that the soul must have form, and that when the body dies the soul would form to itself a body in the other world. When the sermon was over, a gentleman approached, saying, "I have been much interested in your performance to-night, and I am sure you will make a preacher if you ever find anything to preach." Mr. King answered, "Well, I only know one thing positively, and that is that Jesus Christ is God and that the Trinity is in Him." He was then asked where he learned this, and when he replied that he obtained it from a brother minister who was reading Swedenborg, the gentleman said, "Why, I am a receiver of the doctrines of the New Church, though I rarely have the privilege of hearing them preached." This gentleman whose name was John R. Gray, had a number of years before found the true doctrines through the Rev. W. H. Pinkly. It will be seen from this that the Divine Providence placed Mr. King just where he had opportunities of investigating the Writings. Mr. Gray ordered him at once the three gift books, and Mr. King began to read True Christian Religion. He turned first to the chapter concerning the divine Trinity, and often have I heard him say that he had not had read more than four pages before he was fully convinced that Swedenborg was called of the Lord to unfold the new doctrines of Christianity.

"He began to preach the doctrines immediately, and great interest was manifested by his people in the new interpretation which the old doctrines received. In 1878 the Faculty of Theological Instruction, hearing of Mr. King's interest in Swedenborg's teachings, called him before it and asked an explanation. Mr. King stated to the faculty Swedenborg's teaching concerning the Lord, the redemption, the Scriptures and the Christian life. The Faculty were so much impressed by his exposition of these doctrines, that instead of remanding him to a lower class as had been contemplated, they passed him, but advised him not to be so free in his discussion of his belief. In the spring of 1878, the Conference assigned him to the Lexington Street church in Baltimore, a large and flourishing Methodist society, telling him at the time that this was not done as an endorsement of his views, but that he might have the restraint upon him of the older ministers of his denomination in that city. He continued, however, to preach the doctrines of the New Church as he learned them from the Writings.

"Having completed his course of study, he was ordained as an elder at the Conference of 1879 and appointed as assistant pastor with the Rev. J. T. Murray at the Congress Street church in Washington. By a coincidence this Dr. Murray was the same man who had a few years before examined the class on the Trinity. Mr. King remained in this charge for two years. During his first year he met the Rev. Jabez Fox. Up to that time he had not met any New-Church minister. Mr. Fox, hearing that a young Methodist minister was preaching the doctrines, made a visit to Mr. King's church, and after the service made himself known. This meeting between Mr. Fox and Mr. King can best be described in Mr. King's own language:

> "'It was a bright Sunday morning and a large congregation had assembled at the Congress Street Church. My subject was, "Joseph storing up the corn in Egypt." A man I took to be a minister was conducted by an usher to a front seat in the church just as I announced my text. I proceeded to unfold the New-Church doctrine of how remains are implanted and stored in children by the Lord as the only possible means of regeneration. As I developed this doctrine I noticed the commingled feeling of pleasure and astonishment in the face of the stranger. When the congregation was dismissed he came forward and made himself known to me, saying, " I am Jabez Fox, of the New-Church temple of this city." I instantly threw my arms around his neck, for until that time I had never seen a New-Churchman except Mr. Gray, who gave me my first New-Church books. From that day on to Mr. Fox's removal to the spiritual world I regarded him as a spiritual father in the Church, to whom I have always felt the deepest obligation and for whom I cherish the deepest love.'

"Mr. King's association with Mr. Fox and the Washington New-Church Society soon aroused opposition on the part of the members of his Church, so that his last year as assistant to Dr. Murray was one of much suffering. The Baltimore New-Church Society, begin without a pastor and hearing of Mr. King through Mr. Fox, invited him to preach for them quarterly during the year 1880. At the expiration of his second year in Washington he withdrew from the Baltimore Conference of the Methodist Church, the presiding officer of the Conference giving him a certificate of his good standing as a Methodist minister and commending him to the New Jerusalem Church as a faithful minister in the gospel of Christ.

"Mr. King was ordained by the Rev. Chauncy Giles, on the twenty-seventh of March, 1881, in the Baltimore house of worship[543], and having received a call to become pastor of the Baltimore Society, he entered immediately upon his work. In the fall of 1882, Mr. King was called to the pastorate of the Portland Society [Maine], but being unable to stand the severe New England winters, he returned to Baltimore and took up his work there once more. His pastorate in Baltimore, with the exception of the two years spent in Portland, extended from 1881 to 1893, when he was called to Chicago and installed as a resident pastor of the Englewood parish, which was the first parish formed from the original Chicago Society.

"During Mr. King's pastorate in Baltimore, the Church gradually grew in numbers and in prominence in the city. The most pleasant relation existed between the pastor and his people. To quote Mr. King,

> "'I have always felt grateful that my introduction to the ministry of the New Church was in the Baltimore Society. There were strong men in the Society, clear in their understanding of the doctrines, who were always helpful to me in my ministry there. I feel that nowhere else could I have laid so good a doctrinal foundation nor found people more patient with my shortcomings and the impetuosity of youth.'

"The Englewood Society was composed of thirty-five members, who, owing to their distance from the Van Buren Street Temple, had organized a distinct society. In the fall of 1893 this Society disbanded, as such its members being received back into the Chicago Society. They were then formed into the Englewood parish of the Chicago Society and Mr. King was assigned to them as a resident pastor. The growth of the Englewood parish has been phenomenal, numbering at present one hundred and sixty adult Church members with a flourishing Sunday-school. A great part of this increased membership is from the old Church, for Mr. King has a wonderful faculty of interesting and instructing the lost sheep of the house of Israel. Mr. King's sermons cannot be called distinctly doctrinal although they never fail to present the distinctive New-Church doctrines. They are simple and easy unfoldings of the internal sense of the Word, with direct application to the daily lives of his people. This gives a uniqueness to his preaching and never fails to provide spiritual food for both young and old. Mr. King devotes much of his time to pastoral work and is therefore in close touch with all of his people.

"In the fall of 1898 the frame chapel in which the parish had worshipped was removed, and the present beautiful brick and stone structure was erected on the same site. It was dedicated January 8, 1899, under the name of the Church of the Divine Humanity."

When Rev. King died, an obituary notice in The New Church Messenger, his early service in Baltimore was again noted, and added that he joined the Free and Accepted Masons in Georgetown, District of Columbia in 1880, where he was for a while the lodge's chaplain; and he was a charter member of the Masonic Lodge 601 in Lakewood, Illinois, its chaplain at the time of his death. The memorial also portrayed his ministerial style as one with "a clear doctrinal knowledge, a delightful pulpit appeal, and an amiable and entertaining personality".[544] The quotation that follows picks up in the life of Rev. King where the 1900 biographical sketch left off:[545]

"After strengthening the groups at Chicago, preaching at Kenwood, Englewood, and on the North Side to what is now the Sheridan Road Society, and organizing the New Church among the negroes, he went to Cleveland, Ohio. Here he ministered to both the Cleveland and the Lakewood groups, and accepted a call to the pastorate of Lakewood in September, 1903. He assisted in building both churches now used for worship. The Lakewood Society had seventeen members, including children, when he began, and was worshipping in a chapel built during 1827, located in a country village. The membership is now 171.

[543] The Calvert Street church, about which a little more is mentioned under Henry Spamer [No. 41].

[544] Also telling is a description that was included in The Helper, Vol. 78, No. 13 (Nov 1926): "His sermons are clear expositions of the Holy Scriptures are free from pulpit sensationalism. He preaches the gospel of Jesus Christ. He does not descend to the discussion of civic and kindred topics."

[545] "Thomas Allibone King, Minister of the New Church, 1881-1927", The New Church Messenger (23 Feb 1927), pp. 123-124.

"The church grew with the city, and it was here that Dr. King did his finest work for the New Church. The devotion and support given by his people in Lakewood was one of the richest treasures that came to the King family. Ever anxious to make his Lord known, he had given some twenty years to lecture work in Alomont, Mich., beginning there with the Rev. John Whitehead; he preached for the Society at Toledo, Ohio, for some twelve years; he worked with Mr. Pfister at the Cleveland Mission; he did missionary work at Union City, Tenn.; visited the Eastern Shore of Maryland while on vacation; and helped the group at Akron, Ohio, to organize as a New-Church Society.

"Engaged busily in man services he was stricken with paralysis while at Toledo in 1925. Removing with Mrs. King to Jacksonville, Fla., where their daughter, Mrs. Beulah Mallette resides, he appeared to improve; but, enduring two operations recently, he never fully recovered. Complications set in, and he passed from us on January 12th, while Mrs. King sat beside him. At the moment she was comforted by the unexpected coming of Mr. Geo. D. Cornell, a valued member of the Lakewood Society.

"The burial service was held from the Baltimore New Church, where Dr. King had begun his work forty-six years before. The Rev. Messrs. Geo. H. Dole, Paul Sperry, and Fred Sidney Mayer officiated at the funeral service, Mr. Dole delivering the main address.

"With all his multifarious activities, he found time for authorship, and some of his writings must be reckoned in the first rank of New-Church expository efforts. For years he contributed to The Helper its notes on the International Sunday School Lessons, and a compilation of some of these, published under the title of Pearls from the Wonder Book[546], has had wide and deserved popularity. He wrote also Pearls of Great Price[547], Allegories of Genesis[548], The Story of the Bible and (his latest work in book form) The Fundamentalist-Modernist Controversy[549]."

187. Ruth Spamer (1900–1900)

Ruth Spamer was buried 5 March 1900 in Lot 125 N½, Section Q, Loudon Park Cemetery, Baltimore, Maryland. In the "Spamer Families of Baltimore"[553] the child is listed as "stillborn son". Her name is taken from her grave marker.

Spamer Family genealogy continues after the following collateral genealogy

Wilen Family
Collateral Genealogy
(7 descendants)

The genealogy of the Wilen family, as it relates to our Spamer lineage and as currently understood, is as follows:

Descendants of John Wilen

1. John[1] Wilen was born about 1826 in Pennsylvania, and died between 1890-1900. He married Esther. She was born March 1830 in Maryland.

Children of John Wilen and Esther are:

	2	i.	Anna[2] Wilen, born about 1852 in Maryland.
	3	ii.	Dora Mary Wilen, born June 1855 in Maryland; died after March 1930.
	4	iii.	Reese M. Wilen, born 21 June 1858 in Baltimore, Maryland; died after 05 April 1930. He married (1) Mary L. about 1895; born July 1848 in Pennsylvania. He married (2) Marie between 1922-1930; born about 1884 in New York.
	5	iv.	Kate Wilen, born about 1860 in Maryland.
+	6	v.	Fannie Wilen, born 1863 in Maryland; died 04 October 1959.
	7	vi.	Bessie Wilen, born about 1870 in Maryland.

NOTES

1. John Wilen (ca. 1826–1890/1900)

Occupations of John Wilen (from U.S. censuses):

1870 census: 11th Ward, Baltimore, Maryland
1880 census: 199 Eutaw St., Baltimore, Maryland
1890 city directory: 721 N. Eutaw St., Baltimore, Maryland

In the 1870 U.S. census, the family surname is spelled "Wilson".

Esther Wilen (1830–)
(wife of John Wilen)

In the 1860 and 1870 U.S. censuses, her given name is spelled as "Hester"; in the 1880 and 1900 censuses as "Ester".

At the time of the 1900 U.S. census she is a widow, occupied as a farmer, residing in the 2nd precinct, 4th District, Baltimore Co., Maryland.

2. Anna Wilen (ca. 1852–)

She is usually listed as Annie.

3. Dora Mary Wilen (1855–after March 1930)

In records she is often listed as Mary Wilen; but as Dora M. Wilen in other records. She never married.

Residences of Dora Mary Wilen (from U.S. censuses and Baltimore city directory):
1890 city directory: 721 N. Eutaw St., Baltimore, Maryland (with father)
1900 census: 2nd precinct, 4th District, Baltimore Co., Maryland (with mother)
1910-1930 censuses and city directories: 2319 N. Charles St., Baltimore, Maryland (with sister and brother-in-law, Andrew and Fannie Spamer)

4. Reese M. Wilen (1858–after 5 April 1930)

He had no known children of his own.

Occupations of Reese M. Wilen (from U.S. censuses and city directories):
1880 census: Office clerk
1890 Philadelphia city directory: Bookkeeper
1900 census: Accountant
1910 census: Advertising accountant
1920 census: Advertising secretary
1930 census: Secretary, advertising corporation

The 1917 New York City directory lists Reese Wilen as advertising secretary for the Sacks Co., Inc., 171 Madison Ave. (Clarence O. Sacks, president).

Residences of Reese M. Wilen (from U.S. censuses, city directories, and other sources):
1890 Philadelphia city directory: 1206 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania
1900 census: 131 7th Ave., Brooklyn, Kings, New York (with his wife, they were boarders in the John MacPherson household)
1910 census: 194 Park Place, Brooklyn [presumably an apartment]
1920 census: 216-218 Prospect Place, Brooklyn (apartment)
1925 passenger list: 120 W. 42nd St., New York City [presumably an apartment]
1930 census: 465 W. 159th St., New York City (apartment)

Reese Wilen is included in the passenger list of the R.M.S. Berengaria[554], arriving in New York on 22 May 1925, having sailed from Cherbourg, France, 16 May. He seems to have traveled by himself; the purpose of the trip overseas is not known.

Marie Wilen (ca. 1884–)
(wife of Reese Wilen)

Both of her parents were born in Germany. She had children by a first marriage. She married her first husband about 1916, but no other information about the marriage is known at this time.

Children of undetermined husband and Marie are:
i. Augustus, born about 1916 in New York
ii. Muriel, born about 1922 in New York

The children lived in the Wilen household at the time of the 1930 U.S. census. They are listed in that census with the surname Wilen.

5. Kate Wilen (ca. 1860–)

In the 1890 Baltimore city directory, her occupation is listed as teacher; she resided at 721 N. Eutaw St., Baltimore (with her father).

Generation No. 2

6. Fannie[2] Wilen (John[1]) was born 1863 in Maryland, and died 04 October 1959. She married Andrew Perry Spamer 26 April 1899, son of Christian Spamer and Elizabeth Schroeder. He was born 04 March 1864 in Maryland, and died 06 December 1938.

See main Spamer genealogy for information relating to Fannie (Wilen) and Andrew Perry Spamer and descendants.

Additional Note Regarding Wilen Family

In the 1930 U.S. census for Portland, Multnomah Co., Oregon, there is listed the following family, about whom nothing else has yet been determined. They may in some way be relations to the Spamers and Wilens of this genealogy. They resided in an apartment at 311 East 21st North. The name is spelled Waelen or Welen on the census sheet; Spalmer is spelled thus.

Adolph Waelen	54	head	born in Germany, immigrated 1882, naturalized citizen
Estelle C.	54	wife	born in New York (father and mother born in New York)

[554] R.M.S. Berengaria of the Cunard Line was originally built for the Hamburg-Amerika Line as the S.S. Imperator. She was a three-funnel ship with displacement of 52,226 tons; 919 ft long, 98 ft beam, 23 kts service speed. She was constructed at the Vulcan Werft shipyard, Hamburg, and launched 23 May 1912, five weeks after the disaster of the R.M.S. Titanic. The Imperator was the largest ship in the world at the time. She lay idle during World War I and was seized by the U.S. Navy for use as a troop transport at the conclusion of the war. She was turned over to the Shipping Controller, London, as reparation for the sinking of the R.M.S. Lusitania, and was thereafter sold to the Cunard Line and renamed Berengaria. After suffering several fires during the mid-1930s, all due to faulty wiring, the Berengaria was withdrawn from service in 1938 and later that year sold for scrap. The outbreak of World War II precluded finishing the scrapping job at Southampton, due to manpower shortages. In 1946 the remnants were towed to Rosyth for complete dismantling. (>>From informational website, http://rmhh.co.uk/ships/pages/berengaria.html; accessed 21 Aug 2007; information from Cunard Archives and www.ocean-liners.com.)

Ella G. Spalmer	34	step-daughter	divorced; born in Oregon (father in Ohio, mother in New York)
Irene Spalmer	8	step-granddaughter	born in Oregon (father and mother in Oregon)

Adolph was a manufacturer's representative salesman. Ella Spalmer worked as a service observer for a telephone company.

End of Wilen Family collateral genealogy

106. Sarah Elizabeth[5] Spamer (Peter Heinrich Christian[4], Johann Conrad[3], Johann Conrad[2], Johannes[1]) was born 24 May 1852 in Maryland, and died 17 November 1911. She married (1) Aristello Gable 14 December 1872. He was born 04 June 1844 in Pennsylvania, and died after 1889. She married (2) Andrew E. Holm about 1899. He was born about 1860 in Finland, and died 19 November 1924. Also see Additions & Corrections

Child of Sarah Spamer and Aristello Gable is:

188 i. Harry[6] Gable, born about 1877 in Maryland.

188a ii. Aristello George Hartman Gable, born 5 July 1878; died 1 September 1878 in Baltimore, Maryland.

NOTES

106. Sarah (Spamer) Gable (1852–1911)

In 1896, Sarah's father, Henry Spamer, transferred to her the title of a house on Calhoun St., as noticed in the Baltimore Sun:[555]

> "Henry Spamer to Sarah E. Gable, w[est]. s[ide]. Calhoun st nr. Harlem ave. [illegible].

Henry Spamer had a residence at 701 N. Calhoun St., prior to moving to North Ave.

Also see Additions & Corrections

In 1897 at least, Sarah Gable operated a dry goods store at 702 N. Calhoun St., as noticed in a newspaper article:[556]

> The dry goods store of Mrs. Sarah E. Gable, 702 North Calhoun street, was damaged to the extent of $200 yesterday morning by fire. The fire was discovered by a passing milkman, who turned in an alarm. The origin of the fire is not known.

The Baltimore Sun reported in 1889 a pending case in the Circuit Court, "Sarah E. Gable vs. Aristello Gable".[557] Soon thereafter appeared another item, which indicated that it was a "bill for limited divorce", but it was dismissed by Judge Dennis.[558] What became of the marriage is uncertain, whether a divorce was finally obtained or if Aristello died; but Sarah remarried about 1899.

Sarah (Spamer) Holm and her second husband, Andrew E. Holm, are buried in Western Cemetery (Lot 189, Section C), Baltimore, Maryland. She was buried 20 November 1911. His date of death or the date of his interment is 19 November 1924.

Aristello Gable (1844–after 1889) Also see Additions & Corrections
(husband of Sarah Spamer)

In the "Spamer Families of Baltimore", his surname is mistakenly spelled "Sobel".[559] According to information in the U.S. censuses, his parents both were from Pennsylvania.

Occupations of Aristello Gable (from U.S. census and Baltimore city directory):
1880 census: Marble cutter
1890 city directory: Stonecutter

Residences of Aristello Gable (from U.S. census and Baltimore city directory):
1880 census: 244 Caroline St., Baltimore, Maryland
1890 city directory: 918 N. Caroline St.

It appears that the Gables of Baltimore were a family of stonecutters, perhaps quarrymen. The 1890 Baltimore city directory lists a Horace Gable, stonecutter, residing in Aristello and Sarah Gable's home at 918 N. Caroline St.; how he is related to Aristello is uncertain. In addition, also listed in the city directory is Frederick Gable, stonecutter. The directory also lists marble works managed by William Gable at 2520 E. North Ave. and 1105 E. Baltimore St., and marble works managed by Franklin Gable and Edward Gable at 1334 Greenmount Ave. and 2322 E North Ave. Also see Additions & Corrections

188. Harry Gable (ca. 1877–)

Harry Gable has not been located in the 1900 or subsequent censuses.

188a. Aristello George Hartman Gable (1878–1878)

The existence of this child, who died in infancy, was not recorded in family records, and was noticed in 2007 by his 1878 obituary in the Baltimore Sun:

> GABLE.—Taken to his heavenly home, on the morning of 1st September, ARISTELLO GEORGE HARTMAN, aged 1 month and 27 days, the beloved infant son of Aristello and Sarah E. Gable.
> "Suffer little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of Heaven."

[559] "Spamer Families of Baltimore", p. 18.

Andrew E. Holm (ca. 1860–1924)
(husband of Sarah Spamer)

Also see Additions & Corrections

Andrew E. Holm emigrated to the U.S. in 1888. Immigration data for the port of New York list an Andrew Holm, aged 30, farmer, nationality Swedish, arriving aboard the S.S. Baltic[560] on 16 April 1888. Whether this is the Andrew Holm of family is not certain.

In the 1910 U.S. census, Andrew Holm lists his birthplace as "Finland Swedish"; he is indicated to be a naturalized U.S. citizen. Andrew Holm has not been located in either the 1900 or 1920 censuses.

A real estate transfer record was published in the Baltimore Sun in 1901, where one David Fisbach sold to "Andrew E. Holm and wife" and "George P. Spamer and wife" a property on the east side of Milton Ave. near Biddle St.[561]

At the time of the 1910 census, Andrew E. Holm is listed as a stationary fireman, residing at 1908 Washington St., Baltimore, Maryland.

Andrew E. Holm is buried in Western Cemetery (Lot 189, Section C), Baltimore, Maryland. His date of death or the date of his interment is 19 November 1924.

Regarding the family burial lot in Western Cemetery (Lot 189, Section C), J. P. Redifer(?), Superintendent of the cemetery, sent a sketch of the lot to A. M. Spamer, which was reproduced in the "Spamer Families of Baltimore".[562] The lot contains two unmarked graves (which presumably are the graves of Johann Conrad Spamer [No. 7] and his wife, Johannetta) and the graves of Sarah Holm, Louisa Holm, and Andrew E. Holm.[563]

Louisa Bruckner Holm (ca. 1857–1938)

Louisa Bruckner Holm, who is buried with Andrew E. Holm, is thus far unidentified genealogically. The cemetery record lists her as Louisa Bruckner Holmes [sic], aged 81 years, interred 18 July 1938. If her age was given correctly, she was born about 1857; however, census records with which she has been identified give ages for her that indicate a birth date about 1860. She probably was Andrew Holm's second wife.

[560] The S.S. Baltic was built in 1871, a steamship also fully rigged with sails, owned and operated by the White Star Line. In 1889, she was sold to the Holland America Line, which renamed her Veendam. She struck a derelict ship on 6 Feb 1898 and sank; all onboard were saved. [562] "Spamer Families of Baltimore", appendix p. A-45.

[563] The Superintendent of Western Cemetery recorded these names as "Holmes", probably from cemetery records. Someone has noted on the sketch that there is a monument on the lot, on which the only name is that of Sarah Holmes. In all other records, including census and immigration information, the name is written Holm; and since Andrew E. Holm was from Finland it is also probable that "Holmes" is Americanized or a clerical adjustment in favor of a more English-like spelling.

At the time of the 1930 U.S. census she was listed as Louisa Holmes [sic], head of household, widowed, residing at 210 Fulton Ave., Baltimore.

A Louisa Bruckner or Louisa Holm has not been identified in 1900–1920 censuses. She has been identified, as Louisa Bruckner, in the 1870 and 1880 censuses for Baltimore (18th Ward, 1870; 375 McHamus St., 1880).

Her parents and known siblings, as recorded in the 1870 census, are as follows:

> Daniel Bruckner, aged 62, shoe maker, born in Bavaria
> Dora Bruckner, 50, born in H[esse]. Cassel
> John Bruckner, 16, laborer, born in Maryland
> Anna Bruckner, 12, born in Maryland
> Louisa Bruckner, 10, born in Maryland

At the time of the 1880 census, Louisa Bruckner resided with her parents; she was working in a factory.

At the time of the 1880 U.S. census, James Spamer and his wife, Ida, were boarding in the "Robert Haase" [Haas] household, 825 W. Lombard St., Baltimore, Maryland.

James Conrad Spamer died 3 March 1884. A death notice in the Baltimore Sun reads:[564]

> SPAMER—Entered into rest, on March 3, JAMES C., in the 29th year of his age, beloved husband of Elizabeth Spamer.

Ida (Holden) Spamer (1856–1882)
Elizabeth Spamer
(wives of James Conrad Spamer)

and parentage of

Cecelia E. Spamer (1880–1927) and George Peabody Spamer (younger) (1881–1944)[566]

Prior to 2007, James Conrad Spamer was known only to have married a woman named Ida; their dates of deaths were unknown. In the "Spamer Families of Baltimore", as discussed more fully below, there was conjecture that James and Ida were the parents of orphaned Cecelia and George Peabody ("Little George"), who were in fact raised by their grandparents, Henry [No. 41] and Catherine Spamer. "Little George" was so called to distinguish him from his uncle, George Peabody Spamer [No. 108]. That all family record of the children's parents was missing by the middle of the 20th century is disconcerting.

I believe that I have resolved the problems met by the earlier family historians. In 2007, I found obituary notices for both James C. Spamer and Ida Spamer, which by their dates indicated that Ida could have been the mother only of Cecelia, having been deceased when "Little George" was born. The obituary notice for James C. Spamer indicated that he left a wife, Elizabeth; there is no mention of children. Elizabeth has not heretofore been mentioned in family records. There is no subsequent record found of her, and one might assume that she in turn remarried soon after James' death, which would account for the record (cited below) of a stepfather of a child who must be "Little George". Perhaps the rapidity of remarriages following the deaths of Ida and James, and the fact that the child presumed to have been "Little George" was given to a guardian, which precipitated court action filed by the child's grandfather, Henry Spamer, may have been events that surviving family members preferred not to relate. This is conjecture, to be sure, but with hindsight and the records available it seems a reasonable assumption. What follows here is a complete recounting of the facts now available.

Ida (Holden) Spamer died 16 March 1882. A death notice in the Baltimore Sun reads:[567]

> SPAMER—Fell asleep in Jesus, on March 16, at half-past eight o'clock, IDA JON, aged 26 years, wife of James C. Spamer, and third daughter of John W. and the late Margaret J. A. Holden.

[564] Obituary notice, The Sun (Baltimore), 4 Mar 1884; repeated on 5 Mar.

[565] The address of his father's residence is not one of the known addresses of Henry Spamer [No. 41], although he moved many times and this is likely to have been an address that has been overlooked.

[566] Also see separate entries for Cecelia E. Spamer [No. 189]; and for George Peabody Spamer [No. 190], shortly below in the present entry.

[567] Obituary notice, The Sun (Baltimore), 18 Mar 1882.

> Relatives and friends are respectfully invited to attend her funeral, Sunday afternoon, at two o'clock, from her late residence, No. 88 Payson street.

Ida's middle name, Jon, is taken on the authority of her published obituary. In the 1870 U.S. census, when she was still a young girl living with her parents, her name is written "Ida Jong", which could be a misunderstanding by the census-taker. Possibly this is an indication that the name was pronounced like "John" rather than "Joan".

Of the family of Ida (Holden) Spamer, only her parents and siblings are known at this time, as follows:

John W.[1] Holden was born about 1822 in Maryland. He married (1) Margaret. She was born about 1824 in Maryland. He married (2) Mollie K. She was born about 1851 in Virginia.

Children of John Holden and Margaret are:

i. Laura[2] Holden, born about 1842 in Maryland.
ii. Joseph Holden, born about 1844 in Maryland.
iii. Susan Holden, born about 1849 in Maryland.
iv. James B. Holden, born about 1852 in Maryland.
v. Ida Jon Holden, born about 1856 in Maryland; died 16 March 1882 in Baltimore, Maryland. She married James C. Spamer.
vi. Estella Holden, born about February 1860 in Maryland.
vii. Mary E. Holden, born about 1864 in Maryland.

Child of John Holden and Mollie is:

i. Mollie A.[2] Holden, born about 1868 in Maryland.

NOTES

Occupations of John W. Holden (from U.S. censuses):
1860: Merchant
1870: Wagon driver
1880: Tailor

Residences of John W. Holden (from U.S. censuses):
1860: 18th Ward, Baltimore, Maryland
1870: 19th Ward, Baltimore, Maryland
1880: 500 Franklin St., Baltimore, Maryland

At the time of the 1880 census, Mollie K. Holden was a dress maker.

At the time of the 1870 census, James B. Holden was a carpenter's apprentice.

In 1886, Henry Spamer [No. 41] petitioned the courts for custody of a two-year-old child, who surely was George Peabody Spamer (younger). As noticed in the Baltimore Sun:[568]

> Habeus Corpus.—Mr. Benjamin Kurtz, as counsel for Henry Spamer, obtained an order for the writ of habeas corpus for Franz Grill to bring before Judge Phelps today the two-year-old grandchild of petitioner. The parents are dead, and it is claimed the grandparents are the most suitable persons to have the child. It was put in charge of Grill by its stepfather.

The identity of the stepfather is not known, and the cursory report quoted here may indicate that Elizabeth Spamer had remarried shortly after the death of James Conrad Spamer. For whatever the reason, the two-year-old child (here presumed to be George Peabody Spamer, "Little George") was given over to Franz Grill by the unidentified stepfather, precipitating the petition by the child's grandfather, Henry Spamer. Nothing more is known of the legal circumstances, or the events which led to them.

The confusion over the parents of George and Cecelia is due to the lack of surviving family records as well as to varied family recollections after the passing of decades. Based on the greater accessibility to pubic records, thanks to electronic resources, a somewhat clearer picture is provided by a new look at the larger Spamer genealogy as it is presently understood. A. M. Spamer and his sister, Frances Spamer, made some credible postulations about these children's parents,[569] and they obviously did not know about James' marriage to Elisabeth shortly after the death of Ida.

The following are excerpts from A. M. Spamer's discussion on the subject in the "Spamer Families of Baltimore". He also reviewed the known "Georges" of the family because one older relation to the family, Marie Stein Strange, recalled that the father's name was George[570], but none of the known Georges of the family turn out to be viable candidates for the father of George and Cecelia; thus her recollection is probably confused with the proliferation of Georges in the family at this time.

A. M. Spamer began, [571]

> The grandmother of Marie Steen [Stein] Strange (widow of Harwood Strange) and Katharine S. Spamer's grandmother were sisters.[572] A letter from Katharine to Frances dated 24 June 1976 contained the following information supplied by Marie.
> > "Little George's father was named George but I do not remember his mother's name. When little George and his sister Cecelia were small children their parents both died. Henry [Spamer]'s second wife Katharine Elisabeth raised them with her own children. Little George had two wives Emma Eck and Lottie Bowen [sic]. Lottie's brother, a bachelor lived with them. She had never heard of a William J. Spamer."

Continuing, [573]

> Mr C. A. Weber's mother and the wife of Edw. O.H. Spamer, Amelia, were sisters. A letter from Mr. Weber to Frances dated March 10, 1975 supplied the following information. * * *
> > "After winding up the business they had in the city Uncle Ed.[574] and Aunt Amelia bought and operated the farm property on Liberty Road, less than ¼ mile down the hill

[569] "Spamer Families of Baltimore", pp. 19-20.

[570] It is possible that the stepfather aforementioned (that is, the putative new husband of Elisabeth Spamer after the death of James C. Spamer) was a man named George. However, this is nothing more than a postulation, and it is just as likely that Marie Stein Strange erred, or had originally been provided with an incorrect name. In any case, it is clear that none of the later informants knew of the two marriages of James C. Spamer.

[571] "Spamer Families of Baltimore", p. 19.

[572] "Spamer Families of Baltimore", p. 28. Katharine S. Spamer is No. 192 in this genealogy (under John Ward Spamer, No. 114). The relationship of Marie Stein Strange to the Spamers is established upon family tradition, but how she fits into the genealogy remains a perplexing problem. There is a one-generation gap in her maternal lineage, which remains unresolved. Indeed, even her maiden name is uncertain–it may or may not be Stein–and her marriage lineage through Harwood Stockett Strange is likewise ambiguous. See more in the Heinzerling collateral genealogy under Henry Spamer [No. 41].

[573] "Spamer Families of Baltimore", pp. 19-20.

[574] Edward O. H. Spamer [No. 113, see under No. 41].

> from Wards Chapel Methodist Church. It was on this farm, that my brother Henry, our two younger cousins and I, spent many happy moments during the summer vacations from school."

During the contact Frances had with Mrs. Dorothy Duvall [sic][575], Dorothy mentioned an Uncle George who had a farm where they lived so Cecelia could be in fresh air. Apparently Cecelia suffered from a respiratory ailment.

The George referred to by Marie Stein is quite a puzzel [sic]. I wonder if her recollection is correct. * * * The grandmother of Marie Steen [Stein] Strange (widow of Harwood Strange) and Katharine S. Spamer's grandmother were sisters. A letter from Katharine to Frances dated 24 June 1976 contained the following information supplied by Marie.

> "Little George's father was named George but I do not remember his mother's name. When little George and his sister Cecelia were small children their parents both died. Henry's second wife Katharine Elisabeth raised them with her own children. Little George had two wives Emma Eck and Lottie Bowen. Lottie's brother, a bachelor lived with them. She had never heard of a William J. Spamer."

Another possibility would be children of children of Charles Spamer, another son of Conrad and Johanetta born in Baltimore between 1832 and 1840. Again it is unlikely that Henry would raise the children as Charles was still living in 1897.

Around January 1976, Marie Stein Strange wrote to Katharine S. Spamer, regarding "Little George": [576]

> "Little George's" father was George, but he and his wife died. I didn't know her name, when "Little George" and his sister Cecilia [sic] were small children, and your grandmother raised them with her children, your father etc. He had two wives Emma Eck and Lottie Bowen and her brother, but no blood relation of the Spamer[s], he lived with George and Lottie, he was a bachelor.

Despite the recollections that Little George's father was George, and recollections both by Marie Stein Strange and Dorothy Duvall of "Uncle George's" farm, C. A. Weber may have beeen correct in recalling that it was "Uncle Ed"—Edward O. H. Spamer—who had the farm on Liberty Road. I have a photograph taken ca. 1915, which shows a family group at Edward O. H. Spamer's farm; the photo is annotated by Katharine S. Spamer, "At Uncle Ed's farm". [577] However, only Edward O. H. Spamer is identified in the group, who are lined up beside a farm building, and there is unfortunately no view of any part of the property.

Since there are no known "missing" Spamers of this family, the conclusion that James and Ida Spamer are the parents of Cecelia, and that James and Elizabeth are the parents of George Peabody (younger), is acceptable. Of course, without the corroboration of public records or newly found, reliable family records there may always be lingering doubt.

190. George Peabody Spamer (younger) (1883–1943)
"Little George"

George Peabody Spamer was named for his uncle, George Peabody Spamer (1857-1942) [No. 108]. The younger George was called "Little George". In public records especially, distinguishing between the two George Peabody Spamers of Baltimore has sometimes posed problems. Accordingly, some of the family information may likewise have confused the two Georges, which in turn may have created some ambiguity over the parentage of "Little George" and his half-sister, Cecelia. A. M. (Andy) Spamer concluded in 1983, "after considering all information available at this time, the most likely prospect for the parent of Cecelia and 'Little George', would be James Conrad [Spamer]."[578] As shown above, however, it is apparent that Cecelia and "Little George" had different mothers. Although the individuals have been satisfactorily resolved, some particular points in public records might be blurred. The data below, however, are correct for the individual.

At the time of the 1900 U.S. census, Edward Eck was occupied as a clerk. He was known as "Eddie".

At the time of the 1900 U.S. census, Charles Eck was occupied as a cigar maker; at the time of the 1910 census he was a bartender.

[579] In addition to this brief collateral genealogy, there also is an Eck Family collateral genealogy presented later herein; but the connection between these two Eck groups has thus far not been established. That other, larger collateral genealogy includes Elmer Thomas Eck, who married Edith Spamer [No. 155], and Hazel P. Eck, who married William Spamer [No. 215, under Jasper Noble Spamer, No. 154]. Elmer and Hazel Eck were uncle and niece; William and Edith Spamer were aunt and nephew.

Note on Burials of the James Conrad Spamer Family Group

Lot 55 in the Iris section of Loudon Park Cemetery, Baltimore, Maryland, holds the remains of George Peabody Spamer (younger), his two wives, Emma and Lottie, Lottie's brother, Harry B. Bowen, and their uncle and aunt, Edward O. H. Spamer and his wife Amelia Spamer.

Also included in the lot are two enigmatic Spamers, who have thus far not been traced: "father" William J. Spamer (1864-1924) and "mother" Frances Lee Spamer (1866-1948). They are not the father and mother of orphaned "Little George" or Cecelia (as discussed above).

C. A. Weber incorrectly surmised, "My guess is that William J. Spamer was an older brother of Edward O. H. Spamer and Lottie B. and George P. Spamer were his children and Emma C., his daughter-in-law."[580] E. O. H. Spamer had two siblings, Henry Spamer and Henry Christian Spamer, who were born 11 January 1864 and 5 April 1865, respectively; William's birth date of 1864 as given on his grave marker, if correct, negates Weber's supposition. In any case, all the children of Peter Heinrich Christian Spamer (Henry Spamer), including E.O.H. Spamer, Henry Spamer, and Christian Spamer, are accounted for.

Frances D. Spamer, in a 1976 letter to Katharine S. Spamer, posed a question regarding Charles Spamer and his children:

> In other cemeteries—Loudon Park—there is buried a William J. Spamer (1864-1924) wife Frances Lee (1866-1948)—Long Green Trinity P. E. Church cemetery there is buried a J. Jane Spamers [sic] (1866-1921). I have yet to find to whom they belonged. Could they have been Uncle Charles' children?[581]

William J. and Frances Lee Spamer, and J. Jane Spamer remain enigmas. Also see Additions & Corrections

NOTES

108. George Peabody Spamer (elder) (1857–1943)

George Peabody Spamer (elder) was christened on 30 June 1857 in the First German New-Jerusalem Church, Baltimore, Maryland.

George Peabody Spamer had a nephew named after him, George Peabody Spamer (1883–after April 1942) [No. 190; see under James Conrad Spamer, No. 107]. The elder and younger Georges were called "Big George" and "Little George", respectively.[582] In public records especially, distinguishing between the two George Peabody Spamers of Baltimore has sometimes posed problems. Accordingly, some of the family information may likewise have been confused. Although the individuals have been satisfactorily resolved, some particular points in public records might be blurred. The data below, however, are correct for the individual.

In the 1900 U.S. census, George Peabody Spamer's surname is indexed as "Spancer". In that census, an aunt, Elizabeth Demuth, and Charles Dunn, Lillie Spamer's brother, also resided in the household. Elizabeth Demuth is listed there as a widow; however, in actuality her husband, George O. Demuth, was at that time in prison for five years, convicted of the forgery of promisory notes. (This is explained in more detail in the genealogical sketch for Henry Spamer [No. 41].)

U.S. Patent no. 215,979, "Improvement in Crochet-needles", was invented by William Ross and filed 26 September 1878; patent awarded 27 May 1879. Indicated in its title is the following: "William Ross, of Baltimore, Maryland, Assignor of One-half His Right to George P. Spamer, of Same Place".[583] William Ross could be a relation to G. P. Spamer's mother, Susannah Ross, as noted under Peter Heinrich Christian (Henry) Spamer [No. 41].

A real estate transfer record was published in the Baltimore Sun in 1901, where one David Fisbach sold to "Andrew E. Holm and wife" and "George P. Spamer and wife" a property on the east side of Milton Ave. near Biddle St.[584]

The Maryland State Archives Death Record, 1943-1949, lists George Peabody Spamer's date of death as 26 June 1943. He was buried 29 June 1943 in Lot 55, Section Iris, Loudon Park Cemetery, Baltimore, Maryland.

Katie Spamer (ca. 1866–1888)
(wife of George Peabody Spamer (elder) [No. 108])

No family record was known of Katie Spamer until 2007, when an obituary notice for her was found in the Baltimore Sun; it reads:[585]

> SPAMER—On September 24, KATIE, in the 22d year of her age, beloved wife of George P. Spamer.
> The relatives and friends of the family are respectfully invited to attend the funeral, form the residence of her father, No. 801[?] Ensor street, on this (Thursday) afternoon, at two o'clock.

Clearly George and Katie Spamer were not married for very long, and no children are presumed to have come of this marriage.

191. Daniel Henry Spamer (1897–1984)

Daniel Henry Spamer was an adopted child.[586]

In the 1913 Baltimore city directory Daniel Spamer is listed with the occupation of electrician. During World War I, he served in the U.S. Navy as an Electrician 2nd Class, in Norfolk, Virginia, 4 October 1918–31 December 1918.

Residences of Daniel Henry Spamer (from U.S. census, Baltimore city directory and draft registrations):
1913 city directory: 1113 McCulloh St., Baltimore (his father's address)
1918 draft registration: 721 N. Fulton Ave., Baltimore, Maryland
1930 census: 721 N. Fulton Ave., Baltimore, Maryland (with his family as boarders in Henry H. Bye household)
1942 draft registration: 648 N. Fulton Ave., Baltimore, Maryland

Occupations of Daniel Henry Spamer (from U.S. census and other sources):
1913 city directory: Electrician
1918 (Oct 4–Dec 31): Electrician 2nd Class, U.S. Navy, Norfolk, Virginia
1930 census: Electrician ("bond"?)

He has not thus far been located in the 1920 U.S. census. On his World War II draft registration, 26 April 1942, he listed his date of birth as 26 November 1896, and on the line for "name and address of person who will always know your address" is "Mrs. Betz (friend) 726 N. Fulton Ave." He was at that time employed by Mr. W. D. Wilkerson, 1716 Baltimore Trust Bldg., Baltimore and Light Sts., Baltimore, Maryland, although the nature of the business has not been determined.

[586] Information about his status as an adopted child was from Katharine S. Spamer, verbal recollection to Earle Spamer; and correspondence, Katharine S. Spamer to A. M. Spamer, 27 Sep 1975 ("Spamer Families of Baltimore", p. 17).

The "Spamer Families of Baltimore" includes an 1890 Baltimore city directory listing for Daniel Spamer, an error.

At the time of his death, Daniel Henry Spamer resided in Westminster, Carroll Co., Maryland.

In 2006, the U.S. Public Records Index listed a Daniel H. Spamer (no age), residence "710 Uniontown Rd. 130", Westminster, Carroll Co., Maryland, residing with Doris N. Spamer, born 1924. This Daniel H. Spamer could be a son of the Daniel H. Spamer (1897-1984) whose last residence was in Westminster. An attempt to contact Daniel and Doris Spamer in December 2006 resulted in mail returned undeliverable as addressed.

114. John Ward[5] Spamer (Peter Heinrich Christian[4], Johann Conrad[3], Johann Conrad[2], Johannes[1]) was born 05 September 1869 in Baltimore, Maryland, and died 15 April 1960 in 65 Prospect St., Apt. 6K, Stamford, Fairfield Co., Connecticut. He married Lora Rebecca Smith 23 January 1901 in Church of the New Jerusalem, 22nd and Chestnut Sts., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, daughter of John Smith and Ella Seville. She was born 12 October 1874 in Lincoln, Sussex Co., Delaware, and died 02 June 1952 in Hahnemann Hospital, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

See Part II, Smith Family, for Smith lineages.

Children of John Spamer and Lora Smith are:

192 i. Katharine Seville[6] Spamer, born 01 November 1901 at 1919 N. Fulton Ave., Baltimore, Maryland; died 12 January 1985 at 65 Prospect St., Apt. 6K, Stamford, Fairfield Co., Connecticut.

193 ii. John Ward Spamer, Jr., born 26 November 1907 at 3930 Pine St., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; died 02 December 1907 at 3930 Pine St., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

\+ 194 iii. Edward Lawrence Spamer, born 25 December 1909 at 1234 N. 54th St., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; died 10 November 1955 at "Hospital of the University of Pennsylvania", Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

[587] Nothing more has thus far been determined regarding Rev. John Ward Hunt. He was presumably a minister of the Church of the New Jerusalem, although it is not clear when Henry Spamer accepted this faith.

[588] John Ward Spamer's brother, Edward O. H. Spamer, was a carrier for the newspaper company.

There are no family recollections at this time that provide information about John Ward Spamer's early adult life. An interesting record is noted here, where one "John W. Spamer" of Baltimore, Maryland, is a "junior" (i.e., freshman) student in the Law School of the University of Maryland during the year 1894-1895. [590] He does not appear in the list of students for the 1895-1896 school year. There is no surviving record or recollection at this time that indicates that John Ward Spamer had ever been a law student. However, given that his cousins, Christian Augustus Emanuel Spamer [No. 81] and Adolph Spamer [No. 99] were in the law profession in Baltimore, 25-year-old John may have been encouraged to enter law school; if so, he seems not to have completed the course of study. Shortly later, John's father, Henry Spamer [No. 41] passed into financial straits due to bad debts due him, which may also have influenced John's potential career. That John was for a short while a law student is conjecture, but of which notice is taken here of the coincidental name and family circumstances. Also see Additions & Corrections

John's daughter, Katharine, recalled her father bringing home ice cream that had been made by the Spamer business; that the ice cream was delicious. For her to recall this must indicate that Spamer Bros. remained in business at least long enough for young Katharine to have the memory. It is not clear exactly when Spamer Bros. ceased business, and when John Ward Spamer entered the real estate business. The 1905 city directory entry for him as "salesman" could apply to either business.

During at least part of the 1920s and during the Depression, J. W. Spamer was a traveling salesman, rarely at home—some cousins recall having seen him only at Christmas; one believed he was dead until one day she saw him riding the subway in Philadelphia[591]. At the time when his wife, Lora, died in 1952, he was a messenger in Philadelphia at age 83, riding public transportation to deliver his letters and packages; after this he retired.

At the time of the 1920 U.S. census, the John W. Spamer household also included two people whose identities have thus far not been certainly placed in the family:

May L. Spamer (sister-in-law), aged 48, single, born in Maryland, saleslady in retail dry goods

B. Parsell Spamer (brother-in-law), aged 48, single, born in Maryland, salesman in wholesale coffee

They are not known to be relations of any Spamer in this genealogy, nor are they miscited relations to Lora Smith Spamer's family. It is possible that these two individuals were somehow otherwise miscited by the census taker; their surname could be erroneously repeated from the head of household, J. W. Spamer. Further substantiating the possible error, neither individual has been identified in other public records of other years.

John Ward Spamer has not been found in the 1930 census. In this census his wife, Lora, resided with her father, Rev. John Edward Smith, at his home at 820 South St. Bernard Street, Philadelphia. In this census she is recorded as a "widow", but of course she was not. J. W. Spamer was a traveling salesman at the time. The discrepancy could be due to an error if the census taker was told ambiguous information about Lora's husband; for example, "he's not with us now".[593]

In the 1935/1936 Philadelphia directory, Lora Spamer is listed as a housekeeper at 820 South St. Bernard St., where also lived her son, Edward, and her sister-in-law, Mabel Smith; again, J. W. Spamer is absent from listings.

In Philadelphia, John Ward Spamer was a member of the Church of the New Jerusalem, 22nd and Chestnut Sts.[594] He is buried in lot 715, River Section, West Laurel Hill Cemetery, Bala Cynwyd, Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania.

[592] In January 1943, J. W. Spamer was the informant on the death certificate of his prematurely born grandson, John Edward Spamer. As informant he gave his address as in South Vineland, New Jersey, where lived his daughter-in-law (mother of the child), Jeannette Spamer, and her mother and step-father, Palmina and Leo Sylvester. J. W. Spamer and his wife, Lora, may have resided temporarily with their daughter-in-law while she was pregnant and the father, Edward Lawrence Spamer, was in the army overseas.

[593] Exhuastive attempts have been made to locate a record of J. W. Spamer in the 1930 census. Numerous purposeful misspellings, phonyms, and contractions have been used, to no avail. Presumably he was not present at any location where a census was conducted while he was travelling, as in a hotel; thus it seems that he would have been listed with his wife in Philadelphia, but the information was not properly recorded.

[594] For more about this church, see in Part II, Smith Family, under John Edward Smith [No. 92].

Lora (Smith) Spamer (1874–1952)
(wife of John Ward Spamer)

The birth date for Lora Smith is given in Nathan T. Sevil's Bible as 12 October 1873. She completed the course in Art at the Maryland Institute, Baltimore, Maryland.[595] She had a talent for painting in oils and drawing black-and-white works in crayon, but created other works in watercolors and charcoal. Many of her works are still in the hands of family members. She ceased her artwork after marriage.

Two watercolors that were in the possession of Lora's daughter, Katharine S. Spamer, were said by K.S.S. to have been "my mother's", which I inferred to mean that they had been painted by Lora. Perhaps Katharine had likewise inferred that they were made by her mother. It turns out that they are not works by Lora, but by a family friend. These are small works, simplistic but showing artistic promise; they are in black and grey with greenish or bluish tints, on good watercolor paper. One, untitled, shows a two-masted boat and a sailboat, dated "September 24th /85"; the other shows a heron-like bird standing at the edge of a wetland, titled, "Solitude" and dated "Sep 28th '85". The boat scene is signed "C. B. Cox" in small letters. Both paintings are signed on their reverse sides, lightly in pencil, "Clara Bell Cox". Lora apparently had kept these as momentos, as nothing else like them were kept by her or her descendants.

While attempting to identify a Clara Cox who would most likely have been a young acquaintance of Lora in 1885, when the paintings were made, the only reasonable match found was in the 1880 U.S. census for Easton, Maryland. There, a 12-year-old Clara Cox was found in the Mary H. P. Cox household; Clara had three sisters. By an astonishing coincidence, this turned out to be the four Cox girls with whom Lora's brother, Gilbert, as a young boy was so smitten by their beauty, interests, and intelligence. Gilbert was an accomplished painter throughout his life. Some 40 or more years after the fact, he wrote an incomplete autobiography wherein he noted the Cox girls as > . . . four remarkable girls whom I adored as most awfully perfect and beautiful. I cherished every little attention they gave me, though I scarcely dared to look at them with direct glance. It was only at a distance I adored them, especially the one that "drew" . . . .[596]

If Clara Cox of Easton is the Clara Bell Cox who painted the pictures in September 1885, it falls into place about perfectly with the time that the Smiths moved from Wilmington, Delaware, to Easton, Maryland, when Rev. John Edward Smith began his refreshed calling in the New Church. Clara would have been about 17 years of age. If this supposition is correct, to whom the paintings were given is not clear; whether a gift to Lora or to welcome all of the Smiths to Easton. (Gilbert was a boy not even three years of age when the paintings were done. His reminiscence seems to have been from when he was a few years older.)

In the 1930 U.S. census, she is listed, erroneously, as a widow, with her surname spelled "Sparmer"; John Ward Spamer was a traveling salesman. The discrepancy might be due to an error if the census taker was told ambiguous information, such as "he's not with us", or confusing the late Rev. Smith with Lora's husband. In the 1935/1936 Philadelphia directory, Lora Spamer, is listed as a housekeeper at 820 South St. Bernard St., where also lived her son, Edward, and her sister-in-law, Mabel Smith.

John Ward and Lora (Smith) Spamer

Records indicate that the marriage of John Ward Spamer and Lora Rebecca Smith was officiated by Rev. William Loring Worcester[597], pastor of the Church of the New Jerusalem at 22nd and Chestnut Sts., Philadelphia; but the original marriage certificate is signed only by Lora's father, Rev. John Edward Smith, which states the marriage was performed by him. Their wedding was also announced in the Denton Journal (Maryland), 26 January 1901.

192. Katharine Seville Spamer (1901–1985)
"Kay", "Mehit", "Finn"

Katharine S. Spamer was born at 8 a.m. in her parents' home; delivered by E. G. Shower, M.D. (of 1224 W. North Ave., Baltimore). She had several nicknames: "Kay", as she was known by friends and family; "Mehit", given by her brother, Edward, who was known as Archie (after fictional characters Archy and Mehitabel[598]); and "Finn", as she was known in my immediate family (the derivation is my mispronunciation of "Katharine" when I was very young).

She never married, although when she lived in Darien and Stamford, Connecticut, she was a close friend to Axel Petersen, a Swede. He appears in a number of family photographs taken in Connecticut and in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, but nothing more is now known about the man. In Stamford, Katharine Spamer and Axel Petersen both resided in apartments at the Park View Apartments, at 53 Prospect St. He [598] Katharine S. Spamer and her brother, Edward, called each other "Mehit" and "Archie", after the comical literary characters by Don Marquis (1878-1937), a cat (Mehitabel), and a cockroach (Archy). At night, Archy left messages on a typewriter, all in lower-case letters because he could not operate the shift key for capitals. The characters were created by Marquis in 1916, when they first appeared in "The Sun Dial" column in the New York Sun. In the first column, Archy typed that he had been a "vers libre bard", but his soul, now in a cockroach, gave him "a new outlook upon life". was known as "Pete" and "Pelle"; and he had brother, Torsten, who visited Pete at least once. Pete died suddenly.

Katharine Spamer was educated in the Baltimore County, Maryland, and Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, public schools, graduating in 1919 from Franklin High School,[599] Reisterstown, Maryland. She received a B.A. from Goucher College,[600] Baltimore, in 1923; there she majored in French and Spanish. In 1940, she earned her Master of Education degree in psychology from Temple University, Philadelphia. Her master's thesis was titled, "Emotional and Recreational Interests of High School Students"; the research for it was conducted in Darien, Connecticut, which resulted in several findings:

> 1. The interests of high school students are spread over a variety of activities, comprising both active and sedentary activities, and including both adult and children's interests.
> 2. Sports, study, radio, movies, reading, church and working at a home or at a job are the leading recreational and emotional interests of high school students.
> 3. The questionnaire data and the check data show the same findings i.e. that those interests having the highest frequency of mention also show the highest percentages in the attendance count.
> 4. Results in this study bear out the facts found in previous studies made in the fields of moving pictures, radio, reading and recreational interests, showing those interests to be true in other sections of the country as well as Connecticut.
> 5. Auto-riding and dancing are shown as the two discrepancies between this investigation and the earlier studies.
> 6. Working and "nothing in particular" seem to be the two topics worthy of further study.

Years later, she confessed that she wondered how she ever earned her degree with conclusions like those!

In her Goucher College yearbook, Donnybrook Fair, Katharine Spamer is listed as a Romance Languages major, with the biographical comment, "She is sensible, and a prized athlete; amiable and a modest winner; efficient, and a respected president of the City Girls."[601] Elsewhere in the yearbook, Katharine [599] Franklin High School originated as the Franklin Academy, a private school in Reisterstown. The high school is still in operation, with a 2005 enrollment of about 1,600 students in a residential community of about 35,000 people. [600] Goucher College [pronounced Gow-cher, rhyming with "cow"] was an all-female school when Katharine Spamer was a student there; it became co-educational in 1986. The school, today on a 287-acre wooded campus in Towson, Baltimore Co., Maryland, was until 1954 originally in downtown Baltimore. It was founded in 1885 as the Women's College of Baltimore by two Methodist Episcopal ministers, Rev. John F. Goucher and Rev. John B. Van Meter. Goucher was a graduate of Dickinson College, Carlisle, Pennsylvania, where he earned several degrees including his D.D. degree in 1885. The school was renamed for Goucher in 1910, after his death. The old Goucher Hall still survives at 2220 St. Paul Street, currently [2007] the Lab School of Baltimore. Long-standing participatory traditions met Katharine Spamer when she attended Goucher; for example, the daisy-chain sophomore tribute to the departing class, and the Step-Singing every two weeks on the steps of original Goucher Hall, and the Goucher Thanksgiving Dinner. Some traditions began when Spamer was a student, such as the May Day celebration. (>> Goucher College website, http://www.goucher.edu, accessed 5 Jan 2006; "Rev. John F. (Left) School was not all work at Darien High. Katharine Spamer wrote of herself on this photo, "Kay Spamer Cheerleader at D.H.S. faculty night (making a monkey of herself)".

(Below right) Katharine Spamer never married, but for a time in the 1940s–1950s she was close to Axel Petersen, a neighbor from Sweden, who was known to our family as "Pete". Here, he and Katharine are seen in either her apartment or his in Stamford, Connecticut, in 1945 when her brother, Edward, came to visit on his return from service in the U.S. Army during World War II. Tragically, Pete died suddenly during the 1950s and now little is known about him.

Spamer is listed as a member of the Council in the Goucher College Christian Association; in 1922 awarded a sweater letter "G", "the highest athletic honor"; played 2nd base on the baseball team; and a member of the field hockey team and the basketball team.

She attended her Goucher College 50th class reunion in June 1973. In a commemorative volume of biographical sketches she summarized her career and avocations (which may have been edited for brevity):

> The years 1923–1973 have flown so fast it is hard to put in a few words the many experiences which have composed more than half a lifetime.
> For some years I was a "rolling stone"—tried many different fields, from teaching to factory, regretting none of them. Finally went back to my first love—languages (college major), especially Spanish. For 28½ years I taught in Darien, Conn. High School, retiring in 1966.
> Since then busier than ever! I still have Spanish classes for adults—my own, Continuing Education in Stamford, Conn. and a class at one of the Senior Citizen Centers (my volunteer work). There is scarcely sufficient time for hobbies—oil painting, needlepoint, reading, traveling, even "Fun at the Races".
> Travel to me is the most rewarding—anywhere—whenever sufficient funds are available. In 1972, I made my fourth trip to Spain, visiting the north coast, thus completing visits to all sections of that country. Travel I recommend most highly![602]

As noted here and in other recollections, she was fond of the horse races. She made bets of just a couple of dollars, usually playing the Daily Double. She enjoyed going to the Preakness with her friends, the Marions.

[603] Darien High School, in Darien, Connecticut, is in an affluent area of Fairfield Co., Connecticut. The original school building was opened in 1927 at 1025 Post Road. In 1960, a new high school building was built; the original became the Mather Middle School for a while, and today it is the Darien Town Hall. The 1960 building was razed in 2005 when a newer, larger high school building was opened. (>> Wikipedia online encyclopedia, accessed 21 Aug 2006.)

ca. 1960–1986: Towne House Apartments, Apt. 6K, 65 Prospect St., Apt. 6K, Stamford, Fairfield Co., Connecticut

In the 1930 census, she is listed as "Kath*e*rine Spa*r*mer".

While at Goucher College, Katharine Spamer became a registered member of the Life Saving Corps of the American National Red Cross, 12 June 1923. This no doubt was used to advantage when she worked as a summer-camp counselor and her work at the Y.W.C.A.

Sometime after her graduation, Katharine Spamer taught for a while at the Woods School in Langhorne, Pennsylvania. This was the Woods School for Exceptional Children, which in the euphemistic terminology of the day meant children with learning and social disabilities.[604] Just when she taught there is no longer recalled in the family.

Katharine Spamer was appointed as a teacher by the Board of Education, Town of Darien, Connecticut, on 19 July 1938, with a salary of $1,500.00 for the 40-week school year.

Her avocation was travel, which she did widely in Europe particularly. Her favored country was Spain, and she made four trips there, visiting every section of the country. She also visited the Caribbean, Hawaii, and South America. Although she flew three or four times to Europe, Hawaii, and South America, she otherwise traveled almost exclusively by sea from the late 1920s through the early 1960s. Some of her trips are noted below. These are not all of the trips; recollections include others, but their timing and itineraries are no longer remembered.

In 1929, Katharine Spamer is listed in immigration records arriving in the port of New York on 7 September 1929 from Hamilton, Bermuda, aboard the S.S. Fort Victoria.[605] She was in the company of Miss Lois A. Roscoe, who was a long-time acquaintance.[606] Katharine Spamer had known Lois Roscoe [604] The school's mission continues today as Woods Services, still in Langhorne, Pennsylvania, serving people of all ages. It provides "Special programs of learning, working and leisure [to] allow each person to enjoy maximum achievement and independence" (>>Woods Services website, http://www.woods.org/php/about.us/index.php; accessed 21 Aug 2006). The original home of the school fell into disuse and suffered fire and rain damage. The mansion was restored between 2000 and 2005, and in 2006 was an upscale Italian restaurant, Bella Tori (Richard Burns, "Bella Tori at the Mansion", TimeOff Bucks County, 17 Feb 2006).

[605] Three months later the ship collided and sank while approaching New York harbor. The S.S. Fort Victoria was registered with the Furness-Bermuda Line, Bermuda. She was built in 1913 in Scotland as the S.S. Willochra; a 14,000-ton, oil-burning, twin-screw vessel accommodating about 400 passengers. She sank on 18 Dec 1929 after colliding in the fog with the S.S. Algonquin (no casualties). The hull was an obstacle in the shipping lane approaching New York harbor, off Sandy Hook, New Jersey, lying for a year on its side before being demolished with 25 tons of dynamite. The remains were wire-dragged to create a clearance depth of 42 ft in 50 ft of water. Nothing remains of the wreck except pieces nearly completely buried in the bottom. (>> New Jersey Scuba Diver website, http://www.njscuba.net/sites/site_fort_victoria.html, accessed 28 Nov 2006.)

[606] Lois Roscoe is listed in the ship's manifest as 32 years of age, born in 1897 in Freeland, Pennsylvania; her address was given as Olean General Hospital, Olean, New York. [By an amazing coincidence, Freeland, Pennsylvania, was an early home to the family of Earle Spamer's wife, Jane Anderson; the Continis, her mother's ancestry, some of whom were coal miners.] Lois Roscoe has been located in the 1900 U.S. census in Nesquhoning Village, Mauch Chunk Twp., Carbon Co., Pennsylvania; the third child of Joseph and Nastasia Roscoe; there she is listed as "Louisa" and her birthdate is given as April 1898. Her parents were immigrants from Austria; Joseph arrived in the U.S. in 1888, Nastasia in 1887. By 1900, Joseph was a naturalized U.S. citizen. He was a coal miner, a fact also noted in another biographical sketch of Lois Roscoe. Her siblings were (in 1900), elder Michael and John, and since at least 1925, when photographs of her appear in family photo albums. Later, when Roscoe was superintendent of the Fort Hamilton Hospital in Hamilton, Ohio, Katharine Spamer assembled a photo album about Lois Roscoe, which includes Miss Roscoe in her home in Hamilton as well as on trips.[607]

In the late 1940s, in the company of school-teacher friends Miss Marion Jenness and Miss Marion S. Kenyon, they drove to Mexico by way of Texas—notably, they often wore trousers on this trip. "The Marions", as they were always referred to, lived together in Mount Vernon, New York, and frequently traveled with Katharine Spamer. The Marions also owned a small summer cabin near Lake Peekskill, New York, which they shared with Katharine; they called it simply "The Cabin".[608]

In 1951, Katharine Spamer is listed in immigration records arriving in the port of New York on 16 July 1951, aboard the S.S. Talmanca.[609] She was in the company of Marion Kenyon; they traveled as First Class passengers. The immigration record indicates that the ship had departed from New York on 29 June, which indicates that it was a cruise.

younger Mary. Lois Roscoe has not been located in either the 1910 or 1920 censuses. In the 1930 census, she is the superintendent of the Olean General Hospital in Olean, Cattaraugus Co., New York. In May 1938, Miss Roscoe was hired as superintendent of Fort Hamilton Hospital, in Hamilton, Butler Co., Ohio. She was an adept administrator, "cutting costs, stretching resources, and repaying debt" at a time when an increase in the number of patients further relieved the financial burdens of the hospital that had been impacted by the Depression. Soon she reduced capital debt and assured the hospital operated in the black. After World War II, hospital space was becoming critical in Hamilton, and a waiting list for admissions was implemented. On 3 Mar 1957, not long before Lois Roscoe retired in 1958, groundbreaking took place for a new wing of the hospital, which opened in 1960. The "Lois A. Roscoe Wing", named "in honor of the hospital's long-tenured and thrifty superintendent", doubled the size of the building, increased bed capacity from 142 to 285, and added new services like physical therapy. The original hospital building was demolished in 1981 when the hospital's growth needs required larger and more modern facilities in the building complex. In 2006, the Fort Hamilton Hospital was a part of the Health Alliance health care system of greater Cincinnati. (>> Fort Hamilton Hospital website, http://www.forthamiltonhospital.com/anniversary. html, accessed 17 Mar 2006; and "2004 Historical Health Images Calendar" (Fort Hamilton Hospital), accessed on website.)

[607] This photo album is currently owned by Earle Spamer. I believe that it should be more properly kept by a local historical society in Hamilton or in the Cincinnati area.

[608] The Marions have not been located in the U.S. censuses, except for 19-year-old Marion Kenyon and her family in the 1920 census, when they lived in Pawtucket, Providence Co., Rhode Island (the family named is spelled "Kinyon" in that census). She was the daughter of William H. and Ella M. Kenyon; he owned a commercial school, teaching business courses. He was born in Kansas; his wife and their children, Alice, Marion, and Nettie, all were born in Rhode Island. Katharine Spamer visited the Kenyon family some time after the death of Mr. Kenyon; Katharine's family photo albums contained some pictures from that visit, which include photographs of Marion and her sister, Nettie, and "Mrs. Kenyon" who of course is Ella. Marion Jenness was born 20 Mar 1892 and died in Oct 1984. Marion Kenyon survived both Marion Jenness and Katharine Spamer and eventually moved back to Rhode Island, after which nothing more is known.

[609] The S.S. Talamanca was built in 1931 at Newport News Shipbuilding and Drydock Co., Newport News, Virginia, as a passenger/freighter combination line and fruit cargo carrier for the United Mail Steamship Co., New York. She was 447 ft 10 in long, beam 60 ft, draft 25 ft 2 in; twin turbo-electrically powered screws; displaced 6,963 long tons, with a cargo capacity of 2,615 DWT; speed 18 knots. She was requisitioned for war service by the U.S. Navy and renamed U.S.S. Talamanca (AF-15), a cargo vessel with a crew complement of 238. She was stricken from the Naval Register 19 Dec 1945, and in 1946 she was returned to the United Fruit Co., when she was luxurious flagship of the United Fruit Company of America, one of their so-called Great White Fleet. The Talamanca was sold to Elder & Fyffes in 1959 who renamed her S.S. Sulaco and reduced the number of passengers she carried. The Talamanca was sold for scrap and arrived in Brugges, Belgium, 28 Jul 1964; she was scrapped in 1965. In 1955, Katharine Spamer and Marion Kenyon flew to Europe on BOAC (British Overseas Airways Corporation), which was her first air flight; she returned to New York from London on 5 August 1955

In 1963, Katharine Spamer traveled to England, Scandinavia, France, and Spain. She traveled to Southampton, England, aboard R.M.S. Queen Elizabeth[610] and returned to the U.S. from Cherbourg, France, aboard R.M.S. Queen Mary[611], two legendary ships of the Cunard Line. Her accommodations aboard "The Queens" were in Cabin Class; that is, Second Class.[612] She retained the printed passenger lists from the voyages aboard the Queens.[613] She also left a brief typewritten account of the crossings, which seems to be a transcript of brief notes jotted down during her entire trip to Europe, 19 June–4 Aug, as follows: [614]

> Wednesday, June 19: Sailing! Taken to ship, Queen Elizabeth I, by the Marions. Nice day. Sailed at 4:30. Much standing in line for deck chairs, dining room seat, etc.
> Thursday, June 20: A lazy day—beautiful sunshine and air. On deck most of the day. Some reading and writing, Excellent meals. More forms to fill out. Evening: won twice at the horse races. Played bingo.
> Friday, June 21: Quite different—fog up to the deck—pea soup! Some writing and reading. Immigration check-out for landing. Toured ship with an acquaintance (sin permiso!)[615]. Not too much preferred to cabin class! Evening: bingo (no luck), followed by cabaret—quite good.
> Saturday, June 22: Clear and warm again—a beautiful day. Sunned on deck and, in evening, bingo and horse races. Won once at the races. Then watched fancy hat parade. To bed late.

[610] R.M.S. Queen Elizabeth was a two-funnel, quadruple screw liner of 83,673 gross tons built by John Brown and Co., Ltd., Glasgow, Scotland. She was launched 27 Sep 1938 and accommodated some 2,200 passengers. She was 987.4 ft long, 118.6 ft beam, and had a service speed of 29 knots. She made her final crossing of the Atlantic in Nov 1968 and was retired to Port Everglades, Florida, as a tourist attraction. But by late in 1970 she had been resold and taken to Hong Kong, where she was to be refitted as a floating university. Several arson were set on 9 Jan 1970 and soon the ship capsized. After plans were set to sell the hulk for scrap, on 5 Nov 1975 the ship rolled over again, spilling tons of oil into Hong Kong harbor. (>> Cunard Line archives website, http://www.liv.ac.uk/~archives/.cunard/ships/qeliz.htm.)

[611] R.M.S. Queen Mary was a three-funnel, quadruple screw liner of 80,774 gross tons built by John Brown and Co., Ltd., Glasgow, Scotland. She was launched 26 Sep 1934 and accommodated some 2,200 passengers. She was 975.2 ft long, 118.6 ft beam, and had a service speed of 29 knots. She made her final crossing of the Atlantic in Sep 1967 and was later taken to Long Beach, California, to be refitted as a museum, hotel, and conference center, where she remains today. (>> Cunard Line archives website, http://www.liv.ac.uk/~archives/.cunard/ships/qmary.htm.)

[612] When the Queens were built, "Cabin Class" was the First Class accommodation, "Tourist Class" was the second, and the lowermost class of accommodation, traditionally called Steerage, was "Third Class". Later, however, the Cunard Line restructured the categories; Cabin Class was renamed "First Class", Tourist Class was renamed "Cabin Class", and Third Class was renamed "Tourist Class". "Cabin Class" accommodations of the 1960s were small, comfortable cabins with single or bunk beds, a dresser, and small nightstands; each cabin had a private bathroom with tub and shower.

[613] The "List of Passengers" printed for both voyages misspell her names, as "Miss Katherine Spaner" (List of Passengers. R.M.S. Queen Elizabeth. Cabin. From New York to Cherbourg and Southampton, Wednesday, June 19, 1963) and as "Miss K. Spaner" (List of Passengers. R.M.S. "Queen Mary". August 2nd, 1963. Cabin. Southampton, Cherbourg, New York. Cunard Line).

> Sunday, June 23: Church of England services in the A.M. in lounge of 1st. class. Very nice. Followed by letter writing (have written some each day). Not good weatherwide [sic]—fog! And rain! Evening: bingo.
> Monday, June 24: A better day. Big even the arrival at Cherbourg. Cabin mates and I got passes and toured the town, stopping at a sidewalk café for some very delicious provençal wine. Packed, in order to get suitcases ready for A.M. landing. Sailed from Cherbourg about 7:00 P.M.

> Friday, August 2: Next morning up at 6:30 and started to check out at 8:00. Made it to St. Lazaire Station by 9:00—what a mob and nightmare getting bags from room and taxi!! More tipping did the trick. A wonderful compatible crowd in train compartment and, since there wasn't enough time to have lunch in the dining car, we all ordered beer and pooled our cookies and candies for lunch. Reached Cherbourg about 3:00 and on ship without difficulty. The usual settling. Cabin mates 3 people from hospital in Boston—found to be late sleepers—bad! Evening to horse races (no luck); talked to Mr. Joe Wiley (from train); had a drink and to bed, 11:45.

> Sunday, August 4: Fog up to the gunnels! Went to church on deck. Hair-do at 3:30. End of this trip!

Katharine Spamer also traveled aboard other ocean liners. One recollection is that she was aboard an Italian-flagged liner at which pasta was offered at every meal, including breakfast. I recall also that she may have mentioned that she sailed aboard the S.S. United States[616], but information about that is lost now.

Her last foreign trip was one to Peru in 1977, during which she visited the "lost city" of the Incas, Macchu Picchu.

Katharine Spamer had owned a used Ford Model T automobile when she worked as a camp counsellor in Rhode Island, after graduating from Goucher College. The end of that vehicle came when a driver to whom she had loaned it rolled it into a ditch. She did not own another car until her final years as a school teacher in Darien, Connecticut, having always taken the bus to work. She purchased a 1965 Dodge Dart, [616] The S.S. United States was built at Newport News Shipbuilding and Drydock Co., Newport News, Virginia, for the United States Lines; she was the largest ocean liner ever built in America. She has credit for being the fastest ocean liner, with a cruising speed of 31 knots and a top speed of 38 knots, powered by four steam turbines geared to quadruple screws. The United States is the last ocean liner to win the Blue Riband for both east- and westbound Atlantic crossings. On her maiden voyage in July 1952 she crossed from Ambrose Lightship to Bishop Rock in 3 days, 10 hours, 40 minutes, at an average speed of 35.59 knots, 5 knots and 10 hours faster than the previous record-holder, R.M.S. Queen Mary. On the westbound crossing she set a record of 3 days 12 hours and 12 minutes, averaging 34.51 knots. The eastbound record fell in 1990 to a 74-m ocean-going catamaran, Hoverspeed Great Britain (3 days, 7 hours, 54 minutes). The United States has a sailing range of nearly 11,000 miles; displaces 53,290 gross tons, 990 ft long, 101.5 ft beam, 31 ft draft. She carried up to 1,972 passengers and had a crew complement of 1,044. She was in service 1952-1969, traveling nearly three million miles on 400 voyages. Many attempts were made to refit the United States to a cruise ship, including two-coast cruises via the Panama Canal. Fittings and furniture were sold over a period of years. In the 1990s she was towed to eastern Europe for overhaul, but when plans fell through she was towed in 1996 to a pier in Philadelphia, where she remains [2007].

which she retained for nearly the rest of her life, giving up driving only when her vision deteriorated due to macular degeneration. In the early 1980s she sold the car to me for $1.00, when it had just 40,000 original miles on it; and when I registered it in New Jersey I had to pay six cents sales tax!

In retirement, Katharine Spamer taught Spanish to a small group of affluent women, who mostly were wives of successful businessmen. They gathered monthly at one of their homes in the Stamford–Darien area, Connecticut. She also taught classes pro bono at a local senior citizens' center in Stamford. She took up painting and produced a number of works, principally landscapes in oil, most of them based on her travels or on local scenes. Many of her pieces are still in the hands of family members. Of those works that she signed, it was in pen on the back of the frame, never as part of the painting.

Katharine Seville Spamer is buried in lot 715, River Section, West Laurel Hill Cemetery, Bala Cynwyd, Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania.

193. John Ward Spamer, Jr. (1907–1907)

The infant son of John and Lora Spamer was buried in the family lot at West Laurel Hill Cemetery, Bala Cynwyd, Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania. He was buried in a white casket with silk interior and an engraved silver nameplate, in a pine case. Arrangements were handled by Charles L. Shurtleff, Funeral Director, 3929 Market St., Philadelphia.

NOTES

116. Susan (Spamer) Karner (1875–1949)
"Susie", "Sue"

Her marriage license application, as publicized in the Baltimore Sun, gives her name as "Susie Mai Spamer".[617] In the 1900 U.S. census, she is misindexed as "Susie Mac Karnes"—the census sheet reads "Susie Mai" and her surname could be read either as "Karner" or "Karnes".

[617] "Marriage Licenses", The Sun (Baltimore), 15 May 1900.

Frederick Karner (1875–after 1930)
(husband of Susan Mae Spamer)
"Fred"

Frederick Karner immigrated to the U.S. from Austria in 1888. He became a naturalized citizen in 1898 in Baltimore, Maryland.

Occupations of Frederick Karner (from U.S. censuses and other sources):

1900 census: Bookkeeper [possibly for a furniture firm, but that section of the entry is illegible]
1910 census: Woodworker
1910 newspaper record: Local manager, furniture company
1918 draft registration: Traveling salesman for Reliable Furniture Co. (offices at 305 President St., Baltimore, Maryland)
1920 census: Traveling salesman of furniture
1930 census: "Commercial", "Furniture"

1900 census: 1744 E. Lanvale St., Baltimore, Maryland
1907, 1909 newspaper records: "Millsville" or "Mellsville" [Neillsville?], Wisconsin [618]
1910 census: 5th St., Neillsville, Clark Co., Wisconsin
1918 draft registration, 1919 immigration record, and 1920 census: 583 Breckenridge St., Buffalo, Erie Co., New York
1930 census: 160 Argonne Rd., Kenmore, Erie Co., New York

In the 1910 census, the household includes a nephew, Francis Wallenberger, aged 17. In the 1920 census, the household includes a widowed aunt, Thelka Tonz [spelling?], aged 66, of German descent.

A newspaper record of 27 June 1898 notes the arrival in New York of "Mr. Fred. Karner . . . of Baltimore" from Bremen, aboard the "North German Lloyd steamer Trave". [619] Immigration records indicate that Frederick Karner arrived in the port of New York 5 December 1919 aboard the S.S. La Lorraine[620], having departed from Le Havre, France, on 26 November 1919. He was travelling alone. The purposes of his trips overseas are not known.

Neither spelling of the town name has been located; both entries are likely to have been corruptions of "Neillsville", where in fact Frederick Karner is listed in the 1910 U.S. census.

[619] The Sun (Baltimore), 27 Jun 1898. The S.S. Trave was registered to Norddeutscher Lloyd. She was built by Fairfield Govan and launched 18 Feb 1886; single screw, steam propulsion, 4,969 gross tons, 438 ft long, breadth 48 ft. After two collisions at sea, in 1886 (on her maiden voyage) and 1889, she was reburbished by AG Vulcan in 1896. She was scrapped in 1909. (>>Shipping Times website, http://www.clydesite.co.uk/clydebuilt/viewship.asp?id=683, accessed 2 Dec 2007.)

[620] The S.S. La Lorraine was built in 1899 by Companie Générale Transatlantique, St. Nazaire, France. She weighed 11,146 gross tons, was 563.1 ft long, beam 60 ft. She was a twin-screw steamship on the La Havre-New York route, carrying more than 800 passengers; she could travel at 20 knots. After seeing service as an armed merchant cruiser during WWI (as S.S. Lorraine II), she was restored to civilian service in 1919 under her original name. She was scrapped in Dec 1922 at St. Nazaire. (>> The Ships List website, http://www.theshipslist.com/ships/descriptions/shipsL.html, accessed 5 Jun 2006.)

The 30 June 1910 Neillsville (Wisconsin) Republican and Press includes an article about a fire early in the morning of 28 June, destroying the Wisconsin Furniture Manufacturing Company, which was operated as a branch factory of the Reliable Furniture Company of Baltimore.[621] Frederick Karner was the local manager of the factory, under George G. Muhlhenrich, president (in Baltimore).

> Furniture Factory Destroyed
> About five minutes to four o'clock Wednesday morning, the night watchman at the furniture factory discovered the fire on the third floor. He immediately gave alarm and a quick response was made by the fire company ad citizens generally. The inflammable character of the building and its contents made the battle against the flames well nigh useless, and the factory with the greater part of its contents consisting of machinery and a large amount of stock in various stages of manufacture, were in a short time entirely consumed. Some of the lumber piles were saved and the boiler and engine may be of some value. Four cars of furniture ready for shipment on the track were saved by being pushed along the track.
> The origin of the fire can only be guessed at. It was probably spontaneous combustion; that is fire starting of itself in oily waste or rags. Great care had always been taken to prevent anything of that kind, but a small quantity dropped or overlooked at night might have caused the fire.
> The loss is hard to estimate, will be aggregate a large sum. So far as known it is covered by about $27,000 insurance. The factory was completed in 1891. After running a few years, it was closed down after the panic years, and remained idle for some time. After some hard work and sacrifice by local people, it was again got running about ten years ago and placed n the hands of a Baltimore firm, The Reliable Furniture Mfg. Co., which operated this as a branch factory. To them the fire will be a severe loss, and to Neillsville it is a hard blow. It can not now be stated whether it will be rebuilt or not, but it is hoped by everybody here that it will be.
> Between the company and the people here the most cordial friendly relations existed from the first. They have run the factory on fine business principles. Everyone connected with the concern from top to bottom have proven themselves to be helpful, high-class citizens. The people of Neillsville want them to stay here. If there is anything the citizens of this place can do to keep them here and help rebuild and continue the business, it will be done. The destruction of this plant is a momentary shock, but let us not sit idly down and repine. Here is a chance for the local patriotism to show itself, and we fully believe that it will.

A summary from the "Clark County Press Extract from Local History" added more information about the fire, located in a four-story frame building: [622]

> Con Gorman, the night watchman, made his rounds and found everything in ship-shape at 3:00 a.m. He went to the engine room, which stood apart from the main manufacturing building, to stoke up the fires for the day. That was 3:55. Through a window he saw flickeringly yellow lighting in the windows on the northwest corner of the third floor in a ghostly pallor.
> Gorman quickly gave the alarm, and the company's own fire-fighting apparatus was brought to bear. [The fire] quickly reached the varnish and finishing rooms on the third and fourth floors, > and not long afterward the entire structure was ablaze. Flames soared an estimated 00 feet and more into the sky.

(Below) The disastrous fire of 28 June 1910, from which the community never fully recovered. Frederick Karner eventually removed to Buffalo, New York, where he was a traveling salesman of furniture for a Baltimore firm.

> Within two hours the large, four-story building had been reduced to smoldering ashes and charred timber.
> Loss was substantial. Firemen and volunteers were able to pull four railroad freight cars loaded with finished furniture out of danger. They also saved an outside pile of lumber. But the whole second story of the building was jam-packed with finished furniture awaiting loading and shipment. That was gone.
> Loss of the factory posed a severe blow to the residents of Neillsville and the surrounding countryside, for the factory furnished the bulk of employment opportunity outside the lumber camps.

As the reporter for the Neillsville Times wrote:

> The burning of the furniture factory has cast a pall of gloom over the entire city, for it was the leading industry and one on which a good portion of the city population was dependent, either directly or indirectly. [623]

Shortly later, town citizens and employees of the factory pledged to rebuild the factory. However, the efforts were for naught, and the factory never was rebuilt. [624]

[625] As of 2007, the parents of Charles W. Spamer and the identity of the Dickinsons have not been determined. The Tribune Review in Washington Co., Pennsylvania, included the following obituary of a son of Charles W. Spamer, but in which there still is insufficient information to add these people to the present genealogy. Note that the obituary mentions that Charles W. Spamer had a brother, also named Charles W. Spamer, so the identity of the nephew noticed in the census is unclear. The 2001 obituary reads:

> "Jack Gilbert SPAMER, 72, of North Huntingdon, formerly of North Versailles, died Tuesday, April 3, 2001, in North Huntingdon. He was born Oct. 7, 1928, in Pittsburgh (North Side), a son of the late Charles W. I and Pearl Esther (RIGGS) Spamer. Prior to retirement, he had been employed as a recruiter by E.T.I. Technical Institute of Cleveland, Ohio. He was a member and former deacon of the Linway Presbyterian Church. He is survived by his wife, Aileen (STACHOWSKI) Spamer; two sons, Douglas Spamer and his wife, Christi, of McMurray and David Spamer and his wife, Deborah, of Philadelphia; a brother, Charles W. Spamer II, of Florida; five grandchildren, Bryan, Nicole, Courtney,

NOTES

In the 1909 Baltimore city directory, Morris Arthur Spamer (1891–1947) [No. 150] is listed as a student. Throughout the rest of his life, he listed his occupation as civil engineer. In August 1915 he was an assistant engineer for the city of Bradenton, Florida, and on 1 September 1915 he assumed the position of City Engineer upon the resignation of Phil Lacey.[626] A newspaper report of his wedding, in December 1915, indicated that he was then "on a contract with Bryan & Company of Jacksonville" but had for a year and a half been a Bradenton city engineer.[627] At the time of his 1917 draft registration he was occupied as a civil engineer for Bryan & Co., Jacksonville, Florida, although he indicated on the form that his residence was in Baltimore, Maryland, at which address he also indicated his wife resided. At the time of his 1942 draft registration he was employed by the U.S. Navy Department, Bureau of Yards and Docks, Washington, D.C.

Morris A. Both the Spamer–Stanton engagement and wedding in 1915 were the subjects of courteous reports on the social page of the Bradenton newspaper, The Manatee River Journal, which are transcribed as follows:

WEDDING ANNOUNCED.[633]

The very prettiest party of the early autumn was the one of yesterday afternoon, given by Mrs. Paul Duckwall, at her home on Turner street, announcing the engagement of her charming niece and guest, Miss Margaret D. Stanton of Tampa, and Maurice [sic] A. Spamer of this city, formerly of Baltimore.

Invitations had been given to a dozen intimate friends to a "birthday card party," but when the place cards for the table were passed, the guests began to suspect something more interesting than the usual game of 500 was in store for them. The place cards were in the form of a bell, decorated with tell-tale sprays of orange blossoms, and when seated at the tables each one found as a favor a dear little imported China Cupid bearing in his arms a tiny pink box tied with white baby ribbon, inside the box was a card proclaiming the happy secret. So carefully had the young people guarded their secret that this announcement will come as a great surprise to many of their friends.

The date of the wedding was not given, but it will take place near the mid-winter holidays.

A merry game of cards was injoyed [sic], Mrs. George Brown making top score received a handsome cut glass single rose vase; Miss Wallace was given the consolation prize, a pair of brass candle sticks. The gift of the hostess to the bride elect was a beautiful cut glass comport.

The color scheme in floral decorations of green and white was carried out in Miss Stanton's costume, she wearing a dainty net frock with green satin girdle.

Delicious refreshments were served of white grape and nut salad, heart shaped white lettuce sandwiches, olives stuffed with almonds, iced lemon punch with brandied green cherries, green and white home made after dinner mints in dainty white crepe paper baskets tied with green ribbons.

The announcement cards were very original and unique, being from a design drawn by Mr. Spamer and photographed, the names being in the Old English letters, and the card daintily outlined.

The guests present, beside Miss Stanton, were her mother, Mrs. W. H. Stanton of Tampa, Mesdames Henry Curry, George W. Brown, J. A. Graham, E. E. Coulson, J. B. Leffingwell, J. F. Doyle, Misses Elizabeth Johnstone, Annie Gilbert, Carrie Phillips, Susie Curry and Leland Wallace. Miss Stanton received a number of beautiful presents, among them being an exquisite broach set with her birthstones—sapphires—a present from M. A. [sic] Spamer, the father of the prospective groom.

SPAMER-STANTON.[634]

A pretty and exceedingly simple wedding was that of Miss Margaret Stanton and Mr. Morris A. Spamar [sic], which was solemnized at the home of the bride's parents, Captain and Mrs. W. H. Stanton yesterday at 11 o'clock, at their home on the Boulevard in Tampa.

> Aside from Messrs. D. B. Sutton and H. B. Hallen, warm friends of the groom, only the immediate relatives were present, and the ceremony was performed by Rev. C. H. Nash, an old friend of the family. Mrs. Redin Bryan of Savannah was the matron of honor, and the bride's brother, Mr. William B. Stanton, acted as best man.
> The bride was married in a stunning travelling suit of navy blue, trimmed in silk braid and buttons, and worn with harmonizing hat, gloves and shoes. She wore a corsage bouquet of white carnations and violets. The groom's gift was a handsome ring set with the bride's birthstone, a sapphire, surrounded by diamonds.
> After the ceremony a beautifully appointed wedding breakfast was given Mr. and Mrs. Spamer at the Tampa Bay Hotel. Later amid many congratulations and a shower of rice they left for Baltimore, the former home of the groom, for a visit with his relatives. On their return from their wedding trip they will make their home in Ocala where Mr. Spamer is on a contract with Bryan & Company of Jacksonville.
> Miss Stanton is a Bradentown [sic] girl by birth and has spent much time here where she has many warm friends who wish her all joy in the years to come. Mr. Spamer is well and favorably known having spent a year and a half here being n the employ of the city as civil engineer.

Morris and Margaret Stanton Spamer must have divorced, inasmuch as it is known that he married again and she survived until 1975. In fact, the family historical information compiled by Frances and A. M. Spamer never mentioned Morris's first wife. Also see Additions & Corrections

We may assume that the marriage of Morris and Louise took place in the Baltimore area, although at this time we do not know precisely the whereabouts of Morris Spamer for the two decades preceding World War II. His 1942 draft registration card lists his wife's name as Louise H. Barber, with the surname crossed out and Spamer written in its place. A. M. Spamer, in his genealogy of the Spamers, indicated that her name was Louise Preston Hawley.[635] It is possible that "Barber" was a phonetic mistake by the registrar, if the "Spa*r*mer"-like pronunciation was used for Spamer (as is discussed more in the introduction to this part of the genealogy). It is also possible that her name as cited by A. M. Spamer may refer to an earlier marriage for her, but this matter is not resolved. At this time, nothing is known about Louise other than she survived him.

Apparently, Morris Spamer was in some measure a ventures investor. In 1922, The Miami Herald took notice of Spamer's playing up oil exploration in the Everglades, but without specific facts:[636]

> Looks for Oil in the 'Glades
> "I believe that some day someone will get oil in the Everglades," said Morris H. [sic] Spamer, of Hagerstown, Md., who, with his father, Arthur L. Spamer, of Baltimore, is spending a few days at the Central hotel. "There have been many attempts to utilize the resources of the Everglades, including the inventor who devised a process of manufacturing brushes from palmetto leaves, the inventors who have utilized the palmetto in making substances used in canning, and the man who has invented a way of making paper from sawgrass.
> "There are a number of places in Florida where small quantities of oil have been discovered and there is a place in the Gulf of Mexico, about 50 miles from shore, where oil flows from the bottom of the gulf an shows itself on the surface. Just who will discover oil and when it will be done is something for the future to decide."

Collateral Genealogy
(10 descendants)

The genealogy of the Stanton family, as it relates to our Spamer lineage and as currently understood, is as follows:

Descendants of David Duckwall

Generation No. 1

1. David[1] Duckwall was born about 1836 in Ohio. He married Sarah. She was born about 1839 in Indiana.

Children of David Duckwall and Sarah are:

+	2	i.	Mattie[2] Duckwall, born December 1860 in Indiana.
	3	ii.	Louis R. Duckwall, born about 1863 in Indiana.
	4	iii.	Joseph Duckwall, born about 1867 in Indiana.
	5	iv.	Mary Duckwall, born about 1869 in Indiana.
	6	v.	Paul Duckwall, born about 1871 in Indiana.
	7	vi.	Jessie Duckwall, born about 1873 in Indiana.
	8	vii.	Charles Duckwall, born about 1876 in Indiana.

NOTES

At the time of the 1880 U.S. census, David Duckwall (ca. 1836–) [No. 1] was a merchant, residing in Salem, Washington Co., Indiana.

At the time of the 1910 census, Sarah Duckwall (ca. 1839–), wife of David Duckwall, resided on her own income as head of household with her son-in-law's family, in Election Precinct 38, Hillsborough Co., Florida. Although she is indicated there as being married, David Duckwall has not been located in that census (nor in the 1900 census).

At the time of the 1880 census, Louis R. Duckwall (ca. 1863–) [No. 3] was a dry goods clerk, residing in his parent's home.

The Duckwall family was a focus of social activities and commerce in some Florida communities, particularly during the second and third decades of the 1900s as testified by dozens of articles in newspapers particularly in Miami and Bradenton. Herbert R. Duckwall was President and General Manager of the Zenite Metal Company, an Indianapolis-based manufacturer of metal castings, used especially for the manufacture of automobiles. He maintained a winter home in Miami Beach, and it is clear that other members of the Duckwall family also had homes throughout Florida H. R. Duckwall also raced yachts and held at least one world record (but what that record was has not been determined for this genealogy). Thus far it has not been determined how David Duckwall relates to H. R. Duckwall and others cited in the newspaper accounts.

Generation No. 2

2. Mattie[2] Duckwall (David[1]) was born December 1860 in Indiana; died 1947 in Hillsborough Co., Florida. She married William H. Stanton about 1889. He was born April 1860 in New York; died 31 October 1918 in City Hospital, Miami, Florida.

Children of Mattie Duckwall and William Stanton are:

\+ 9 i. Margaret D.[3] Stanton, born September 1890 in Florida.

10 ii. William B. Stanton, born August 1892 in Florida.

NOTES

At the time of the 1900 and 1910 censuses, William H. Stanton (1860–1918), husband of Mattie Duckwall [No. 2], was a steamboat captain.

Residences of William H. Stanton (from U.S. censuses and other sources):

1900: Braidentown [Bradenton], Manatee Co., Florida
1910: Election Precinct 38, Hillsboro Co., Florida
1916 newspaper account: Tampa, Florida

His death notice appeared in The Miami Herald:[638]

> "William Stanton, aged 57, captain of a yacht owned by Mrs. Julia A. Ferguson, died at the city hospital yesterday morning of a hemorrhage of the brain. He has been a frequent visitor to Miami, and only arrived a short time ago. The remains will be forwarded this morning by J. J. Skillman to Tampa, his former home, for interment. They will be accompanied by his wife and sister-in-law, who have been stopping at the United States hotel."

We may assume from this notice that William H. Stanton had retired or left the business of steamboats and was a hired captain.

Generation No. 3

9. Margaret D.[3] Stanton (Mattie[2] Duckwall, David[1]) was born 02 September 1890 in Florida; died 21 January 1975 in Hillsborough Co., Florida. She married Morris Arthur Spamer 08 December 1915 in Tampa, Florida, son of Arthur Spamer and Ella Robinson. He was born 30 March 1891 in Maryland, and died 05 February 1947.

See the main Spamer genealogy for information about Margaret (Stanton) and Morris Arthur Spamer and descendants.

1930 census: North Main St., Stratford, Fairfield Co., Connecticut
1942 draft registration: 6905 Main St., Stratford, Fairfield Co., Connecticut

The "Spamer Families of Baltimore" includes a note about Lawrence: [639]

> After Mattie and Reuben [Spamer] were married, they lived on the large family farm owned by her father James Henry Blakeman. Reuben settled into taking care of the farm and producing milk. Reuben's son Laurence [sic], after attending Storrs Agricultural College[640], settled in the milk business and spent his whole life at it. Laurence was a political leader and a member of the local council.

Also see Additions & Corrections

Lawrence Spamer was in fact self-employed in the milk business, but later he sold his father's business to the Farmer's Dairy Co. On 1 March 1918 he went to work for that company on salary, a fact derived from a letter written by his wife, Virginia, to cousin Fannie Burr (spelling and punctuation thus): [641]

> Lawrence goes back to peddling milk tomorrow, March first has sold out too the Farmer's Dairy Co. and goes to work for them on a salary—with no responsibility which means less worry and these days, there is plenty of that for us all to do.

Lawrence Blakeman Spamer was a Councilman in the Stratford, Connecticut, city government.[642]

NOTES

153. Marion (Spamer) Eddy (1896–after 1941) Also see Additions & Corrections

At the time of the 1920 census, Marion Pearl Spamer resided in the Sherman Eddy household, listed there as "niece" and occupation as "housekeeper, private family".

She was a graduate of Simmons College, Boston, Massachusetts. Also see Additions & Corrections

Marion Spamer and Sherman Willard Eddy were married at Eddy's home, Towpath, in Avon, Connecticut.[644] Kathleen Sheldon, a distant relation, reported in 2008 the following anecdote from her "Aunt Betty", Elizabeth Keil, at 90 the last surviving child of eight children of Thomas Desmond and Olive Eddy (see the Eddy Family collateral genealogy herein). Elizabeth Keil recalled:[645]

> Incidentally, I was flower girl [at the age of 5] in Uncle Sherman's wedding to Marion. I carried a small basket of rose petals, and was supposed to scatter them along the terrace at Towpath where

With the marriage of Marion Spamer to Sherman Willard Eddy, the family enjoys a linear ancestry to two American immigrants of the Mayflower, in 1620. See the separate section, "Eddy Family—Mayflower Descendants", which follows the Eddy Family collateral genealogy, below.

Sherman Willard Eddy (1877–1952)
(husband of Marion Spamer)

The U.S. passport application for Sherman Eddy's son, Julian Burr Eddy, 11 September 1924, indicates that Sherman Eddy was born in Brunswick, New York. A U.S. immigration record on 12 March 1930 in Hoboken, New Jersey, lists Sherman Eddy's birth place and birth date as Troy, New York, 3 September 1879.

Sherman Willard Eddy had previously been married to Marion Spamer's aunt, Grace Emily Blakeman (see in the Blakeman Family collateral genealogy, which follows the entry for Reuben Olive Spamer [No. 88]). Also see the Eddy Family collateral genealogy (below).

Occupations of Sherman Willard Eddy (from U.S. censuses and other sources):
- 1900 census: Market gardener
- 1910-1930 censuses, and 1924 U.S. passport application for son, Julian: Superintendent of fuse factory, Avon, Connecticut
- 1918 draft registration: employed by Ensign Bickford Co.
- 1942 draft registration: Self-employed

Residences of Sherman Willard Eddy (from U.S. censuses and other sources):
- 1900 census: in his parents' household with his first wife of one year, Grace
- 1910-1930 censuses: Avon, Hartford Co., Connecticut

- 1942 draft registration: Main St., Avon, Hartford Co., Connecticut

The Eddy Family in America genealogy notes about Sherman Willard Eddy:[646]

> He attended the McLean Seminary at Simsbury[647] and the Conn. Agricultural College. He then entered into partnership with his father on a large fruit farm. Later he purchased the whole of it and enlarged it, adding to his interests that of landscape gardening. In 1907 he went to Avon, where he is superintendent of the Avon plant of Ensign Dickford Co. He was, in 1924 at least, a school commissioner in Avon, Connecticut.[649]

Sherman and Marion Spamer are listed in U.S. immigration records arriving in Hoboken, New Jersey, from Bermuda aboard the S.S. American Legion[650] on 12 March 1930, having sailed from Bermuda on 10 March.

During the 1930s, three records of U.S. immigration for Sherman Eddy and family members are noted in Boston, Massachusetts, for ferry trips returning from Yarmouth, Nova Scotia:

Aboard S.S. Evangeline[651], arriving in Boston 2 September 1933: Sherman and Marion Eddy traveling with children Bernard, Barbara and James, and Marion's niece, Florence Spamer [No. 211]. Also traveling with them were Sherman's son, Julian, with his wife, Edith, and son, Julian, Jr.

Aboard S.S. Evangeline, arriving in Boston 12 July 1937: Sherman Eddy traveling with children Bernard and James.

Aboard S.S. St. John[652], arriving in Boston 26 August 1938: Sherman Eddy traveling with children Bernard and James.

[650] The S.S. American Legion was originally built at Camden, New Jersey, completed in July 1921 but not placed into active service until 1926 when she began commercial service between New York and ports in South America. Financial difficulties later laid her up, and in 1939 she was acquired by the U.S. War Department as the U.S. Army Transport American Legion. With the military buildup prior to to World War II, she was transferred to the U.S. Navy and commissioned as U.S.S. American Legion (AP-35, later APA-17), which served mostly in the South Pacific until 1943. She was overhauled between December 1943-April 1944 and thereafter used as an Amphibious Force training ship in southern California until the end of the war. After two trips across the Pacific before the end of 1945, she was decommissioned in March 1946 and transferred to the War Shipping Administration. In February 1948 she was sold for scrap. [652] The S.S. St. John was built in Newport News, Virginia, by the Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Co. for the Eastern Steam Ship Company, 1932; 8,350 tons, 403 ft long, 21-ft beam. In 1941 she was requisitioned by the U.S. Navy and renamed U.S.S. Antares (AS-21), serving as a submarine tender. In 1942 she was reassigned to transport duties (redesignated AG-67), serving as a troop transport in the western Atlantic. At the close of 1944 she was converted to a hospital ship in the New York Navy Yard, Brooklyn, and renamed and redesignated U.S.S. Rescue (AH-18), after which she saw service in the Pacific, including the Allied invasion of Okinawa. She served with the 3rd Fleet for the duration of the war and sailed with the fleet into Tokyo Bay at the conclusion of the war, serving as a post for medical screening of Allied prisoners of war. She was decommissioned 29 Jun 1946 and transferrd to the Maritime Administration. Subsequently refitted as a merchant ship, she served 1946-1959, when she was scrapped. At the time of the 1900 U.S. census Edward M. C. Eddy is listed as a clerk.

9. Sylvia Thankful Eddy (1893–1954)

Sylvia T. Eddy never married.

Public records information

She is listed in U.S. immigration records returning to New York from Cristobal, Panama, aboard the S.S. Advance[655] on 1 February 1918, having sailed from Cristobal 23 January.

Sylvia Eddy applied for a U.S. passport in Hartford, Connecticut, 22 January 1919, relating to her intention to participate in "Relief work among war sufferers" in Turkey on behalf of the American Committee for Relief in the Near East, headquartered at 1 Madison Ave., New York, New York, and that she would travel aboard a U.S. Government transport. Affixed to the application was also a U.S. Department of State memorandum [655] No specific information has been found for this vessel named S.S. Advance, although a photograph of her in the Pedro Miguel Locks of the Panama Canal in 1914 was located on the Panama Canal History Museum website, http://www.canalmuseum.com/photos/panamacanalphoto044.htm (accessed 10 Feb 2008).

requesting a letter from the "[American] Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief concerning the necessity of your return trip to Turkey". (There is no other indication that she had previously been abroad.) A letter on her behalf was filed by the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief (1 Madison Ave., New York), which specified that they were "sending a Relief Commission to Turkey to assist in carrying on relief work among the war sufferers in that country" and that Sylvia Eddy "is one of this group and in view of the work in which she is to be engaged, the Committee earnestly requests that every possible facility be afforded her in securing the necessary passport for her journey." [656]

On 20 October 1920, Sylvia Eddy applied to the U.S. Consulate General in Beirut, Syria, for a passport to travel to the United States, listing also the countries and states of Egypt, Italy, France, England, and Palestine.[657] There she had indicated that she had arrived in Beirut on 8 July 1920 for the purpose of "Relief work on behalf of N.E.R." [Near East Relief, more fully known as the American Committee for Relief in the Near East]. She specified that she had resided outside the U.S. as follows:

Constantinople	July 1919–October 1919
Aintab	November 1919–June 1920
Beirut, Syria	July 1920–October 1920

She is listed in U.S. immigration records returning to New York from Le Havre, France, aboard the S. S. La Savoie[658] on 14 November 1921, having sailed from Le Havre 5 November.

On 11 September 1924, Sylvia Eddy's nephew, Julian Burr Eddy [No. 10 in the Blakeman Family collateral genealogy herein], applied for a U.S. passport in Hartford, Connecticut, on 11 September 1924; his father witnessed the document. [659] Julian Eddy was then 16 years of age and had indicated that he intended to travel for pleasure to Algiers, Tunis, France, Itlay, Greece, and Turkey, departing New York aboard the R.M.S. Homeric[660] 20 September 1924. The application was accompanied by a typewritten note: "I hereby give my consent to my son's trip abroad, sailing on the steamer 'HOMERIC' on 20 Sept. 1924 He is accompanied by my sister, Sylvia T. Eddy, sailing on the same date and same steamer. [signed] Sherman W Eddy Father of Julian B. Eddy".

She is listed in U.S. immigration records returning to Philadelphia, Pennsylvnia, from Constantinople, aboard the S.S. Exanthia[661] on 3 August 1929, having sailed from Constantinople on 24 June.

At the time of the 1930 U.S. census, Sylvia Eddy resided in the household of her sister and brother-in-law, Thomas and Olive Desmond, east side of Farmington River, Simsbury, Hartford Co., Connecticut.

She is listed in U.S. immigration records returning to New York from Cherbourg, France, aboard the S.S. Aquitania[662] on 23 December 1936, having sailed from Cherbourg on 16 December.

She remained in service until 1914 when she was fitted out for war service as an Armed Merchant Cruiser and troop transport. In 1919 she was returned to her owners and resumed passenger service. Her final voyage was on 24 Sep 1927, and she was sold and scrapped at Dunkirk in 1928. (>>J. H. Isherwood, "La Savoie of 1901", Sea Breezes Magazine, April 1965.)

[660] The R.M.S. Homeric was built as the S.S. Columbus by Schicau Shipyards in Danzig, Germany; 35,000 tons, 774 ft long, 82-ft beam, twin screw,18 kts. Following World War I, in 1919, as part of German war reparations she was ceded to Great Britain. Sold to the White Star Line in 1920, she was renamed Homeric. She served in passenger service between 1922 and 1935 but by the late 1920s was already in physical decline and poorly suited for the higher-class traffic she served. After the merger of the White Star Line with Cunard, she was laid up in 1935 and in late 1936 was sold for scrap to Thomas Ward & Sons. Additional biographical information

In addition to these public records, Sylvia Thankful Eddy has been the subject of biographical research by her grand-niece, Dr. Kathleen Sheldon, a scholar affiliated with the Center for the Study of Women at the University of California at Los Angeles. She has made presentations to historical meetings regarding Sylvia T. Eddy, and Sheldon is in the process of writing a book-length biography of the woman. She is in possession of Sylvia T. Eddy's diary for 1919-1920, when Sylvia was beginning a career of nursing work in eastern Turkey. Sheldon also has researched Sylvia Eddy papers in various archives. The following synoptic information is distilled from correspondence with Sheldon, and particularly from a draft paper that Sheldon has written based on Sylvia Eddy's first two years in Turkey. [663]

Sylvia T. Eddy was a professionally trained missionary nurse, having received her training at the Children's Hospital of Philadelphia (Diploma, 1914) and, in 1929-1930, obstetrics and midwifery at the Manhattan Maternity and Dispensary, New York.

She was likely inspired to missionary work by distant cousins David Brewer Eddy (1877-1946), who was for 25 years secretary of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions (author of What Next in Turikey: Glimpses of the American Board's work in the Near East, The American Board, Boston, 1913) and David's borther, George Sherwood Eddy (1871-1963), "a renowned missionary in India and elsewhere." Mary Pierson Eddy (1864-1923) was a physician working in Syria, following in the work of her missionary father, Rev. William Woodbridge Eddy (1825-1900). [664]

With periodic interruptions by trips home to America, Sylvia T. Eddy remained at work in Turkey from 1919 to 1946. She was 26 years of age when she first embarked on her misssionary work, which placed her in the midst of the Turkish and Armenian war and the French troops that supported the Armenian effort during a decidedly tumultuous time at the end of the Ottoman Empire and the beginnings of British control of parts of the Near East, particularly Palestine and Iraq. The conflict, as Sheldon has pointed out, has been "almost ignored n the wider context of regional upheaval, and is rarely discussedin any depth in histories of the post-World War I Middle East."

During the early wartime years when Sylvia Eddy first worked in Turkey, she was stationed in Aintab, at the Azariah Smith Memorial Hospital, commonly referred to as the American Hospital. The site was also in the midst of battle, when she worked with others under fire to safely relocate the patients and operating room, which seems to have been the event for which she was awarded the Croix de Guerre by the French government.

Eddy's first voyage overseas was duplicated when she fell ill. She sailed aboard the U.S.S. Leviathan[665] from Hoboken, New Jersey, 16 February 1919, traveling in the company of 250 Near East Relief workers.

[662] The S.S. Aquitania was built by John Brown, Clydebank, launched in 1913 and completed in 1914; 45,647 gross tons, 901 ft long, 97 ft beam. She was in service in the Cunard Line until 1950 when she was scrapped at Faslane. (>>Shipping Times website, http://www.clydesite.co.uk/.clydebuilt; accessed 10 Feb 2008.)

Sylvia T. Eddy was the sister of Kathleen Sheldon's maternal grandmother. Archives that thus far have been used by Sheldon in her research on Eddy are the records of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, Harvard University, Houghton Library, ABC, Ind.Bio., Box 19, Folder 26) and Nilson-Fyfe Papers,Grinnell College Archives, Grinnell, Iowa, MS 01.105). An earlier presentation by Sheldon was made to the Western Association of Women Historians meeting, San Diego, May 2007, "on a panel about American women's travel diaries".

[664] Kathleen Sheldon cites Frank G. Carpenter, The Holy Land and Syria (Doubleday and Co., Garden City, 1922), pp. 260-262; and Ruth Story Devereux Eddy (compiler), The Eddy Family in America, a Genealogy (The Association [Eddy Family Association], Boston, 1930),

[665] The U.S.S. Leviathan was built for the German HAPAG Line, launched 13 April 1913 as the S.S. Vaterland. With the outbreak of war, she was seized by the U.S. Government, serving in naval service as a troop transport, briefly as the U.S.S. Vaterland in 1917 then renamed U.S.S. Leviathan (ID no. 1326). At the time, she was the largest passenger ship in the world; 54,282 tross tons, 950 ft long, 100-ft beam, quadruple screw, 26 kts. During her naval

After coming down with an illness diagnosed as pneumonia, she was placed in sick bay on 19 February. When the ship arrived in Brest on 23 February she remained in sick bay, returning with the ship to New York. Because the vessel was being used to transport troops of New York's own 27th Division home from the European war, Eddy "was moved to a dandy big outside stateroom on D Deck". [666] She remained in America, recuperating at her family's home in Simsbury, Connecticut. During this time, her sister-in-law died of influezna (this was Grace Emily Blakeman, 1876–1919 [see No. 6 in Blakeman Family collateral genealogy, farther above], first wife of Sherman Willard Eddy). She also nursed others who had contracted influenza.

Finally, Sylvia Eddy sailed once again for the Near East, embarking aboard the S.S. Madonna[667] on 24 June 1919. Here her diary for 1919-1920 picks up in earnest with her numerous observations and comments about social life. The diary decisively omits almost all commentary on daily work and the Turkish-Armenian war, with a few notable exceptions. But by anad large, Sylvia Eddy preferred to take note of the genteel aspects of afternoon teas, evening entertainments, and the occasional interaction with other missionary workers. During the heated conflict of early 1920, she was, however, more moved to include comments on the conflict as it unwound around her. In late April, the missionary compound at the American Hospital itself came under periodic attack. Under fire, she helped relocate patients and operating room to a safer location, which may be the action for which Sylvia T. Eddy was awarded the French Croix de Guerre and a medal from the Near East Relief. [668]

Sylvia apparently had written home about some of her experiences, but many of these letters were probably destroyed in a flood at the family home in 1955; a few known now only from typed transcripts of some of them made by an unknown family member. Some of her experiences also were told in brief to the Hartford Courant when she was home in late 1921. [669]

When Sylvia Eddy returned to the U.S. in 1946, she had expected to return yet again to Turkey, but she did not. [670] Later she worked at the Ellis Fischel State Cancer Hospital inColumbia, Missouri. Why she went to Missouri is not clear. Elizabeth Desmond Keil recalled only that Sylvia may have had a friend in the St. Louis area, perhaps an acquaintance from her nursing school days; but Keil is uncertain about the details.[671] service she was fitted with armament. She was decommissioned 29 October 1919 and turned over to the U.S. Shipping Board. She was laid up in Hoboken, New Jersey until Apr 1922 when she was taken to Newport News, Virginia, to be refitted as a commercial passenger liner. In Jun 1923, she was turned over to the United States Line, sailing as the flagship S.S. Leviathan. She was laid up in 1933, with brief service in 1934, and sold to a British firm on 10 Dec 1937. After sailing to Rosyth, Scotland, she was broken up over a period of two years. End of Eddy Family collateral genealogy

Eddy Family
Mayflower Descendants

With the marriage of Marion Spamer [No. 153] to Sherman Willard Eddy, the family enjoys a linear ancestry to two immigrant families of the Mayflower, who established Plymouth Plantation in Massachusetts in 1620. John and Joan Tilley sailed aboard the Mayflower with their daughter, Elizabeth. Later, Elizabeth married another one of the Mayflower passengers, John Howland. The lineage was documented by Phyllis Eddy Beach, a member of the General Society of Mayflower Descendants (the "Mayflower Society"). [672]

[672] Phyllis Eddy Beach to Earle Spamer, 25 Jan 2008.

Also see the Eddy Family collateral genealogy, immediately above, for more specifics regarding that lineage.

In the following lineage, only the direct descendancy is shown.

Descendants of John Tilley

Generation No. 1

1. John[1] Tilley was born about 1571 in England; died 1620-1621. He married Joan (Hurst) Rogers 20 September 1596 in Henlow, Bedford, England.

Child of John Tilley and Joan is:
\+ 2 i. Elizabeth[2] Tilley, born 1607 in England.

Generation No. 2

2. Elizabeth[2] Tilley (John[1]) was born 1607 in England; died 21 December 1687 in Swansea, Massachusetts. She married John Howland about 1625 in Plymouth, Massachusetts. He was born about 1595 in England; died 23-24 February 1672/73 at Rocky Nook, Kingston, Massachusetts.

Child of Elizabeth Tilley and John Howland is:
\+ 3 i. Hannah[3] Howland, born 1637.

Generation No. 3

3. Hannah[3] Howland (Elizabeth[2] Tilley, John[1]) was born 1637. She married Jonathan Bosworth.

Child of Hannah Howland and Jonathan Bosworth is:
\+ 4 i. Jabez[4] Bosworth, born 1673.

Generation No. 4

4. Jabez[4] Bosworth (Hannah[3] Howland, Elizabeth[2] Tilley, John[1]) was born 1673. He married Susanna.

Child of Jabez Bosworth and Susanna is:
\+ 5 i. Joseph[5] Bosworth, born 1714.

> Elmer Jasper whom I called Grandpap was very humpbacked and had a long beard. He adhered to the Swedenborg religion[674] and was very scholarly. He loved the study of trees and plants and kew the botanical names of all of them. He planted many species at Rockland and for Jasper and Elizabeth's twenty fifth anniversary planted a three tiered flower bed in the shape of a cake just at the approach to the house and had candles lit in it.

Jasper Noble Spamer is buried at "Rocky Rest", near "Rockland", Perry Hall, Baltimore Co., Maryland.

Patterson Family
Collateral Genealogy
(86 descendants)

The genealogy of the Patterson family, as it relates to our Spamer lineage and as currently understood, is as follows: [675]

Descendants of Harry Wilmer Patterson

Generation No. 1

1. Harry Wilmer[1] Patterson was born 1855, and died 1943. He married Mary Elizabeth Dance, daughter of Milton Dance and Elizabeth Ferguson. She was born 1857, and died 1936.

Children of Harry Patterson and Mary Dance are:

+	2	i.	Elizabeth Ferguson[2] Patterson, born 04 Jan 1894 in Maryland; died 22 May 1971.
+	3	ii.	Katheryne May Patterson.
+	4	iii.	William Patterson.

Also see Ferguson Family collateral genealogy and the Dance Family collateral genealogy; both below.

The Pattersons owned a farm in Baltimore County that was adjacent to the "Rockland" property that had been acquired by Elmer Jasper Spamer in 1881. Various members of the Spamer family lived there over the years. There were two houses; one the principal residence (razed ca. 1965), the other a tenant-farmer's residence, razed later when the farm was sold to developers. [676]

[675] Information relating to the Patterson and collateral lineages was received from Nancy Spamer MicKey, Feb 2008.

[676] "[The Patterson] home was knocked down when I was a teenager [ca. 1965] (my grandparents used it as their tenant house and I remember that it had pocket doors) and the tenant house [second house] was the one that Aunt Nora and Uncle Bud lived in that was next to the tree Major Chambers climbed up." (Nancy Spamer MicKey to Earle Spamer, 21 Mar 2008; she later qualified the time frame as "teenager or a little later", 26 Mar 2008). The tenant house was razed later, when the property was sold to developers (Nancy Spamer MicKey to Earle Spamer, 26 Mar 2008). See more about the subjects mentioned here in the discussion of "Rockland", following the genealogical sketch for Elmer Jasper Spamer [No. 89 in the main Spamer family genealogy]. Uncle Bud and Aunt Nora are Morris Eugene Spamer [No. 217 in the main Sapmer family genealogy] and Nora (Funk) Spamer.

Sara Whiteford Giles provided the following comments relating to Harry and Mary Ferguson: [677]

> "It is not true that our grandmother 'would' not pay her taxes. She 'could' not as at that time she had no income. Our grandfather could not work and farm the land due to a hernia so all the money she had was her share of the farm income after paying her tenant their share. The tenant did the actual farm work. As a consequence when the taxes came due she would offer her son in law one of her fields if he would pay her taxes for her so field by field he acquired her farm. [There] were not many fields left at the time of her death. He paid his wife and my mother[678] and Uncle Bill[679] $3000 for what was left after her death. This of course gave him the two houses: her home and the tenant house (where your Uncle Bud and Aunt Nora lived[680]) that amounted to $1000 apiece for her heirs. Keep in mind that this was before the days of Social Security and with each field she gave him there were less fields left to gain her any income to live off of. It was a win win situation for him and a loss for her."

Regarding the Patterson farm, the following notes were passed along by Sara Whiteford Giles, which have the added advantage of distinguishing between the two Patterson houses, neither of which now survive. The following recollection mentions only the principal Patterson home, not the tenant house:, which is mentioned exclusively in other discussions herein:[681]

> "Our grandmother and grandfather Patteson[682] lived there until grandmother died. On the morning of her funeral it was very cold and icy and our grandfather went to the barn to feed their horse and slipped on the ice and broke his hip He was not able to go to her funeral after they set his hip[.] They moved him over to Rockland so your grandmother (his daughter) [683] could take care of him. They fixed his bed in what is now your dad's[684] living room and it was rigged with pulley's, etc. so he could help himself move up and down n the bed. After he was able to be up and about he came to live with my mother and father and I until my mother[685] died. He then went back to Rockland and later went to live with Cousin John and Cousin Annie Patterson at Manor View. He stayed there until his final illness when they called Aunt Elizabeth and she and Uncle Bill went and got him. He died at Rockland in the room that was yo[u]r dad's room during his growing up years. While all this was happening Aunt Elizabeth, Uncle Bill and my mother had an auction sale and sold their possessions that were not divided among the family and your grandfather (Jasper N. Spamer[686]) bought the remaining farm including the buildings. From that time on the Patterson home was used as a rental house and I do not now who all the renters were. I only remember a Mr. and Mrs. Bissell was one of them. My mother and father were married on the lawn of that house . . . ."

Eck Family
Collateral Genealogy
(24 descendants)

The genealogy of the Eck family, as it relates to our Spamer lineage and as currently understood, is as follows:[691]

Descendants of Christoph Eck

Generation No. 1

1. Christoph[1] Eck was born about 1806 in Saxony. He married Elisabeth. She was born about 1811 in Saxony.

---

[691] In addition to this collateral genealogy, a separate, brief Eck family collateral genealogy will be found with George Peabody Spamer (younger) [No. 190], who married one Emma C. Eck. She and her immediate family have thus far not been linked to the Eck family collateral genealogy presented here. (Also, the collaborative Eck family is far larger, and those branches mentioned herein are only those who are most closely related to the main branches discussed here.)

(Spamer 3778)

Left to right: Parents and son, Elmer Thomas Eck (1894–1990), Edith Spamer Eck (1886–1987) [No. 155], and Carl E. Eck (ca. 1925–) [No. 220]; photo in 1978.

Children of Christoph Eck and Elisabeth are:

	2	i.	Auguste[2] Eck, born about 1832 in Saxony.
+	3	ii.	Godfrey Eck, born about 1835 in Saxony.
	4	iii.	Gottleib Eck, born about 1836 in Saxony.
	5	iv.	Therese Eck, born about 1838 in Saxony.
	6	v.	Delone Eck, born about 1843 in Saxony.
	7	vi.	Wilhelmina Eck, born about 1846 in Saxony.
	8	vii.	Anna Eck, born about 1849 in Saxony.

NOTES

1. Christoph Eck (ca. 1806–)

He emigrated with his family from Germany, arriving in Baltimore, Maryland, on 8 May 1851 aboard the bark Anna.

The 1864 Baltimore city directory lists an August Eck, tailor, at 9 McElderry St.; also listed there is a Charles Eck, laborer, at 9 L. McElderry. It is not certain that August Eck is the individual who is the subject here, or if Charles Eck is a relation.

The 1874 Baltimore city directory lists an August Eck working in the firm of H. H. Lucke, Son & Co., 107 Jefferson St. It is not certain that he is the individual who is the subject here.

7. Wilhelmina Eck (ca. 1846–)

Baltimore passenger and immigration lists indicate that a "Wilhelmine Eck", aged 6, of Saxony, arrived in Baltimore, Maryland, on 8 May 1851 aboard the bark Anna. The 1870 U.S. census lists her as "Wilmina" and lists her place of birth as Maryland. (I had initially believed that she was the wife of Godfrey Eck, until the immigration data suggested that this woman is Godfrey's sister.)

8. Anna Eck (ca. 1849–)

The transcribed marriage records of St. Paul's Fifth German Reformed Church, Baltimore, Maryland, record the marriage of an Anna Elise Eck to Andreas Klimm on 22 June 1870. Whether this is the Anna Eck the subject here is not certain.

Generation No. 2

3. Godfrey[2] Eck (Christoph[1]) was born about 1835 in Saxony.

Children of Godfrey Eck are:

	9	i.	Charles[3] Eck, born about 1862 in Maryland.
+	10	ii.	Philip A. Eck, born August 1864 in Maryland, died 05 August 1911.
	11	iii.	Caroline Eck, born about 1867 in Maryland.
	12	iv.	Edwin Eck, born 1870 in Maryland.

NOTES

3. Godfrey Eck (ca. 1835–)

Baltimore passenger and immigration lists include a "G. Eck", aged 20, of Saxony, arriving on 8 May 1851 aboard the bark Anna. It is not known whether this is Godfrey Eck, the subject here.

At the time of the 1870 U.S. census he worked as a shoemaker, residing in District 3, Harford Co., Maryland.

Generation No. 3

10. Philip A.[3] Eck (Godfrey[2], Christoph[1]) was born August 1864 in Maryland; died 05 August 1911. He married Hannah A. She was born 27 February 1867 in Maryland; died 24 October 1919.

Children of Philip Eck and Hannah are:

	13	i.	Sadie A.[4] Eck, born March 1890 in Maryland.
	14	ii.	Y. Clarence Eck, born October 1891 in Maryland.
+	15	iii.	Elmer Thomas Eck, born 22 June 1894 in Maryland; died 08 May 1990.
+	16	iv.	Philip Agustus Eck, born 04 April 1900 in Maryland; died December 1973.
	17	v.	Lisa Eck, born about 1904 in Maryland.
	18	vi.	Albert Eck, born about 1906 in Maryland.

247. Albert Henry Spamer (1901–1905)

Albert Henry Spamer was buried 28 December 1905 in Lot 138 II, Baltimore Cemetery, Baltimore, Maryland.

251. Arthur Ballack Spamer (1912–1982)

At the time of the 1930 census, Arthur Ballack Spamer was an assistant shipping clerk in a wholesale grocery, residing with his widowed mother. At the time of his death he resided in Baltimore, Maryland.

Minnie (Jackson) Spamer (1896–1983)
(wife of Arthur Ballack Spamer)

The Social Security Death Index lists dates for a Minnie Spamer as 9 May 1896–Dec 1983. This is probably Minnie Spamer, wife of Arthur, but this is as yet not certain.

Ludloff Family
Collateral Genealogy
(20 descendants)

The genealogy of the Ludloff family, as it relates to our Spamer lineage and as currently understood, is as follows:

Descendants of Jacob Ludloff

Generation No. 1

1. Jacob[1] Ludloff was born about 1807 in Germany. He married Maria. She was born about 1815 in Germany.

Children of Jacob Ludloff and Maria are:

	2	i.	Frederick[2] Ludloff, born about 1834 in Germany.
	3	ii.	Sophia Ludloff, born about 1837 in Germany.
	4	iii.	Johannes Ludloff, born about 1838 in Germany.
	5	iv.	Ludwig Ludloff, born about 1839 in Germany.
	6	v.	Helena Ludloff, born about 1840 in Germany.
	7	vi.	Elisabeth Ludloff, born about 1843 in Germany.
	8	vii.	Elisa Ludloff, born about 1846 in Germany.
+	9	viii.	Jacob Ludloff, born about 1848 in Maryland.
	10	ix.	William Ludloff, born about October 1849 in Maryland.
+	11	x.	Conrad Ludloff, born January 1855 in Maryland; died after May 1900.
+	12	xi.	Charles Ludloff, born January 1856 in Maryland; died between 1900-1910.

NOTES

1. Jacob Ludloff (senior) (ca. 1807–)

Jacob Ludloff, his wife, and their (then) seven children emigrated to America from Germany, arriving in Baltimore, Maryland, 25 August 1847 aboard the Bremen ship Gustav.

In the 1860 U.S. census his name is spelled “Ludeloft”; his birthplace is given there as “Hesses”.

He does not appear in the 1870 census and may have by then died. In the 1880 census, his wife, “Mary”, is listed as “single”.

Other than his sons, Conrad, Charles, and William, none of his other children have been located in censuses after they left their parents’ home.

Occupations of Jacob Ludloff (from U.S. censuses and other sources):
1847 immigration list: Carpenter
1850 census: Ship carpenter
1860 census: Day laborer

At the time of the 1850 and 1860 U.S. censuses, Jacob Ludloff resided in the 2nd Ward, Baltimore, Maryland.

Maria Ludloff (Mary Ludloff) (ca. 1815–)
(wife of Jacob Ludloff)

After her immigration to America, she used the name Mary. In the 1860 U.S. census her birthplace is given as “Hesses”; in the 1870 census as “Cor Hessen” (which is repeated thus elsewhere on the census sheet).

Residences of Mary Ludloff (after the presumed death of her husband, from U.S. censuses):
1870: 6th Ward, Baltimore, Maryland
1880: 176 East St., Baltimore, Maryland (an apartment or a shared home)

At the time of the 1870 census, her sons, Charles and William, resided with her.

2. Frederick Ludloff (ca. 1834–)

Frederick Ludloff has not been located in the 1860 or later U.S. censuses. He could have moved away from Maryland.[695]

In the 1850 census, Frederick Ludloff is listed with the occupation of whip maker.

6. Helena Ludloff (ca. 1840–)

She was known as "Ellen".

10. William Ludloff (1849–)

Occupations of William Ludloff (from U.S. censuses):
1870: Cigar maker
1880: Tobacconist

Generation No. 2

9. Jacob[2] Ludloff (Jacob[1]) was born about 1848 in Maryland. He married Caroline. She was born about 1858 in Maryland.
Children of Jacob Ludloff and Caroline are:
13 i. William[3] Ludloff, born about 1885 in Maryland.
14 ii. Anna Ludloff, born about 1889 in Maryland.
15 iii. Helena Ludloff, born about 1892 in Maryland.

NOTES

9. Jacob Ludloff (junior) (ca. 1848–)

Occupations of Jacob Ludloff (from U.S. censuses and Baltimore city directories):
1870 census: Cigar maker
1890 city directory: "cigars"
1910 census: Cigar maker in tobacco factory

Residences of Jacob Ludloff (from U.S. censuses and Baltimore city directories):
1890 city directory: 1438 Orleans St.
1910 census: 1606 Orleans St., Baltimore, Maryland

Children of Jacob and Caroline Ludloff

At the time of the 1910 U.S. census, the children had the following occupations:
William Ludloff (ca. 1885–) [No. 13] driver in iron foundry
Anna Ludloff (ca. 1889–) [No. 14], "Tailoress" in clothing factory

[695] In the 1860 census, a Frederick Ludloff, aged 27, born in Prussia, is a farmer in Mosel, Wisconsin, there raising a young family with wife, Ernestine, aged 27, born in Prussia. Also in their household is a Michael and Anna S. Ludloff, aged 63 and 61, respectively, born in Prussia; also an August Ludloff, aged 25, and Edward Ludloff, aged 19, born in Prussia. Whether Frederick is the same as the subject of this record is uncertain. (Nearby in Mosel also is a farm headed by a Lewis Ludloff, aged 36, born in Prussia; also an uncertain relation.) After the 1860 census, no Frederick Ludloff is located in Wisconsin.

Helena Ludloff (ca. 1892–) [No. 15], [illegible] maker in factory.

11. Conrad[2] Ludloff (Jacob[1]) was born January 1855 in Maryland, and died after May 1900. He married Elisabeth. She was born about 1860 in Maryland.

Children of Conrad Ludloff and Elisabeth are:

16 i. Frederick[3] Ludloff, born about 1876 in Pennsylvania.

\+ 17 ii. Elisabeth M. Ludloff, born October 1879 in Pennsylvania; died 22 November 1957.

18 iii. Gustav Adolph Ludloff, born 08 April 1885 in Maryland. He married (1) Annabelle about 1904; born about 1885 in Pennsylvania. He married (2) Olive M. between 1929-1930; born about 1885 in Virginia.

NOTES

11. Conrad Ludloff (1855–after May 1900)

Occupations of Conrad Ludloff (from U.S. censuses and Baltimore city directories):

1870 census: Lithographer*
1880 census: Artist
1890 Baltimore city directory: Artist
1900 census: Lithographic artist

*In the 1870 census, his occupation (lithographer) is suffixed by an illegible parenthetical note, which may read, "(art)".

In the 1890 Baltimore city directory he is listed in business as Ludloff and Wilson, artists, 13 S. Eutaw St.; the partner is C. S. Wilson.

Residences of Conrad Ludloff (from U.S. censuses and Baltimore city directories):

1880 census: 211 N. 7th St., Richmond, Henrico Co., Virginia
1890 city directory: 1735 E. Preston St., Baltimore, Maryland
1900 census: 1815 E. Townsend St., Baltimore, Maryland (home of his married daughter, Elisabeth Spamer)

Elisabeth Ludloff (ca. 1860–)
(wife of Conrad Ludloff)

She was known as "Betty".

18. Gustav Adolph Ludloff (1885–)

In the 1930 U.S. census, the ages of Gustav and Olive Ludloff "at first marriage" are 45 and 20, respectively. Inasmuch as Gustav was 45 years of age at the time of the census, Gustav and Olive were probably married in 1929-1930. Olive had been previously married, with children, as noted below.

Occupations of Gustav Adolph Ludloff (from U.S. censuses and other sources):

1910 census: Fitter in shipyard
1918 draft registration: Superintendent of stores and supplies, Baltimore Dry Dock and Shipping Co., East Fort Ave., Baltimore, Maryland
1920 census: Salesman for jewelry company
1930 census: "Store Keeper, City Bureau"

Residences of Gustav Adolph Ludloff (from U.S. censuses and other sources):

1900 census: 1815 E. Townsend St., Baltimore, Maryland (with his father in the home of his married sister, Elisabeth Spamer)
1910 census: 1512(?) Register St., Baltimore, Maryland
1918 draft registration, and 1920 census: 1952 Patterson Park Ave., Baltimore, Maryland
1930 census: 1313 N. Patterson Ave., Baltimore, Maryland

Olive Ludloff (ca. 1885–)
(wife of Gustav Adolph Ludloff)

She had been previously married, with children, as follows:

William E.[1] Witt was born about 1882 in Maryland. He married Olive M. about 1905; born about 1885 in Virginia.

Children of William Witt and Olive are:
i. William H.[2] Witt, born about 1907 in Virginia.
ii. Edward B. Witt, born about 1908 in Maryland.
iii. Marvin P. Witt, born about 1911 in Maryland.
iv. Vivian O. Witt, born about 1914 in Maryland.
v. Alice L. Witt, born about 1916 in Maryland.

At the time of the 1920 U.S. census, William E. Witt was an iron maker in a shipyard, residing at 1765 E. North Ave., Baltimore, Maryland.

At the time of the 1930 census, William H. Witt was a job printer, and Edward B. Witt was a printer for a newspaper.

12. Charles[2] Ludloff (Jacob[1]) was born January 1856 in Maryland, and died between 1900-1910. He married Maria L. about 1881. She was born January 1854 in Maryland.

Children of Charles Ludloff and Maria are:
19 i. Henry Edward[3] Ludloff, born 10 September 1889 in Baltimore, Maryland; died 19 February 1963.
20 ii. Irvin or Erwin W. Ludloff, born August 1891 in Maryland.

NOTES

12. Charles Ludloff (1856–1900/10)

Occupations of Charles Ludloff (from U.S. censuses and Baltimore city directories):
1870 census: “Strip[p]ing Tobacco”
1880 census: Tobacconist
1890 city directory: “cigars”
1900 census: Cigar salesman

In the 1890 Baltimore city directory, and also at the time of the 1900 U.S. census, Charles Ludloff resided at 1600 Orleans St., Baltimore, Maryland.

Maria Ludloff (1854–)
(wife of Charles Ludloff)

In the 1900 U.S. census she is indexed as “Shurella Ladehoff”; the census sheet appears to give the surname “Ludloff” and an illegible given name ending in “rella”. She was previously married (see below). Her sons, John A. Holthaus, Henry E. Ludloff, and Irwin/Erwin Ludloff resided with her at the time of the 1900 census; the sons’ surnames are indexed as “Ludlaff”. Also residing with her is daughter “Bertha Kruse”, widowed, aged 32.

At the time of the 1910 census, Maria Ludloff resided at 1911 Jefferson St., Baltimore, Maryland.

Maria had had an earlier marriage, with children, as follows:

A. H.[1] Holthaus was born about 1852 in Maryland. He married Maria L. before 1881; born January 1854 in Maryland.

Children of A. H. Holthaus and Maria are:

i. Albert A.[2] Holthaus, born January 1875 in Maryland.
ii. Bertha Holthaus, born October 1877 in Maryland. She married Kruse before? June 1900; he died before August 1910.
iii. John Adam Holthaus, born December 1879 in Maryland.

Notes Regarding Holthaus

At the time of the 1900 U.S. census, Bertha Holthaus was listed as "Mamie Holthaus" and was "married" zero years. She resided with her mother and step-father.

At the time of the 1910 U.S. census, John Adam Holthaus was a contracting clerk.

19. Henry Edward Ludloff (1889–1963)

He apparently never married.

Occupations of Henry Edward Ludloff (from U.S. censuses and other sources):
1910 census: Clerk in banking house
1917 draft registration: Clerk
1930 census: Secretary and stenographer
1942 draft registration: employed by S. J. Newman, Inc., 76 William St., New York, New York

Residences of Henry Edward Ludloff (from U.S. censuses and other sources):
1917 draft registration: 1105 N. Patterson Park Ave., Baltimore, Maryland
1930 census: 17 Midlach St., Brooklyn, Kings Co., New York (apartment)
1942 draft registration: 124 Parrot Place, Brooklyn, Kings Co., New York

He is buried in Section I, site 16091, Baltimore National Cemetery, 5501 Frederick Ave., Baltimore, Maryland.

20. Irvin or Erwin W. Ludloff (1891–)

At the time of the 1910 U.S. census he was a clerk in [illegible] factory.

Generation No. 3

17. Elisabeth M.[3] Ludloff (Conrad[2], Jacob[1]) was born October 1879 in Pennsylvania, and died 22 November 1957. She married William Otis Spamer 20 October 1897, son of William Spamer and Virginia Shakeford. He was born 01 February 1875 in Maryland, and died 07 September 1929.

See main Spamer genealogy for details about Elisabeth (Ludloff) and William Otis Spamer and their descendants.

End of Ludloff Family collateral genealogy

171. Mary Elisabeth[6] Spamer (William[5], Christian[4], Johann Conrad[3], Johann Conrad[2], Johannes[1]) was born March 1879 in Maryland, and died 29 September 1954. She married Henry Hamilton Hobbs 18 December 1901, son of Hamilton Hobbs and Mary. He was born 01 October 1877 in Maryland. Also see Additions & Corrections

Children of Mary Spamer and Henry Hobbs are:
+ 253 i. Andrew H.[7] Hobbs [Sr.], born 13 October 1902 in Maryland; died before 25 April 1998.
+ 254 ii. Mary L. H. Hobbs, born 22 October 1905 in Carroll Co., Maryland; died 25 April 1998 at Golden Age Guest Home, Sykesville, Carroll Co., Maryland.

Also see Hobbs family collateral genealogy (below).

NOTES

171. Mary (Spamer) Hobbs (1879–1954)
"Mamie"

One family record gives the birth date of Mary Elisabeth Spamer as 1873. The 1900 U.S. census lists Mary Elisabeth Spamer's date of birth as March 1879; the 1930 census gives her age as 50 (thus born about 1880).

In the 1880 U.S. census, Mary Elisabeth Spamer's name is written as Mamie. At the time of the 1900 census, she and her brother, Joseph, resided in the home of their grandmother, Elizabeth M. Spamer, 2012 E. Baltimore St., Baltimore, Maryland.

Henry Hamilton Hobbs (Harry Hobbs) (1877–) Also see Additions & Corrections (husband of Mary Elisabeth Spamer)

Henry Hamilton Hobbs always went by the name "Harry H. Hobbs"; however, in the 1880 U.S. census he is listed as Henry H. Hobbs, and on his draft registration card in 1918 he provided his actual full name, Henry Hamilton Hobbs. In all other censuses and in family information he is Harry H. Hobbs.

Occupations of Harry Hobbs (from U.S. censuses and other sources):
1900 census: Farm laborer
1910 census: Farmer
1918 draft registration card: "Road Patrol" for State Road Commission, Baltimore, Maryland
1920 census: State roads laborer

Residences of Harry Hobbs (from U.S. censuses and other sources):
1910 census: White Rock Road, Freedom District, Carroll Co., Maryland
1918 draft registration: Sykesville, Carroll Co., Maryland
1920 census: Freedom District, Carroll Co., Maryland
1930 census: Westminster Road, Freedom District, Carroll Co., Maryland

Hobbs Family
Collateral Genealogy
(10 descendants)

The genealogy of the Hobbs family, as it relates to our Spamer lineage and as currently understood, is as follows:

Descendants of Hamilton Hobbs

Generation No. 1

1. Hamilton[1] Hobbs was born April 1829 in Maryland, and died after May 1900. He married Mary J. about 1855. She was born July 1836 in Maryland, and died after May 1900.

Children of Hamilton Hobbs and Mary are:

+	2	i.	Ida[2] Hobbs, born May 1860 in Maryland.
	3	ii.	Evaline Hobbs, born about 1866 in Maryland.
	4	iii.	Rosella or Rosetta Hobbs, born about February 1870 in Maryland.
	5	iv.	Steward C. Hobbs, born about 1875 in Maryland.
+	6	v.	Lizzie Hobbs, born October 1875 in Maryland.
+	7	vi.	Henry Hamilton Hobbs, born 01 October 1877 in Maryland.

NOTES

Occupations of Hamilton Hobbs (1829–after May 1900) [No. 1] (from U.S. censuses):
1850, 1860: Laborer
1870: Farmer
1880: Farm hand
1900: Farmer

Residences of Hamilton Hobbs (from U.S. censuses):
1860: Lisbon, Howard Co., Maryland
1870: 4th District, Hamilton Co., Maryland
1880: 2nd District, Hamilton Co., Maryland
1900: Freedom District, Carroll Co., Maryland

At the time of the 1850 U.S. census, Hamilton Hobbs resided in Howard District, Anne Arundel Co., Maryland. The household was headed by Charles A. Hobbs, aged 31, farmer and planter; also in the household were Leanna, 25; Alice A., 1; Samantha, 18; James H. Jeffrey, 29, teacher; and free blacks Abraham Smith, 17, William H. Smith, 8, and Randolph W. Gassaway, 5. The household held no slaves.

In the 1860 census, the Hobbs household included William Whalen, aged 2 (relationship unknown); and a black boy, Charles Dorsey, aged 12. The page listed free inhabitants; the Hobbs household held no slaves.

In the 1870 census, the family listing spans two pages, and on these two pages also are three families whose relationship to Hamilton Hobbs is not known:
1) B. Wm. or B. Thos. Hobbs, aged 46, farmer; A. Catharine(?), 45; D. John, 19, laborer; E. Mary, 16, domestic; female L. Frances(?), 12; female Isora, 10; F. Ella, 8; female W. Elsinora(?), 6; all born in Maryland.
2) C. Nathan Hobbs, aged 72, carpenter; Leydia, 55; both born in Maryland.
3) Cornelius Hobbs, aged 52, carpenter; E. Elizabeth, 49; Emma, 20, domestic; R.(?) Stephen, 13; all born in Maryland.

Also in the 1870 census, John Hackney, aged 50, "No occupation" resided with Hamilton Hobbs; column 18 specifies for him, "Idiotic". In the 1880 census, John Hackney, aged 60, unemployed, is listed as brother-in-law.

The 1880 census taker is listed as Harry C. Hobbs; relationship unknown.

In the 1900 census, married/widowed daughters and grandchildren resided in the Hobbs home. On the same page of that census, another Hobbs family is listed whose relationship to Hamilton Hobbs is not determined: Reginald Hobbs (b. February 1845), farmer, wife Elizabeth (b. January 1856) (married 24 years), son E. Carroll Hobbs (b. December 1879), and Bertha Hobbs (b. July 1886); all born in Maryland.

The name of Rosella or Rosetta Hobbs (1870–) [No. 4] is given as Rosetta in the 1870 census; as Rosella in the 1880 census.

Generation No. 2

2. Ida[2] Hobbs (Hamilton[1]) was born May 1860 in Maryland. She married Sauernig(?). He died between January 1888–June 1900.

Children of Ida Hobbs and Sauernig are:

	8	i.	Etta B.[3] Sauernig, born April 1885 in Maryland.
	9	ii.	William H. Sauernig, born September 1888 in Maryland.

NOTES

In the 1860 U.S. census (taken 12 June), Ida Hobbs (1860–) [No. 2], aged 1 month, is listed as Mary Hobbs. At the time of the 1880 census, her occupation is listed as "Asst."

As for the surname of Ida Hobbs' husband, the spelling taken as "Sauernig" is not certain; it is difficult to read in the 1900 census, from where the name is taken.

---

6. Lizzie[2] Hobbs (Hamilton[1]) was born October 1875 in Maryland. She married Ridgeley.

Child of Lizzie Hobbs and Ridgeley is:
10 i. Gorman T.[3] Ridgeley, born August 1899 in Maryland.

---

7. Henry Hamilton[2] Hobbs (Hamilton[1]) was born 01 October 1877 in Maryland. He married Mary Elisabeth Spamer 18 December 1901, daughter of William Spamer and Virginia Shakeford. She was born March 1879 in Maryland, and died 29 September 1954.

See the main Spamer genealogy for information relating to Henry Hamilton and Mary (Spamer) Hobbs and their descendants.

172. Joseph Allen (or Alan)[5] Spamer (William[5], Christian[4], Johann Conrad[3], Johann Conrad[2], Johannes[1]) was born 12 October 1882 in Maryland and died 12 March 1958 at Sailors' Snug Harbor, Staten Island, New York, New York. He married (1) Lena. She was born 15 August 1886 in Maryland and died November 1968. He married (2) Lillian A. Henderson before September 1918. She was born about 1888 in Maryland. He again married (3) Lena between 1920-1930.

Child of William Spamer and Caroline Krumm is:
+ 254a i. Helen[6] Spamer, born 05 January 1907 in Maryland; died September 1979.

NOTES

172. Joseph Allen (or Alan) Spamer (1882–1958) Also see Additions & Corrections

Joseph A. Spamer is an enigma in the Spamer family; moreso now than when A. M. Spamer mentioned him in the "Spamer Families of Baltimore" in 1984. Joseph is known to us through bits of family information, much of which is ambiguous, and from a scant, confusing public record. His parentage and his own family are confused matters. A body of partly circumstantial information is summarized here for the first time. The information so consistently points to a single Joseph A. Spamer that it would be an astoundingly improbable series of coincidences if it is ever shown that the Joseph A. Spamer discussed here is not the Joseph A. Spamer of family.

Joseph Spamer's middle name is either Allen or Alan. Joseph Spamer registered for the military drafts in 1918 and 1942, a fact corroborated by identical signatures and an identical date of birth. In the 1918 registration, he lists his name as "Joseph Allen Spamer"; in the 1942 registration as "Joseph Alan Spamer". One may assume that the spelling, "Allen", is correct because the 1918 draft registration seems to have been entirely written in Joseph Spamer's hand, while the 1942 registration, with its information hand-printed, may be a clerk's writing.

Should one consider that there is more than one Joseph Spamer with whom our family's Joseph may be confused, keep in mind that only one pertinent Joseph Spamer is located in public records at any given time. With one exception, there are never multiple Joseph Spamers who appear concurrently in public records; and in that case one of the Joseph Spamers is clearly not the Joseph Spamer of our family.

The only other Joseph Spamer thus far located in public records is a man of that name who resided in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, at the same time as when our family's Joseph Spamer was alive. That other Joseph Spamer likewise was born around 1885, but in Austria; he immigrated into the U.S. in 1903 and worked as a butcher. He resided in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, where coincidentally the family's Joseph Spamer seems to have resided for a while. This is sorted out in more detail farther below. There also is a group of Spamers in Philadelphia who are wholly unrelated to our Baltimore Spamers (except through distant ancestors in Germany). Although my immediate family is from Philadelphia, too, this is a coincidence of family migration, and to my knowledge no one of my family ever met any of the Philadelphia Spamers. [696]

Regarding Joseph A. Spamer of the family, there are many confusing pieces of information that come down to us today. These proved a problem to Frances and Andy Spamer, the earlier family historians, who obviously had some facts that now are missing. What is reported here is far more than they ever knew, thanks to the proliferation of records that are accessible via the Internet. The problems with Joseph A. Spamer's history begin with his birth.

A cursory genealogical sketch written by Frances D. Spamer in 1975 altogether omits a birth date for Joseph.[697] Frances' brother, A. M. Spamer, in his 1984 "Spamer Families of Baltimore", listed the birth date of Joseph A. Spamer only as "~1878" [ca. 1878], and Joseph's mother is there indicated to have been Virginia Ellen "Shakeford", William Spamer's second wife (who died in 1881).[698] However, Joseph Spamer is not in the 1880 U.S. census. In the 1900 census, Joseph's birth date is listed as October 1882, which is fully seventeen months after the death of his putative mother, Virginia Spamer. When he registered for the military drafts of 1918 and 1942, he indicated that his birth date was 12 October 1882, which must be inferentially correct.

Much is confused regarding the life of Joseph A. Spamer, including his birth date, which is given differently even in family-derived information. Each time his age is given in various public records, a somewhat different calculated birth date is derived, as follows:

Source	Given Age	Birth Date	*Expected Age
Frances D. Spamer correspondence (1975)		no birth date given
A. M. Spamer, "Spamer Families of Baltimore" (1984)[699]		ca. 1878
1910 census	31	1879 (calculated)	28
1918 draft registration	36	1882 October 12	36

[696] While I was growing up in Philadelphia, I also recall having noticed Spamer names in the Philadelphia telphone directory, but upon inquiry to my mother was informed that she had no knowledge of them.

1921 ship's crew manifest	46	1875 (calculated)	39
1930 census	56	1874 (calculated)	48
1942 draft registration	59	1882 October 12	59

* Based upon birth date of 12 October 1882; expected ages in bold agree with the 1882 birth date

The only biographical note about Joseph Spamer that appears in A. M. Spamer's "Spamer Families of Baltimore" is a single, brief sentence:

> At time of his death, he was ranked as Captain. (no children or living descendents [sic]).[700]

Correspondence from Frances D. Spamer in 1975 adds, intriguingly and without further comment:

> No record of any marriage altho' one was claimed, but court Decree, dated 7/26/1960, ruled no children or living descendants.[701]

This contradicts information that has been gleaned from public records and from correspondence with a descendant. Frances Spamer did not indicate the source of her information about the legal case. Thus far neither the judicial jurisdiction of the court, nor the context of the case, have been identified; probably the case was pled in the State of Maryland (where putative children may have lived) or otherwise in the State of New York (where Joseph Spamer died).

Joseph A. Spamer died while in the care of Sailors' Snug Harbor, a retired-mariners' home that at that time was in declining years in its original location on Staten Island, New York.[702] In mid-2007, Sailors' Snug Harbor moved its administrative headquarters from North Carolina back to New York City, and its records were, in late 2007 and early 2008, in the process of being transferred. To date, no information has been obtained from Sailors' Snug Harbor that may relate to Joseph A. Spamer.[703]

[702] By 1976, the home had relocated to Sea Level, North Carolina. Today it operates under the name of Snug Harbor on Nelson Bay, administratively overseen by The Trustees of The Sailors' Snug Harbor in The City of New York. Sailor's Snug Harbor was founded in 1801 as a home for retired sailors. The Staten Island estate was opened in 1833 and experienced a long period of growth. (For a scholarly history of the institution, see Gerald J. Barry, Sailor's Snug Harbor: A History, 1801-2001, Fordham University Press, New York, 2000.) By 1900, about 1,000 men resided here, but the 1950s, when Joseph Spamer resided here, there were fewer than 200 residents. It was situated on 83 acres on Staten Island, overlooking New York harbor. The campus is now a public park and cultural center, including art galleries and the Staten Island Botanical Gardens. Five Greek Revival style buildings comprise surviving elements of the numerous buildings that once made up the seamen's home. Some building were razed in the mid-20th century, as an economy measure; by the 1960s the entire site was slated for destruction, but local citizens and public officials rallied to save it. Finally, the site was purchased by the City of New York. 1907 city directory: 113 S. Washington St.
1910 census: 946 Broadway, Baltimore, Maryland [706]
1912 city directory: 1511 Rutland Ave. (home of his half-brother, William Otis Spamer) [N.B.: Joseph is absent in the 1913 Baltimore directory]

1942 draft registration (two addresses are given): 614 Bramhall Ave., Jersey City, Hudson Co., New Jersey (crossed out); inserted on side of registration card is "Genova Ave E Vineland N.J. 2-25-43". At the time that Joseph Spamer had filled out this registration card, on the line for "name and address of person who will always know your address" had had written Margaret Spamer, 614 Bramhall Ave. (The precise relationship of this woman to Joseph Spamer has not been determined.)

The 1900 U.S. census lists Joseph A. Spamer and his sister[708], Mary, residing in the home of their widowed grandmother, Elizabeth M. Spamer, at 2012 E. Baltimore St., Baltimore, Maryland. In the same census, the children's father, William Spamer, and his son, Walter, resided with William's sister, Mary Pausch (then widowed), at 1723 E. Lanvale St., Baltimore. In the census data, the parents of both Mary and Joseph are indicated to have been born in Maryland. However, the putative mother of Joseph, Virginia Ellen Shackleford, was born in Virginia. It is possible that the census informant confused William Spamer's two wives because Caroline, William's first wife, was born in Maryland. Or, soon [705] The United States Shipping Board (or more fully, the United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation) was established during the wartime emergency under the Shipping Act of 1916; it was formally organized in January 1917. It served to regulate the construction and operation of its own fleet of merchant vessels, and such other vessels consigned by emergency to duties of international shipping for entities of the U.S. Government and its suppliers. In 1927 it was redesignated as the U.S. Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, and in 1936 was replaced by the Maritime Commission under the Merchant marine Act of 1936, under the U.S. Department of Commerce. [708] She is his half-sister if Virginia Spamer, William's second wife, is not the mother.

after his second wife's death William may have indeed married another Virginia E., born in Maryland; and further, this second Virginia could well have been the "Virginia E. Spamer" against whom William Spamer filed for divorce in 1887, as discussed under notes about William Spamer [No. 93].

Available information fairly indicates that William Spamer fathered Joseph after the death of his second wife. Virginia Spamer, William's second wife, died in 1881 as attested to by burial records from Baltimore Cemetery. [709] Whether Joseph's birth was out of wedlock, or if William shortly later married a third time, to another Virginia, is entirely conjectural. Complicating matters is the fact that no public record has thus far been found for the marriage intentions of William Spamer and any woman named Virginia; for example, a newspaper record or other publicly available, indexed source. Oddly, Virginia (or Jennie) Spamer, William's second wife, has thus far not been located under death notices. These issues are perplexing, and the coincidences of so much missing information is frustratingly peculiar.

Joseph Spamer is usually listed in maritime occupations, as was also his father, William Spamer.[710] His years as a clerk are not further defined; whether these were likewise in maritime business is not known.

Regarding possible marriages of Joseph A. Spamer, conflicting information is located in the U.S. censuses for Baltimore, Maryland, in 1920 and 1930, as follows:

At the time of the 1920 U.S. census, Joseph Spamer's (first?) wife, Lena, and daughter, Helen, resided in the 8th Ward, Baltimore city, at 1900 E. Biddle St. The household is as follows:

> Goldman, Max (head), aged 38, immigrated 1906, naturalized citizen, born in Russia, speaks Yiddish, occupied in a shoemaker's repair shop
> Goldman, Rebecca (wife), 38, immigrated 1906 [1908?], alien resident, born in Russia, speaks Yiddish
> Goldman, Annie (sister), 23, single, immigrated 1913, alien resident, born in Russia, speaks Yiddish, occupied tailoring for a clothing manufacturer
> Spamer, Lena (head), 33, married, born in Maryland, occupied as receiving clerk for clothing manufacturer
> Spamer, Helen (daughter), 13, born in Maryland

Joseph Spamer seems to have had divorced Lena before September 1918. His military draft registration of at that time lists "Mrs. Lillian A. Spamer" as a contact person for him. This is the same woman with whom Joseph Spamer resided at the time of the 1920 U.S. census for the 27th Ward, Baltimore city; they are in the George W. Henderson household, who is Lillian's father. This household is as follows:

> Henderson, Geo. W. (head), aged 52, born in Maryland, occupied as a bookkeeper for a printing company
> Henderson, Elizabeth G. (wife), 50, born in Maryland
> Henderson, Pearl (daughter), 18, born in Maryland, occupied as an operator at the telephone company
> Henderson, Milton E. (son), 16, born in Maryland
> Henderson, Edgar L. (son), 13, born in Maryland
> Spamer, Jos. A. (son-in-law), 33 [calculated birth date ca. 1887], born in Maryland, occupied as boat captain
> Spamer, Lillian A. (daughter [of G.W. Henderson]), 31, born in Maryland
> Randall, Bertie (son-in-law), 20, born in Missouri
> Randall, Myrtle E. (daughter [of G.W. Henderson]), 20, born in Maryland

[710] Other members of William Spamer's immediate family likewise were employed in maritime affairs out of Baltimore, but they had been forced to discontinue in this profession before Joseph Spamer was born. See "The Trials of the Tugboat Ella" at the conclusion of the genealogical entry for Johann Conrad Spamer [No. 7].

> Henderson, Harry C. (son), 25, born in Maryland, occupied as mess sergeant on boat
> Grote, John G. (boarder[711]), 67, born in Maryland

Thus far this is the only information available about the Henderson family.

Of additional note regarding the above-cited Henderson household is a possible connection to another part of the Spamer family genealogy. On this census sheet, the next household listed is at 2001 Ellsworth St. It is the residence of Christian and Elizabeth Rehberger (aged 64 and 58, respectively). The Rehberger family is related collaterally to the Spamers, as noted elsewhere herein. However, Christian and Elizabeth have not yet been placed genealogically within the known Rehberger family at this time.

At the time of the 1930 U.S. census, Joseph Spamer seems to have remarried Lena; they resided then in the 8th Ward, Baltimore city, at 2304 E. Biddle St. Their daughter, Helen, by then had married Charles V. Pierpont:

> Spamer, Joseph A. (head), aged 56 [calculated birth date ca. 1875], first marriage at age 26 [ca. 1900], born in Maryland, occupied as mate for steamboat company
> Spamer, Lena M. (wife), 46, first marriage at age 19 [ca. 1903], born in Maryland
> Pierpont, Helen (daughter), 23, first marriage at age 21 [ca. 1928], born in Maryland, occupied as an operator [telephone operator] at a boat pad company
> Pierpont, George (son), 3, born in Maryland

At the time of the 1930 census, Helen's husband, Charles V. Pierpont, was a boarder in the household of Edgar T. and Julia A. Wise, 916 Rosedale St., Baltimore, Maryland. See more about the Pierpont family in the entry for Helen Spamer [No. 254a].

When Joseph Spamer registered for the military draft in 1942, he listed the "name and address of person who will always know your address" as Margaret Spamer, 614 Bramhall Ave., Jersey City, Hudson Co., New Jersey, which was the same address that he provided as his own residence. The relationship of Margaret Spamer has not been determined; she could be another wife, a daughter heretofore undiscovered, or another family relative. Also of note on this registration card is that his Joseph's residential address has been crossed out, and on the side of the card is written Genova Ave., E. Vineland, New Jersey, date 25 February 1943. [712] There is no indication as to whether Margaret Spamer was also at that new address.

The Maryland State Archives includes an indexed record for Joseph A. Spamer in the Service Records of the Maryland National Guard for 1888-1933.

[711] In the 1910 census, John G. Grote is listed as the uncle of George W. Henderson, when he was occupied as an overseer for a "country place".

[712] By coincidence, at this time my mother, Jeannette Spamer, resided with her mother and stepfather (Palmina and Leo Sylvester) in Vineland, Burlington Co., New Jersey, while my father was in the army overseas. My paternal grandfather, John Ward Spamer, may also have lived there at the time, with his wife, Lora. My mother had just a month earlier given birth to (and lost) her first-born, John Edward Spamer; John Ward Spamer was the informant on the baby's death certificate, giving his address as in South Vineland, where lived the Sylvesters. There is no indication that any of my immediate relatives knew of Joseph A. Spamer. There is no particular reason discernable why Joseph would have removed to Vineland; it is yet another enigma of his life. (The designations, South and East Vineland, are informal and do not demarcate political boundaries.)

As noted earlier, Joseph A. Spamer of our family is known to have been a ship's master (captain). [713] In this regard, the following records have thus far been located:

Also see Additions & Corrections

1) The ship's crew manifest for the S.S. Rijswijk [714], arriving in New York on 23 June 1919 from Jucaro, Cuba, and Palo Alto[715], lists "Jos. A. Spamer" as captain, aged 37, engaged 18 January 1919 in Baltimore; noted as a white male, 5 ft. 6 in. in height, 145 pounds.

2) The ship's crew manifest for the S.S. Shannock [716], arriving in New York on 3 January 1921 from Santos and Rio de Janeiro, lists "J.A. Spamer" as master, aged 46, engaged 1 August 1920 in Norfolk [Virginia]; noted as a white male of "American" race and nationality.

Despite an expected age of about 39 or 40 for the Joseph Spamer of family in 1921, and that the J. A. Spamer, master of the S.S. Shannock, was listed as 46 years of age, take note of the fact that the Shannock was a ship built for the U.S. Shipping Board, the same agency as for which worked the Joseph Alan Spamer who registered for the military draft in Philadelphia in 1918 (see above).

Conclusion about Joseph A. Spamer Also see Additions & Corrections

Joseph Allen (or Alan) Spamer seems to have been born as a son of William Spamer and either a woman not now known or a woman named "Virginia E. Spamer" against whom divorce proceedings were filed by William in 1887.

Joseph's mother was unlikely to have been William's second wife, Virginia Ellen Spamer, who died in 1881 as confirmed by the records of the Baltimore Cemetery Co. It is possible that Joseph was born to her between the time of the 1880 census and May 1881, but this would contradict the information given for Joseph in the 1900 census (October 1882) and by Joseph himself on his military draft registrations in 1918 and 1942 (12 October 1882).

It is also possible that Joseph was born to William's apparent third wife, but that Joseph was not William's natural son, which if so could have been a contributing factor to the divorce proceedings initiated by William in 1887. One would assume that in such an event he would not have his father's [716] The S.S. Shannock was a cargo ship built for the U.S. Shipping Board by the American International Shipbuilding Corporation at Hog Island, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. She was launched 8 Aug 1918. Her specifications as built were 5,800 long-ton displacement, 401 ft long, beam 54 ft 2 in, speed 11.5 kts, ship's complement 56 crew. On 16 Nov 1921, she was acquired by the U.S. Navy and renamed U.S.S. Spica (AK-16), but was laid up in the Reserve Fleet in New York, Charleston, and (from Jan 1927) Philadelphia, until commissioned 1 Mar 1940. After wartime service mostly in the Pacific, she was decommissioned on 18 Jan 1946 in Seattle, Washington, and struck form the Navy List on 7 Feb 1946. She was delivered to the Maritime Commission and laid up until 13 Jun 1947 when she was sold as scrap to J. T. Robinson, Ltd., a Canadian firm. (>>"AK-16 Spica", NavSource Online website, http://www.navsource.org/ archives/09/130016.htm; accessed 31 May 2006. Joseph A. Spamer (1882–1958) [No. 172] was a hired master of cargo vessels, among which thus far only two of them are known by name. The S.S. Rijswijk (above) arrived in New York on 23 June 1919 with Joseph as its master. He was master of the S.S. Shannock when he sailed to New York, arriving on 3 January 1921. Later that year the Shannock was acquired by the U.S. Navy, renamed U.S.S. Spica (AK-16), and placed in the reserve fleet until she was commisisoned at the beginning of World War II. The photo below shows the Spica in 1941.

surname, but he could have been taken in by the family; or possibly the nature of his parentage was learned later.

If my suggestion of a possible illegitimate birth for Joseph by either parent is wrong, I am profoundly sorry to have implied it. The inferential evidence is strong enough to raise the possibility. I present the evidence thus far found with the hope that future workers may be able to finally resolve the issue.

Most telling, perhaps, is the ambiguous, seemingly evasive or confused information about Joseph Spamer given by members of the family, particularly with regard to his birth date. Adding more ambiguity to his relationship in the family, Joseph did not live with his father. From an early age he led a geographically unanchored life. Later, his marriages seem to have had varied levels of stability. By sometime in the 1930s he seems to have gone out of the picture in this family. His great-grandson, Charles V. "Chuck" Pierpont, notes that Joseph "was never mentioned to me and my father never knew him."[717] By the beginning of World War II, Joseph Spamer seems to be no longer in the maritime business; and the Margaret Spamer who at that time would have been a knowledgable informant of his whereabouts, as stated on his military draft registration, is otherwise unknown to the family at this time.

How long Joseph Spamer had spent as a ship's master is uncertain. From information collated here, it seems that by 1930 he was not working at sea, but with a steamboat company, suggesting shallow-water boats but which could have included coastal steamers. By 1942, he seems to have at least temporarily left the maritime business, being employed at that time by Goodwill Industries. That he died in the care of Sailors' Snug Harbor, a mariners' retirement facility, is an indication that he did serve some significant amount of time at sea, and that when he was admitted to the institution he was in financial need. Today, eligible mariners must meet the following criteria to enter the home: "3650 days of deep sea time proven through discharge papers (50% on U.S. flagged ships), 65 years of age or older (exceptions may be made), a proven need for financial assistance".[718]

There are so many questions to be asked of the life of Joseph Spamer, but, regretfully, answers are not forthcoming at this time. What should be sound matters of parentage, residence, and family are mightily confused for Joseph A. Spamer; his whole life's story seems to be interleaved with ambiguities. That the family's own information about his date and circumstances of birth are imprecise or absent, that he lived separately from his father, that he had marriages and one child (but after his death a court declined to recognize descendants), and that he lived his last days, perhaps alone, in a seamen's home in New York, all are circumstances that raise questions. His will be a long tale, if ever it comes to be fully known.

Lena Spamer (1886–1968)
(wife of Joseph A. Spamer)

C. V. Pierpont, great-grandson of Joseph and Lena Spamer, reports that Lena later had a common law husband, Herman Silbersack[719], who was "the man my father knew well."[720] This may be further indication that Joseph Spamer had left his family.

181. Hubert Andrew[6] Spamer (Adolph[5], Christian[4], Johann Conrad[3], Johann Conrad[2], Johannes[1]) was born 01 October 1888 in New London, Connecticut, and died 12 September 1964 in Baltimore, Maryland. He married Mary Katharine Arndt 1912, daughter of Henry Arndt and Jennie. She was born 23 November 1888 in Pennsylvania, and died 09 April 1944.

Children of Hubert Spamer and Mary Arndt are:

259 i. Frances Delena[7] Spamer, born 19 May 1913 in Maryland; died 22 March 2002.

260 ii. Adolph Milton Spamer, born 25 May 1914 in Maryland; died December 1986 in Colorado. He married Virginia Foster 10 October 1959; born 14 November 1918; died June 1996 in Colorado.

NOTES

181. Hubert Andrew Spamer (1888–1964)

In the 1905, 1912, and 1913 Baltimore city directories, 1917 military draft registration, and 1930 U.S. census, Hubert Andrew Spamer's occupation is listed as silversmith. The 1917 draft registration indicates that he was employed by the Gilbert Cumming Co., 505 Water St., Baltimore, Maryland.

Residences of Hubert A. Spamer (from U.S. censuses, Baltimore city directories, and other sources):

1905, 1912, 1913 city directories: 2607 E. Preston St.[724]

1917 draft registration, 1920 and 1930 censuses, and 1942 draft registration: 1606 Port St., Baltimore, Maryland

1964: 1261 Meridene Dr., Baltimore, Maryland

Hubert Andrew Spamer was buried 15 September 1964 in Lot 166, Area W, Baltimore Cemetery, Baltimore, Maryland; a lot that he had purchased, first to receive the remains of his mother-in-law, Jennie Arndt (interred 16 October 1918).

Mary (Arndt) Spamer (1888–1944)
(wife of Hubert Andrew Spamer)

Mary Arndt seems to have been an only child.

Mary Arndt Spamer was buried 12 April 1944 in Lot 166, Area W, Baltimore Cemetery, Baltimore, Maryland. The Maryland State Archives Death Record, 1943-1949, lists her date of death as 19 April 1944. (Also buried in this lot are Mary's parents, Henry Arndt and Jennie D. Arndt.)

> Regarding the parents of Mary Arndt Spamer, only this information has thus far been determined:
> The parents of both Henry and Jennie Arndt were born in Pennsylvania.
> At the time of the 1900 U.S. census, Henry Arndt (and family) resided at 158 N. Newberry St., York, York Co., Pennsylvania; he was an iron molder. At the time of the 1910 census, Henry Arndt (and family) resided at 1603 Maryland Ave., Baltimore, Maryland; he was employed as a moulder in an iron foundry. Also living in the household at the time of the 1910 census was a nephew, Pierce [?] S. Splangler, aged 25, born in Pennsylvania, occupied as a machinist in a machine shop.

[724] In the 1912 directory he is listed as Hubert T. Spamer.

259. Frances Delena Spamer (1913–2002)

Frances Delena Spamer never married. She "spent her early working years as a clerk in the office of a jewelry company and later worked until her retirement from the Tax Services Department of the Safe Deposit and Trust Co." of Baltimore, where the department "help[ed] prepare individual tax returns for some of the beneficiaries of the bank's trust accounts".[725]

Residences of Frances D. Spamer:
1975: 6 Dowling Circle, Apt. T-2, Baltimore, Maryland
1977: 1833 Loch Shiel Rd., Baltimore, Maryland
At death: Baltimore, Maryland

An unclaimed-property database examined in 2008 records two addresses (without any further particulars) for a Frances D. Spamer:[726]
1264 Limit Ave., Baltimore, Maryland
1121 Echo Court South, Towson, Maryland

Frances Spamer had some income from a rental property. She mentions in passing in a letter to Katharine S. Spamer in 1977 that since the beginning of the year she had "been more than busy with house buying, renovating, redecorating, moving and whatever"; she had "bought a two apartment house on shares" and was in the process of renovating much of it by herself.[727]

She was the principal genealogist of the Spamer family until she gave up the work; in July 1983 she sent her records to her brother, Andy.[728] He collated her work and by the following January he produced the "Spamer Families of Baltimore", which he considered still a work in progress.[729]

At the time of her death at least, and probably all during her life, she was affiliated with, if not active in, the Swedenborgian church in the Baltimore area. The "OurVirtualChurch" webpage of The Swedenborg Project, Lutherville, Maryland, notes, "With grateful thanks to the late Frances Spamer, whose estate made the OurVirtualChurch website possible."[730]

260. Adolph Milton Spamer (1914–1986)
"Andy"
and his wife Virginia (Foster) Spamer (1918–1996)

Adolph Milton Spamer preferred to be known as Andy Spamer; otherwise he used his initials, "A. M." He is the compiler of the "Spamer Families of Baltimore", in which he wrote of himself, without further elaboration:

> Andy spent 3 years as a welder, 3 years as a machinist. After graduating from Johns Hopkins Univ. with a degree in Mechanical Engineering in 1940, he spent 14 years in tool and machine design. In 1946-47 he took advanced courses in physics and mathematics. From 1954 until his retirement he worked as a nuclear engineer specializing in radiation and shielding analysis primarily for Radioisotope Thermoelectric Generators.[731]

Both A. M. Spamer and Virginia (Foster) Spamer resided in Littleton, Arapahoe Co., Colorado. They had no children.

The disposition of any family records that may have been held by the Spamers is now unknown.

184. Anna Virginia[6] Spamer (Adolph[5], Christian[4], Johann Conrad[3], Johann Conrad[2], Johannes[1]) was born 15 January 1893 in Maryland, and died 08 February 1972. She married Ernest E. Harris 15 October 1915, son of Matthias Harris and Emma. He was born October 1894 in Maryland.

Child of Anna Spamer and Ernest Harris is:
\+ 261 i. Esther Virginia[7] Harris, born 12 May 1917; died 13 February 1999.

NOTES

184. Anna Virginia (Spamer) Harris (1893-1972)
"Virginia"

In the 1920 U.S. census, Anna V. Harris is listed by this name; in the 1930 census she is listed as Virginia A. Harris.

Ernest E. Harris (1894–)
(husband of Virginia Spamer)

Occupations of Ernest E. Harris (from U.S. censuses):
1920: no occupation
1930: "U.S. Printing Office"

Residences of Ernest E. Harris (from U.S. censuses):
1920: Dogwood Road, 5th Precinct, 1st District, Baltimore Co., Maryland (farm)

Harris Family
Collateral Genealogy
(15 descendants)

The genealogy of the Harris family, as it relates to our Spamer lineage and as currently understood, is as follows in this abbreviated sketch:

Generation No. 1

1. Miller[1] died before June 1880. He married Sarah A. She was born about 1815 in Maryland, and died after 01 June 1880.

Child of Miller and Sarah is:
\+ 2 i. Rebecca[2] Miller, born about 1838 in Maryland.

NOTES

At the time of the 1880 U.S. census, Sarah Miller (ca. 1815–) resided with her daughter and son-in-law, where she is noted to suffer from paralysis.

Generation No. 2

2. Rebecca[2] Miller (Miller[1]) was born about 1838 in Maryland. She married Matthias Harris. He was born about 1834 in Maryland.

Children of Rebecca Miller and Matthias Harris are:
3 i. James M.[3] Harris, born about 1857 in Maryland.
4 ii. Sarah E. Harris, born about 1858 in Maryland.
5 iii. Matthias Harris, born about 1861 in Maryland.
6 iv. John B. Harris, born about 1863 in Maryland.
7 v. Henry A. Harris, born about 1865 in Maryland.
\+ 8 vi. Matthias Harris, born March 1871 in Maryland.
9 vii. Charles D. Harris, born about 1874 in Maryland.
10 viii. Catherine A. Harris, born about 1876 in Maryland.
11 ix. Joseph P. Harris, born about 1878 in Maryland.

NOTES

Matthias Harris (senior) (ca. 1834–)
(husband of Rebecca Miller)

Matthias Harris and family can be traced with certainty in the 1870 and 1880 censuses. However, in 1870 there is an Alice, aged 10, between Sarah (12) and Henry (5); in 1880 there is a Matthias (19) between Sarah (22) and Henry (15).

In the 1880 census, Matthias (junior) (aged 19) is listed as “Daughter”, which is crossed out and “Son” hastily written; and there is a “Matthew”, aged 9. Matthew is in the children's list position that is expected for the “Matthias Harris” who is counted in later censuses (1900–1930) with the birth date of about 1871 (March 1871 in the 1900 census).

Occupations of Matthias Harris (senior) (from U.S. censuses):
1870: Blacking manufacturer
1880: Painter

Residences of Matthias Harris (senior) (from U.S. censuses):
1870: 1st Ward, Baltimore city, Maryland
1880: South Mount St., Baltimore, Maryland

3. James M. Harris (ca. 1857–)

At the time of the 1880 U.S. census, James M. Harris is listed with an occupation of manufacturer of shoe blacking. He resided with his parents.

7. Henry A. Harris (ca. 1865–)

At the time of the 1880 census, Henry A. Harris is listed with the occupation, “Works in pottery”.

Generation No. 3

8. Matthias[3] Harris (Rebecca[2] Miller, Miller[1]) was born March 1871 in Maryland. He married Emma C. about 1893. She was born June 1871 in Maryland.

Children of Matthias Harris and Emma are:

+	12	i.	Ernest E.[4] Harris, born October 1894 in Maryland.
	13	ii.	Gladys M. Harris, born September 1896 in Maryland. She married John A. Ruppel.
	14	iii.	Earl S. Harris, born October 1898 in Maryland. He married Florence; born about 1905 in Maryland.
	15	iv.	Esther E. Harris, born about 1901 in Maryland.

NOTES

8. Matthias Harris (1871–)

He may possibly be registered in the 1880 U.S. census as “Matthew”; see additional comments with his father. In the 1900 census he is registered as “Matthias” (but indexed as “Matthew”). In the 1910 census he is registered as “Mathas J.” or “Mathas Jr.” In the 1930 census he is listed as “Mythes”.

At the time of the 1900 census, a brother- and sister-in-law, and a niece, all with the surname Reedman, are living in the household. At the time of the 1930 census, his son and daughter-in-law, Earl and Florence Harris, are living with him.

Occupations of Matthias Harris (from U.S. censuses):
1900: Printer
1910: Owns printing establishment
1930: Printer, “Government Printing Office”

Residences of Matthias Harris (from U.S. censuses):
1900: 712 Potter Ave., Baltimore, Maryland
1910: 351 Elm Ave., Baltimore, Maryland
1930: 4303 Eldwan(?) Ave., Baltimore, Maryland

John A. Ruppel
(husband of Gladys M. Harris [No. 13])

At the time of the 1920 U.S. census, he was occupied as a Government clerk; he resided at 150 Dolphin St., Baltimore, Maryland.

14. Earl S. Harris (1898–)

At the time of the 1920 U.S. census, Earl Harris resided with his sister and brother-in-law, Gladys and John Ruppel. At the time of the 1930 census, Earl Harris and his wife, Florence, are living with his parents.

Occupations of Earl S. Harris (from U.S. censuses):
1920: Stenographer, cork and seal company
1930: Printer, paper company

Residences of Earl S. Harris (from U.S. censuses):
1920: 150 Dolphin St., Baltimore, Maryland
1930: 4303 Eldwan(?) Ave., Baltimore, Maryland

Generation No. 4

12. Ernest E.[4] Harris (Matthias[3], Rebecca[2] Miller, Miller[1]) was born October 1894 in Maryland. He married (1) undetermined wife 1. He married (2) Anna Virginia Spamer 15 October 1915, daughter of Adolph Spamer and Frances Thomas. She was born 15 January 1893 in Maryland, and died 08 February 1972.

See main Spamer genealogy for information regarding Ernest and Anna (Spamer) Harris and their descendants.

185. David Adolph[6] Spamer (Adolph[5], Christian[4], Johann Conrad[3], Johann Conrad[2], Johannes[1]) was born 14 May 1897 in Maryland, and died 26 August 1957. He married (1) Lillian Ruth Smelz 25 March 1922. She was born about 1902 in Maryland. He married (2) Marjorie McGraw 14 October 1939 in Everett, Pennsylvania. She was born September 1913.

Children of David Spamer and Lillian Smelz are:
\+ 262 i. Elisabeth Ruth[7] Spamer, born 04 March 1923 in Maryland.
\+ 263 ii. Mildred Louise Spamer, born 07 December 1927 in Maryland.
264 iii. David Admiral Spamer, born 08 May 1937 in Stewartstown, Pennsylvania; died 05 May 1958.
265[732]

Also see Additions & Corrections

Children of David Spamer and Marjorie McGraw are:
\+ 266 i. Mary Virginia[7] Spamer, born 23 September 1940 in Everett, Pennsylvania.
267 ii. George Thomas Spamer, born 07 February 1951 in Everett, Pennsylvania. He married Joann Robuck 16 June 1974.

[732] No. 265 was an eroneous entry and has been removed from the genealogy.

NOTES

185. David Adolph Spamer (1897–1957)

Occupations of David Adolph Spamer (from U.S. census and draft registration):
1917 draft registration: Employed by Bethlehem Ship Building Corp., Sparrows Point, Baltimore, Maryland
1930 census: Machinist

Residences of David Adolph Spamer (from U.S. census and draft registration):
1917 draft registration: 2815 Overland Ave., Baltimore city, Maryland
1930 census: Kingston Road, Baltimore Co., Maryland

Also see Additions & Corrections

Lillian (Smelz) Spamer (ca. 1902–)
(wife of David Adolph Spamer)

Also see Additions & Corrections

The only information known about Lillian Smelz's family is from the 1910 U.S. census for Baltimore, Maryland. Lillian Smelz, aged 8, is listed as a grandchild in the household of George H. and Emma Frazier (aged 72 and 61, respectively), residing at 133 N. [or W.] Grove St.; they had been married 41 years (or about 1869). George was a house carpenter. Other household members at that time were Joseph Frazier (brother, aged 64, sailor), and another grandchild, Emma (surname may be Over), aged 16. No indication is had of the whereabouts of the parents of the two grandchildren.

Marjorie (McGraw) Spamer (1913–)
(wife of David Adolph Spamer)

Marjorie McGraw's family is not known at this time. The only information that seems to relate to her may be a record in the 1920 U.S. census for West Providence, Bedford Co., Pennsylvania. A Marjorie McGraw is listed with her parents and siblings on a farm with no road name given. The household members at that time were:

George McGraw, aged 32, born in Pennsylvania; mail carrier, rural route
Blanche McGraw, wife, 25, born in Pennsylvania
Marjorie McGraw, daughter, 6, born in Pennsylvania
Lillian(?) McGraw, daughter, 5, born in Pennsylvania
Rand(?) McGraw, son, 2, born in Pennsylvania

At the time of the 1930 U.S. census, the only record of a Marjorie McGraw of the appropriate age, born in Pennsylvania, is found in the census taken at the St. Mary's Home and School on Washington Ave. in Dunkirk, Chautauqua Co., New York. The Marjorie McGraw listed with the students there is aged 14, born in Pennsylvania as were her parents.

189. Cecelia E.[6] Spamer (James Conrad[5], Peter Heinrich Christian[4], Johann Conrad[3], Johann Conrad[2], Johannes[1]) was born 1880 in Maryland, and died 27 July 1927 in Carroll Co., Maryland. She married George Edward Bopst 23 April 1902, son of Milton Bopst and Rose Conly. He was born 17 July 1875 in Maryland, and died after April 1930. Also see Additions & Corrections

Children of Cecelia Spamer and George Bopst are:

\+ 271 i. Milton Spamer[7] Bopst, born 07 January 1903 in Maryland; died September 1975 in Maryland.
272 ii. Charles Edwin Bopst, born 11 March 1905 in Maryland; died 04 April 1905.
\+ 273 iii. George Edwin Bopst, born 01 March 1906 in Maryland; died April 1986 in Lanham, Prince George's Co., Maryland.
274 iv. Cecelia Elisabeth Rose Bopst, born 03 June 1909 in Maryland.
275 v. Lillie May Bopst, born 27 February 1911 in Maryland.
276 vi. Dorothy Hazel Bopst, born 08 August 1913 in Maryland. She married Duvall.
277 vii. Harry Otis Bopst, born 12 April 1918 in Maryland; died 14 September 1990.

NOTES

189. Cecelia (Spamer) Bopst (1880–1927)

Regarding the spelling of Cecelia E. Spamer's name, "Cecelia" is taken from two sources: "Spamer Families of Baltimore" [734] and an annotation on a photograph of Cecelia written by her cousin, Katharine S. Spamer. Furthermore, she may have been named after her half-aunt, Cecelia Spamer [No. 110, see under No. 41]. However, in U.S. censuses and on George Bopst's 1918 military draft registration card her name is spelled "Cecilia".

She may have suffered from tuberculosis. Also see Additions & Corrections

NOTES

194. Edward Lawrence Spamer (1909–1955)

Edward Lawrence Spamer graduated from high school in York, Pennsylvania, where his family lived for a short while.

Occupations of Edward Lawrence Spamer (from U.S. census, Philadelphia city directories, and family information):

1930 census: Shipper for janitorial supply company

1935/36 city directory: Librarian [actually he was a librarian's assistant, Free Library of Philadelphia]

Later: Inspector, Abbott's Dairy [31st and Chestnut Sts.?[736]], Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Edward Seville Smith recounted that after World War II Edward L. Spamer was "employed by the American Stores in accounting".[737]

[736] The vacant Abbott's building stood on the north side of Chestnut, west of 32nd St. It was razed probably during the late 1990s. I recall my mother saying that my father would bring home silverware that had been left in milk bottles, a couple of nice pieces of which we still have.

[737] Edward Seville Smith, "Smith Genealogy and Some Reminiscences" (typescript, 1963), pp. 55-56. The American Stores was a chain of grocery stores founded as a cooperative venture by several chains in Philadelphia, before 1918. The consortium had its beginning in 1891 in a small neighborhood grocery store in South Philadelphia operated by Samuel Robinson and Robert Crawford. Eventually, the American Stores were converted to the Acme brand. Although numerous acquisitions and mergers occurred during the latter part of the twentieth century, the Acme brand persisted and Acme stores still operate today as separate divisions of parent corporations. Residences of Edward Lawrence Spamer (from U.S. census, Philadelphia city directories, and family information):

1920, 1930 censuses, and 1935/36 city directory: 820 South St. Bernard St., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania (the home of his grandfather, Rev. John Edward Smith)
ca. 1946-1951: 4202 Walnut St., 3rd floor, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania (his family with his parents)
ca. 1951-1952: Spruce St. between 45th and 46th Sts. (3rd floor), Philadelphia, Pennsylvania
ca. 1952-1955: 4202 Walnut St., 3rd floor, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania (his family with his father)

After his death in 1955, Jeannette Spamer and her children remained at 4202 Walnut St. until 1958, when they moved to nearby 4500 Springfield Ave.

Edward Lawrence Spamer is buried in lot 715, River Section, West Laurel Hill Cemetery, Bala Cynwyd, Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania.

Jeannette Spamer kept a typewritten transcript of a prayer that Edward Spamer had carried in his wallet, found in her effects:[738]

> My prayer of resignation said daily by the Saint, is as follows:
> O my God, I know not what will happen to me this day; I am wholly ignorant of it. The thing I know as certain—nothing will happen to me that has not been foreseen, willed and preordained by Thee from all eternity. This is all I desire to know. I adore Thy inscrutable and eternal decrees; for Thy love I most heartily submit myself to them. I make Thy will my own and accept everything from Thee. I unite this sacrifice of mine to the sacrifice of my Divine Savior, Jesus Christ; and in His name and through His infinite maritry [sic[739]], I beg of Thee patience in my suffering and a perfect submission to whatever will happen to me by Thy good pleasure.
> Amen.

> "The 103rd Engineer Battalion, 'The Dandy First', is the only Pennsylvania unit authorized to carry the lineage of a Continental Army unit.[*]
> "When Benjamin Franklin issued his appeal for citizens of Philadelphia to 'associate' for the common defense in 1747, he looked to the skilled carpenters and craftsmen in the city's booming shipyards who were familiar with naval guns to form a battery of artillery. The resulting units, the Artillery Companies of the Associated Regiment of Foot of Philadelphia, the progenitors of today's 103rd Engineer Battalion, are among the oldest and most decorated military organizations in the Commonwealth. Armed with cannon, some purchased with the proceeds of a city-wide lottery and others 'borrowed' from New York, the artillerists mounted the first major defenses of the Delaware River.

Spamer, his Pennsylvania Guard unit had been stationed at the armory in Vineland, New Jersey on the west side of Delsea Drive (State Rt. 47) in Vineland, New Jersey. [741] This was a short distance north from where she lived with her mother and stepfather (at the intersection of Delsea Drive [New Jersey Rt. 47] and Sherman Road [Cumberland County Rt. 552]). His unit was an Army Engineer unit being trained in airfield construction; they were assigned to building runways for the Millville Army Air Station, in nearby Millville, New Jersey, "The Nation's First Defense Airport" [742]. It is not exactly clear when the

"The cannoneers saw their first combat action during the French and Indian War, when elements of the artillery were mustered into Crown service and dispatched to Pittsburgh and Erie. A generation later, at the onset of the American Revolution in 1776, the men were reorganized as the Philadelphia Artillery Battalion." [Later, units of the battalion were called up for service during the War of 1812, the Civil War, the Spanish-American War, the Mexican expedition to pursue Pancho Villa, World War I. Shortly after that war, the Philadelphia contingent was redesignated as the 103rd Engineer Regiment; their armory, still in use, is at 3205 Lancaster Ave., Philadelphia.]

"On the eve of World War II, the regiment was broken up into the 103rd Engineer Battalion (Combat) and the 180th Engineer Heavy Pontoon Bridge Battalion. The 103rd, serving as part of the 28th Division, participated in the Normandy campaign and in Northern France, Rhineland, Ardennes-Alsace and Central Europe. Their contributions were particularly noteworthy during the Battle of the Bulge, when they helped stop the German advance into Belgium."

[*]The battle streamers of the 103rd Engineer Battalion begin with the Battle of Trenton, Revolutionary War, and concludes with the Central Europe streamer, World War II.

The armory at 32nd St. and Lancaster Ave. is on the National Register of Historic Places (14 Nov 1991). It was constructed in 1916, designed by Philadelphia architect Philip H. Johnson, who designed at least five other armories in southeastern Pennsylvania between 1909 and 1916. "Having an irregular rectangular plan, resembling a trapezoid, the armory contains a gymnasium and a museum in addition to such typical rooms as a drill hall, kitchen, locker rooms, storage rooms, and offices. It represents the common function of armories to serve the Pennsylvania National Guard for storage, meeting and training as well as serving community uses." Fort Indiantown Gap was established for the Pennsylvania National Guard in the 1930s. Originally on 12,000 acres, it provided the space required for annual maneuvers and training. More than 100 buildings nearby Mount Gretna–including officers' mess halls, administration buildings, latrines and bathhouses–were dismantled and hauled by truck to the site. In its later history, during 1962-1963, Indiantown Gap was the host installation for the largest Reserve Officers Training Corps advanced summer camp nationwide. In 1975, Southeast Asian refugees were encamped at Fort Indiantown Gap, awaiting resettlement in the U.S. A section of the fort property was set aside in 1976 for a Veterans Administration national cemetery. In 1995, U.S. Army reductions initiated the transfer of Fort Indiantown Gap back to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. Fort Indiantown Gap remains the headquarters for the Pennsylvania Department of Military Affairs and the Pennsylvania Army and Air National Guide. The airport is presently a joint-use military/general aviation airport. [742] The Millville Army Air Station had its beginnings in 1939, when the Millville Flying Club was organized. Fears of military aggression by the Axis powers of the world, on the beginning of World War II, initiated a U.S. military order for 900 "defense airports" across the country, so designated and prepared so that military airfields could be established at these sites on short notice. The Millville airfield was the first of these sites. Its runways were constructed in 1941 by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, which utilized the 103rd Engineers from the Pennsylvania National Guard, in which Edward L. Spamer was posted. The Millville airfield was dedicated as "The Nation's First Defense Airport" on 2 Aug 1941, with a ceremony attracting 10,000 people and with displays of military aircraft and exhibition flights. After the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor on 7 Dec 1941, U.S. Army Air Force crews were sent Pennsylvania National Guard unit was assigned and withdrawn from the area, but the Millville AAS was dedicated on 2 August 1941.

After the entry of the United States into World War II, Edward Spamer's National Guard unit was incorporated into the Regular Army. At that time he was a Staff Sergeant in the Corps of Engineers[743] (Service No. 20 318 300). In May 1942 he entered Officers Training School in Fort Belvoir[744], Virginia, where he graduated 5 August 1942 with the rank of 2nd Lieutenant. He received an honorable discharge on 4 August in order to accept the commission, after which he was assigned new Service No. 01 102 477.[745] Later, in Europe when Edward Spamer was a platoon commander attached to "C" Company, 816th Engineer Aviation Battalion, he was promoted to 1st Lieutenant in the field—to occupy a position vacated by another officer's promotion[746]—and it was at this rank that he was discharged at the end of the war. Just when he received his promotion is not clear; he was still a 2nd Lieutenant when he wrote a letter to his sister, Katharine Spamer, on Thanksiving Day 1944, when his unit was bivouacked for the winter in St. Trond, Belgium.[747] He would be in Europe for another ten months.

After Edward Spamer received his officer's commission at the Officer's Candidate School in Ft. Belvoir, Virginia, in 1942, he was sent to Spokane Army Air Depot[748], Spokane, Washington. While in Spokane,

By September 1942, the first military structures were erected at Millville, which then grew into a P-47 training base, for which historically it is best known. After the war, the City of Millville gradually acquired the Millville air base, which eventually became the Millville Municipal Airport. It is the site also of the Millville Army Air Field Museum. [744] Fort Belvoir is positioned on the Belvoir peninsula along the Potomac River. The historic, colonial manor that had dominated the area since the 18th century had been largely destroyed by fire in 1783 when it was further damaged by cannon fire by the British Navy enroute to Fort McHenry, in Baltimore, after having sacked and burned the national capital in 1814. Thereafter the property passed through several hands until the District of Columbia purchased the site for a prison in 1910. Local objections led to the transfer of the property to the War Department in 1912, and Camp Belvoir was established in 1915 by engineer troops from the Washington Barracks (now Fort McNair). It was re-established as Fort Humphreys in 1922, and renamed Fort Belvoir in 1935, where until 1989 was the headquarters of the U.S. Army Engineer School. Thereafter it has been a part of the Military District of Washington, providing essential administrative, logistical, and contingency support to the nation's capital. [748] The Spokane Army Air Depot was established in 1942; the first building foundations were poured on 2 March. The property of 1,400 acres was given by public-minded citizens who had purchased the land to give to the War Department; title was transferred in Jan 1942, to which the government added more land through more land purchases. We may assume that the Army Engineers constructed the runways, and it was in this capacity that E. L. Spamer was at this post. Between 1943 and 1946, the base served as a repair depot for damaged aircraft returning from the Pacific Theater of operations. In 1950, the base was renamed Fairchild Air Force Base, having been

Its runways were constructed in 1941 by U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, 103rd Engineer Battalion, a Pennsylvania National Guard unit that was training in airfield construction and maintenance. Edward L. Spamer was at that time a Staff Sergeant in the 103rd. He later went to Officers Candidate School and went overseas as a 2nd Lieutenant (and promoted to 1st Lieutenant near the end of the war while in Europe). his wife, Jeannette, traveled from the East to be with him for a short while, in October, when she was pregnant with their first child.

Sometime either before or after his assignment at Spokane, Edward Spamer was sent to Hamilton Army Air Field[749], Novato, California, where he was in the seventh class of the Camouflage School at that station.[750]

On 5 January 1943, E. L. Spamer's unit was sent to England, where they joined the 816th Engineer Aviation Battalion.[751] The battalion had arrived in England in August 1942, under the IX Engineer Command,[752] and transferred by rail to Gosfield, Essex, to build an airdrome for heavy bombers—three concrete runways (one more than a mile long) and "innumerable huts and brick buildings".[753] It was during this time that Edward Spamer joined the unit. In March 1943 the unit temporarily moved five miles to Great Saling to assist in completing Andrew's Field where "the unit was determined to show the 819th Engineer Aviation Battalion 'how an airfield ought to be built.'"[754] They returned to Gosfield in [749] Hamilton Army Air Field is situated at San Pablo Bay in Novato, California; as Hamilton Air Force Base, it closed in 1976 and the airbase-proper was transferred back to the U.S. Army as Hamilton Army Airfield; housing there was transferred to the U.S. Navy. The Army and Navy facilities closed in the mid-1990s, and the property reverted mostly to the city of Novato. The air field was originally constructed as headquarters for the 1st Wing of the U.S. Army Air Corps. During World War II, the base served for training and as an overseas staging area, one of three major western U.S. bases in the Air Transport Command, Pacific Division, and the Operational Training Unit Program. Originally built during the 1930s, its distinct Spanish Eclectic architectural style encouraged the later designation of the Hamilton Army Air Field Discontiguous Historic District, under the auspices of the National Park Service, comprising mostly the southwestern part of the former airfield. Today the deactivated base is a residential community. [751] Col. Thomas A. Glass (1912-2004), regimental commander of the 816th Engineer Aviation Battalion from the time of its activation in 1942, described his experiences in The Trials and Triumphs of a Regimental Commander During World War II (Trafford Publishing, Victoria, British Columbia, 2005).

The 816th's unit history indicates that they had embarked from New York on 5 August 1942 aboard the U.S.S. West Point, landing in Liverpool on 17 August (816th Engineer Aviation Battalion Passes in Review, F. Bruckman KG., Munich, [1945]).

[752] The 816th had already been at work in England, where they built airfields at Stansted and Boreham, while performing conventional construction at Gosfield, Ashford, and Wycombe. The Gosfield Airfield, in Essex, was a Class "A" airfield", Station 154, originally intended for the U.S. 8th Bomber Command; but when it was completed about December 1943 it was placed under the 9th U.S. Air Force, where was based the 365th Fighter Group and where in January 1944 the first P-47D Thunderbolts arrived. The day after the airfield was opened for operations in December, it sustained heavy German bombardment. May and were relieved in October by the 833rd Engineer Aviation Battalion. The 816th moved to Stanstead, Essex, three miles northwest of Bishop Stortford, where they worked with the 825th and 850th battalions on an Advanced Repair Depot for the Ninth Air Force. This they completed by mid-November 1943, when "bag and baggage" moved to Boreham, Essex, to join the 861st battalion in building a heavy-bomber airdrome. [755]

On 1 March 1944 the 816th moved to Great Barrington, Gloucestershire, "to begin an extensive training program", changing "from its habit of permanent airdrom construction to that of hastily built airstrips." [756] It was here that they experimented with a runway matting that would prove useful during the European campaign on the continent. The experimental surfacing was composed of

> . . . tar paper officially known as Prefabricated Hessian Surfacing or P.H.S., . . . laid by specially devised machines directly on top of the ground and the joints were sealed with tar to keep out water. The experiment worked well and "C" Company was highly commended for its excellent job.

Of course, the operations in England after the 816th landed there were in preparation for the Allied invasion of the continent, which finally came on 6 June 1944. The European efforts brought into play an efficient organization of men, machines, and procedures. The 816th's unit history briefly described its functions (ellipses are part of the quotation): [757]

> For the benefit of the "uninducted" it might not be amis to point out that an ENGINEER AVIATION BATTALION is a mobile town—complete in every respect; independent and sufficient unto itself. It has transportation; tools (from pencils to shoemaker's needles to 20 ton bull-dozers and cranes large enough to move a house); its own water purification plant; its own shops; its own electric power plants; and sufficient weapons to enable it to take on a major combat assignment, if necessary. All this in addition to the prime tools for building airfields—bull-dozers, road builiding machines, a ditching machine that will dig a ditch a mile long and six feet deep in one hundred minutes, rollers, asphalt kettles, concrete mixers, air compresors and pumps. The town is complete with radio and telephone equipment, hospital, movie, chaplain, bank, post exchange, beer halls, dance band, tailor, barbers, shoemaker—can you think of anything else? We have it . . . Dogs, cats, chickens, goats, geese, horses . . You don't believe all that? Look! . . . at Gosfield we even had a Victory Garden for each company!
> This beautifully conceived organization is assigned a mission (job) by higher headquarters. Let's assume we're ordered to build a fighter-bomber field in a certain sector. The S-3 (Engineering and Operations) Section reconnoiters the site and initiates surveying work. Each line company (A, B and C) is given a part of the task. Headquarters and Service Company provides all office and staff personnel. Construction equipment with skilled operators (and ours are the best in the army) is dispatched from H&S Company to the line companies to assist them.

While overseas, Edward L. Spamer sat for two studio portraits.

In London (above) he sat at London Studios Ltd., 259 Oxford Street.

In Brussels (left) he sat at "Studio Wagram 35, Rue de Malines (3d Ad. Max.)" on 1 November 1944. This was the birthday of his sister, Katharine, to whom he inscribed the photo, "Picture of a Saint taken on All Saints' Day. 1944 Love Archie".

Three days after D-Day, the 816th crossed the English Channel, landing on Omaha Beach in Normandy, France, on D + 3 (9 June): [758]

> On D plus 3, one boat load of equipment including a grader and a D-7 bull-dozer was forced to land in deep water but the remainder arrived in excellent condition. It was here that the two years of experience gained in England proved worth while. The men were at peak of efficiency. Trucks and construction equipment operated without a mistake and the first three airfields, Cardonville (A3), Deux Jumeaux (A4), and Colleville (A22c) were completed in rapid succession.

The "C" Company history notes specifically: [759]

> The pause at Southampton in the marshalling area served only to impress the men that they were a very definite part of the invasion team. On D-plus-3 they landed, or more accurately, swam ashore on Omaha Beach, and then marched 14 miles to Cardonville.

As also summarized elsewhere in the unit's history: [760]

> After a journey from Southampton, a short stay in the marshalling area, and a voyage in LCI's and LCT's the Battalion landed at Omaha Beach on D-plus 3, 9 June 1944. It immediately proceeded to the small village of Cardonville and started its first airstrip on the continent, the most important single assignment it ever received while overseas.
> The mission was to construct with all possible haste, an advance landing ground to accommodate P-47 fighter bombers. The survey party under Sgt. Walter Zimmerman immediately laid out the runway, and tractors started clearing at once. Grading followed the next day and by 0600 hours 14 June, three days after landing in France, grading was completed, the runway 50% surfaced, and marshalling areas on either end of the runway finished. At this time the first squadron of P-47's landed to start operations against the enemy. This field when entirely completed on 20 June consisted of a 5000 feet heavy-wire surfaced runway [Sommerfeldt wire-mesh], two and one half miles of taxi track and 75 hardstands.

The engineer spearhead at Normandy on D-Day fell to the 819th and 834th Engineer Aviation Battalions, which formed crude emergency strips within hours of landing, sometimes in advance of the infantry.[761] By D + 3, when the 816th landed on Omaha Beach, the entire beach head was in the process of being converted.

One recollection of the Normandy spearhead mentions the 816th: [762]

> "What outfit is this?", an infantry lieutenant asked Lieutenant Colonel Don A. Parkhurst, commander of the 816th Engineer Aviation Battalion, when his group came marching up from the beach with full packs.
> "Engineers", was the answer.
> "What the hell are you doing up here in front of the infantry?"
> "We're going to build an airfield."
> "The hell you are", said the astonished lieutenant.
> But they did.

Operations at Cardonville were briefly described in the 816th's unit history:

> The first "office" on the Continent was set up in the home of M. Lecarpentier, a Normandy farmer near Cardonville. Those were hectic days—fighting going on just a short distance away, men sleeping in foxholes, air raids every night, and fighter-bombers taking off or landing from the airstrip about every six seconds from dawn until dusk—but administration went on as usual! One would have supposed that at this stage of the game, there would be very little paper work, but it was soon found out that higher command expected and demanded not only the same old reports that had always been made up, but also, a lot of additional reports.
> And so it went. Soon the section [S-1, Administration and Communications] was right back in the old routine again—except that it was probably more mobile than before. Rapid moving from site to site had trained everybody to pack and unpack in just a few minutes. [763]

* * * * *

> Obviously, the morale of the 816th has been consistently high. At A-3 Airstrip (Cardonville) on the Normandy Beach it soared to the very top. There, the men worked from the crack of dawn until too dark to see. Even the cooks and clerks lent a hand, night after night, until the first fighter bombers came in at 0600 hours on D plus 8 [14 June]. [764]

The air strip at Cardonville, known as A-3, was extended again by 24 July. The 368th and 370th Fighter Groups were based there[765] and it remained in service until 1 September 1944.[766] Shortly later, A-4, with a shorter runway, was completed nearby by Co. A. At that time,

> . . . the Unit moved to Colleville-Sur-Mer, overlooking Omaha Beach and constructed a terminal airstrip, A-22C, for transport aircraft. This was the first field on the continent to be surfaced with the tar paper experimented with in England. A good deal of trouble was encountered in the preparation of the runway subgrade as numerous spongy areas appeared throughout. Sgts. Milstead and Adams and Tec. 5 Bosely and Pfc. Stein acting upon the advice of Capt. Hansen carried through the idea of excavating the soft areas down to 10 and 12 feet; placing a layer of logs on the bottom, and back filling with suitable dry soil. The diseased spots were then brought to grade and proper compaction obtained. The Battalion received a degree of favorable publicity when an English war correspondent learning of this procedure, dubbed the airstrip the "floating runway". After polishing the job off, the Unit returned to Deux Jumeaux and carried out maintenance on A-3 and A-4. This afforded an opportunity for a much needed rest and an 8 hour working day schedule was initiated.[767]

Soon after the Allies broke onto the continent and began the race to Germany, engineer aviation regiments were dispersed among the armored columns. So quickly were plans changed and units advanced, that of more than 600 airfield sites reconnoitered during the first two weeks of August, just three strips were constructed. Many captured Luftwaffe strips were repaired, overhauled, and placed in operation in short order; this occurred with greater frequency as the Allied army moved eastward.

A complete list of airfields constructed by the IX Engineer Command includes more than 300 sites, averaging an airfield ever 36 hours during the Allied advance into Europe.[769] In France alone, the 816th Engineer Aviation Battalion constructed the following fields, with indication of what service each strip provided: [770]

A-3	Cardonville	Transport base	5000 ft
A-23C	Querqueville, Cherbourg	Transport base	4600
A-24C	Biniville, Cherbourg	Transport base	3600

In addition to these airfields, the unit rehabilitated concrete runways at Cormeilles (A-59) and Beaumont (A-60).

The 816th proceeded farther onto the continent, building airfields in Belgium, Holland (The Netherlands), and Germany, halting at Munich in August 1944. In Germany, eight Supply and Evacuation strips were built in three days. Their route, cites and towns passed through, and selected accomplishments are noted on a fold-out map in their unit history, as follows (compare with the list above, see notes at end of table for abbreviations; the date ranges represent initial construction date and initial operational date): [771]

[772] The 816th's unit history notes: "The day after arriving at LeMans, it was broadcast by the radio that the town had been retaken by the Germans. The news was greeted with jeers but no one left his rifle unattended for several days. How many of the men knew that there were no other American troops between them and the nearest German Army to the South?" (816th Engineer Aviation Battalion Passes in Review, F. Bruckman KG., Munich, [1945], p. 94). The unit history also notes of LeMans, regarding a low-spot in the unit's morale (ellipsis is part of the quotation): "The first [low spot] occurred at LeMans where the men were introduced to an overwhelming reception by liberated mademoiselles but were denied the privilege of passes to town . . . Third Army Regulations." (Lt. Col. Don A. Parkhurst, "Three Down and Home to Go" [preface], in 816th Engineer Aviation Battalion Passes in Review, F. Bruckman KG., Munich, [1945], p. 9).

[778] At about this time came a low point in the morale of the 816th. As noted by the unit's commanding officer, Lt. Col. Don A. Parkhurst: "The second [incident of low morale] was incurred by a warning, along about February 1945, that there was an excellent possibility of the unit being sent to the Pacific. The men rightfully felt that they were entitled to at least a brief respite in the United States, and they might be surprised to learn that 100% of the officers agreed in spite of an outward attitude of encouragement. Brigadier General JAMES G. NEWMAN, Commanding General of IX ENGINEER COMMAND recognized this and due to his efforts we (at this writing [1945]) have been promised the reward we have all longed for, for three years" [an early trip home] (Lt. (816th Engineer Aviation Battalion Passes in Review, F. Bruckman KG., Munich, [1945], p. 15). Also, "A false alarm developed when the Unit moved to Cologne 23 to 27 March. time in it's [sic] history the Battalion was without a job. Bill Coibion, Bing Fisher and the 'Rev' Dunnick used the time to good advantage by bringing the Section up to date on records, drawings and paper work. The respite was short. Gorund Forces started their rapid drive across the Rhine River into the heart of Germany and the Battalion was needed badly. Urgent orders were received on the [sic] 29 March to repair and mark out transport airstrips at seven captured German air fields with all possible haste. * * * Companies and detachments moved out immediately for predesignated points and by the 3rd of April, five days after the receipt of orders, all seven strips were in operation and receiving supplies and evacuating wounded." (Passes in Review, pp. 39-40).

[780] Regarding the following sites, the 816th's unit history notes, "With detachments at each site the Battalion was more completely split than at any other time in its history. Engineer initiative proved its mettle and the Unit was again commended, for it had accomplished a task many believed impossible." (816th Engineer Aviation Battalion Passes in Review, F. Bruckman KG., Munich, [1945], p. 40).

[781] The "C" Co. chapter in the 816th's unit history notes, "The Fritzlar job consisted of laying wire mesh on the sod. The Company worked hard all day and picked up souvenirs all night. Some felt that [a] score with S/Sgt. Vervena, the Supply Sgt., was somewhat settled when he was on the receiving end of a large round 'NO' as he tried to mail home half of the china from the Luftwaffe quarters." (816th Engineer Aviation Battalion Passes in Review, F. Bruckman KG., Munich, [1945], p. 40). Edward Spamer did return with a number of German souvenirs, but there is no indication when he obtained them. The souvenirs included a variety of German reconnaissance maps and survey books of England and Ireland, a German-made knife and fork, and a Fascist unit flag that may have been obtained through a "sales agent" or through barter.

[782] The parish of Nidda is one of the ancestral areas of the Spamer family.

[783] Also see comments with Mainz, below.

[784] Just south of Frankfurt is the region of Hesse-Darmstadt, the ancestral area of many of the Spamers of this family. Whether Edward Spamer was then aware of this particular geographical fact is not now known.

[785] Edward Spamer and "C" Company of the 816th was at Ober Olm when Germany surrendered.

[786] As indicated in the 816th Engineer Aviation Battalion Passes in Review, the IX Engineer Command website attributes original work to 832nd Engr. Av. Btn. The 816th may have done follow-up work.

[787] At Mainz, "a double mission awaited the Battalion. Here it was to build two medium bomber airfields with steel plank–one at Y-80 Weisbaden and the other at Y-64 Ober Olm. Work commenced 29 April and progressed without a let-up until V-E Day. Ober Olm, a field that was needed only for close air-ground support was cancelled on the evening of 9 May. The plank in place was removed and shipped out and the project abandoned entirely. Wiesbaden was a different story. It was scheduled for use by the Occupational Airforce, and the arrival of V-E Day caused only minor changes to be made. The job was already well under way by the 825th Engineer Aviation Battalion. The 816th was required to complete the fuel storage, construct 75 wire mesh hardstands and widen an existing concrete

‡ C Co. (to which E. L. Spamer was attached) undertook this construction, northeast of Dachau.

A summary story of the construction of a single airfield provides an idea of what was required to create and maintain the field during combat, while an army was on the move: [791]

> An advance party of reconnaissance men moves close to the front-line area and charts the site previously selected. The debris of battle lies about and the infantry has just moved out. Center line of the main runway is charted, proposed taxiways, marshalling areas, hardstands or dispersal areas, repair areas, fuel storage sites, and bivouac areas are surveyed and mapped. On the chart access roads are indicated, water points, gravel pits, and railheads are recorded, and the rough map is on its way to regimental and brigade headquarters.
> The battalion moves in and bulldozers, the backbone of the work organization, and other heavy equipment begin grading operations. At the same time, trees are felled, hedges and other vegetation are grubbed and cleared, fills are made, and high ground leveled. It is a bustle of activity.
> Often, the noise of battle and the churning creak of the bulldozers mingle in the air over the dusty activity of construction. The blasts from heavy artillery adds to the symphony. To the [789] The IX Engineer Command website attributes this work to the 834th and 862nd Engr. Av. Btns. The 816th's unit history notes, "At this writing the last Battalion move carried the Unit to R-75 Ober Schleissheim just North of Munich for the construction of a medium bomber Occupational Air field." (816th Engineer Aviation Battalion Passes in Review, F. Bruckman KG., Munich, [1945], p. 49).

[790] Here the 816th Engr. Av. Btn. apparently remained for the duration of the war. It was probably while here that the unit history was prepared and printed in Munich. The history notes, "As a side light while at Schleissheim, 'C' Company left the Battalion from 13 June to 22 July and started construction of a Base Air Depot at R-91 Erding. This lasted only until the 825th Engineer Aviation Battalion arrived and relieved the company." (816th Engineer Aviation Battalion Passes in Review, F. Bruckman KG., Munich, [1945], p. 49).

> liberated French peasants who come to watch, it is a welter of confusion. While machines grade the soil, men work behind laying down taxiways and dispersal areas; others set up fuel storage tanks and build access roads. Bit by bit, it fits together like a gigantic jig-saw puzzle. The high-spot comes, however, when the windsocks go up [and] the first flight of P47 Thunderbolts circle and land. Their work pays off that way.
> That is the picture of one construction project. The panorama is made up of twenty or more construction units working on as many projects in other sectors along the combat line. Often under fire and always under pressure, the battalions pressed every effort to get the bases operating as soon as possible.

The development of landing mats was quickly followed through during World War II. Design, testing, and procurement fell to many factories and facilities in the U.S. Wire mesh was a standard, quickly deployed, but not as durable as perforated, interlocking, steel planks manufactured by the millions. "Portable" 60-ton reconditioning plants were devised, too, to make on-the-spot repairs to planking. In total, two million tons of steel planking was produced during the war.[792]

Construction materials for airstrips were usually steel mesh and pierced steel planks, including hessian matting and asphalt cement. As the front advanced, and weather worsened, more need was required for all-weather airstrips. Rock and gravel was needed more increasingly as a substrate before steel planking was laid, and in time the rock–gravel tonnage surpassed all other transportation needs.

After the Battle of the Bulge, which saw a German counter-attack into Allied territory in a last attempt to reverse the course of the war during the winter of 1945, "stripped down" engineer aviation battalions traveled with armored units as they drove quickly into German territory. (Edward Spamer's wife, Jeannette, recalled that Edward had missed the Battle of the Bulge itself, when his unit was fortuitously transferred just prior to the German offensive in the sector in which they were working. Further details, however, are not now known.)

> During the same time period, elements of the 816th Engineer Aviation Battalion arrived at a site near Limburg, Germany, after a motor convoy of nearly 100 rough miles over battle-scarred roads. In an hour they had the strip properly smoothed, checked, and marked. Then the engineers undertook emergency flying control until the regular Air Corps team arrived.
> More than 300 planes a day arrived at this field furnishing precious gasoline to a nearby armored division, and evacuating wounded by the hundreds to well-equipped hospitals behind the Rhine. Even while the great C-47's were churning in and out of the field with their valuable cargoes, the engineers were laboring to make the drome larger and more permanent in order to house a Photo-Reconnaissance Group soon to arrive.[793]

V-E Day (8 May 1945) marked the end of the conflict, but not the end of work for the engineer aviation battalions, which served to improve facilities in occupied Europe. The "C" Company chapter in the 816th's unit history—Lt. Spamer's company—took note of V-E Day: [794]

> VE Day was celebrated at Mainz, Germany. Celbrated is perhaps too strong. Actually the news was received very quietly. The end of three years of rugged physical labor meant a lot of > things that are not easily put into words. Besides, the Occupational Air Force needed airfields and VE Day was spent laying pierced steel plank on the runway at Ober Olm. As might be expected, the job was cancelled before it was finished. That was not too depressing since it was overshadowed by the announcement of the point system for discharge.

The "point" system contrived by the Army determined which men would be sent home first; and it came as good news to the 816th: [795]

> V-E Day found the Battalion at an airfield near Mainz. When the point system for discharge was announced the rejoicing was uncontrollable. From D plus 3 to V-E Day the Battalion had gone through four campaigns: Normandy, Northern France, the Rhineland, and Central Europe. * * * [With total points for service in Europe and earlier in America] almost every man in the Battalion could claim more than the required 85 points [for early discharge]. * * *
> A small percentage of men were "low pointers". These men were transferred to low point units. In return, high pointers were transferred from other battalions into this one.

Edward Spamer remained with the 816th for five more months, returning to the U.S. on 10 October 1945, nearly two months after V-J Day [15 August] that marked the end of the hostilities with Japan. His service was terminated by Honorable Relief From Active Duty on 8 January 1946.[796] The 816th remained as an active unit it Germany with the Army of Occupation, reconstructing and enlarging damaged airfields, including the Schleissheim Airfield that went on to support many U.S. military aviation units, and which is still in use today.[797]

While the 816th Engineer Aviation Battalion was still in Germany at the end of the war, it published a unit history of its wartime service, fortuitously finding a printer eager for a job in the still-smoldering ruins of Munich.[798] The history, particularly the chapter on "Engineering and Operations", details much [798] 816th Engineer Aviation Battalion Passes in Review (F. Bruckmann KG., Munich, [1945]). The detail about the printer being found in the smoldering ruins of Munich was conveyed to me in correspondence from Dr. Domenic "Dom" J. Gabriele. He was the 816th's surgeon, and in 2005 was still active in retirement in New York State. The chapter in the unit history, "Medical Detachment" (pp. 55-62), of course prominently features Lt. (later Capt.) Gabriele.

I first located Dr. Gabriele by happenstance while researching the 816th. He was featured in a newspaper article depicting him, then aged nearly 91, on the course at the Somers Pointe Golf Club, in New York State (Andrew Gross, "Dr. Dom Gabriele: Somers Pointe's Super Senior", photography by Mark Vergari and Joe Larese, The Journal News [serving Westchester, Rockland and Putnam Cos., New York], 24 Apr 2005). Regarding his wartime service with the 816th, the article noted in particular that although he was the unit surgeon "he also did much of the manual labor associated with the battalion's task of building airfields." It further noted, "To alleviate the difficulties in constantly transporting medical supplies, Gabriele designed a mobile aid station, which he christened the 'Rolling Pill'"–this was illustrated in the unit history. Dr. Gabriele was born in the Bronx on 7 Jul 1914; received his M.D. from Marquette University in 1939; in 1940 married his wife, Lenore, a nurse; and enlisted in the Army immediately after the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor, even while he and Lenore expected their second child. They have five children. In his 90s he also maintained his own "blog" [web log] online (http://www.blogger.com/profile/ 4655514, last accessed Dec 2007). In that "blog" he further summarized about himself, "Upon my return home [from the war], after a few years of general medical practice and three years as a psychiatric resident, I became Board Certified in Psychiatry and Neurology. I rose to Clinical Directorships at several institutions and specialized in Adolescent Psychiatry. In the meantime, I built and rigged my own sailboat, Ark Angel, and together with family and friends did some serious ocean racing."

more than can be expeditiously cited in this genealogy. However, a few selections are provided below. The unit's commanding officer, Lt. Col. Don A. Parkhurst, summarized: [799]

> There are lots of things that we can brag about. For instance: we helped complete and were present at the dedication ceremony for the first American built Bomber Base in England. We developed the American method used to lay Prefabricated Heessian Surfacing on ETO [European Theater of Operations] runways and built the first one at Kingston-Bagpuize in England prior to D-Day. We beat our own schedule, scooped units that were phased for landing earlier and made our initial continental airstrip ready for the first Ninth Air Force Fighter-bombers to be based on the continent. We built a "Floating Runway" at Colleville. We surfaced a field at Luxembourg without taking it out of operation. We built a complete advance landing ground of pierced aluminum plank from the initial survey to polishing the door-knob in 17 days at Vogelsang, Germany. We established 7 Supply and Evacuation Airstrips in 4 days during the rapid armored advance west of the Rhine River.
> Finally, without any thought of detracting from the credit due units that had a primary mission of combat—the infantry and the armor—we were here slugging away at this war years ahead of them and we are still slugging away builidng post-war airfields to help insure the peace.
> We helped start the American phase of this war and we're sticking around to see that it gets polished off properly. Most of us have only four battle stars to show for it but we are downright proud of them because each and every one was earned by "Blood, sweat, toil and tears".
> Besides, it was fun.

Two pieces of correspondence from Edward L. Spamer were still in the effects of his sister, Katharine S. Spamer, when she died in 1986. He was always close to his sister, and they shared many things during their lives. One letter was written from Normandy, France, just 22 days after D-Day; the other from Belgium on Thanksgiving Day.

Dear Mehit,[801]

I had hoped to get this one off quite a while ago, but we've been working night and day ever since we got here and it just couldn't be done. After all your big talk about travel here I am in Normandy afore ye not, however, by choice. After having toured England I've decided to tour the continent, an extended and escorted tour. This seems to be a lovely country and I like it better than England but of course what I've seen of it is rather beaten up. There are lots of orchards here but I don't believe the people ever eat apples—they have too much cider. It tastes almost like vinegar it is so hard. Wine and cognac are very scarce and as yet I haven't had any.

I used to joke about sleeping in a foxhole, nowadays it is no longer a joke. I've had some very comfortable ones, but at present I'm sitting on a bench, writing on a table in a dugout complete with bunks and floor and walls of planks and a small stove. The roof is made of logs two feet thick and covered with earth. All this was left for us by some of Adolf's [sic] boys, who went somewhere else for their health. We are still the gypsies we always were and I suppose we'll be off soon and I'll be hunting for another hole.

My French is just as bad as ever but on a few occasions I've managed to make myself understood, but they speak much to[o] fast for me. The other morning I passed a girl on a bicycle down the road, so I said "Bon jour, mamzelle" and she replied "Good morning". It's a shame I didn't have more time, isn't it?

Pour la maîtresse de l'ecole[802] I am sending some money. The two smaller ones are invasion money and the other is original. I haven't had occasion to use any of it yet, there is nothing around here to buy. Also, I'm sending my laundry bill, it is paid of course. Don't let the items listed mislead you, some sound rather funny.[803]

We are getting plenty to eat, but I'll be glad when we start getting something other than field rations K and C. Everyone is starting to bark from eating dog biscuits. I wish I could tell you a lot of things but the time for that will come later on. You get a lot more news at home than we are able to get here, but we are pretty well informed via the radio.

[801] Katharine S. Spamer and her brother, Edward, called each other "Mehit" and "Archie" [sic], respectively, after the comical literary characters by Don Marquis (1878-1937), a cat (Mehitabel), and a cockroach (Archy). In Marquis' stories, at night Archy left messages on a typewriter, all in lower-case letters because he could not operate the shift key for capitals. It is this series of "letters" from Archy that comprised Marquis' columns. The two characters were created by Marquis in 1916, when they first appeared in "The Sun Dial" column in the New York Sun. In the first column, Archy typed that he had been a "vers libre bard", but his soul, now in a cockroach, gave him "a new outlook upon life". See Don Marquis, Archy and Mehitabel (Doubleday and Page, Garden City, New York, 1927, and numerous reprintings including Anchor Books, Garden City, New York, 1973).

[802] French, "for the school teacher".

[803] Unfortunately, the laundry bill no longer accompanies the letter.

While in England I traveled at various times from Glasgow and Edinburgh to the south coast, and having seen the devastation in the ports and factories, and St Paul's standing along magnificent amid acres of ruins, and the wide open spaces of Coventry, I can never have any sympathy for what the French call the boche, and one gets a peculiar satisfaction out of seeing a good German—a dead one.

Last night the radio was on when I hit the sack and the orchestra was playing "America, the Beautiful". I got downright homesick for a while thinking about the wonderful country we call home. It has it's [sic] defects but it is so much better than any other that there is just no comparison. These supposedly civilised countries of the old world are really very primitive and it's difficult to see just how they can wield any world influence.

The people here seem friendly and look poor but healthy. Of course these are country people and country people usually eat, but I suppose the city people are just poor.

I wonder what you are doing this summer. Those regular weekly letters of yours seem to be going astray. The mail is coming in very slowly now, there are other things to transport. Let me hear from you one of these moons. I'll try to pick up a few interesting things for my French sister. Give my very best to Pete[804] and take care of yourself. When I come home we'll all really hang one on and in the meantime drink a few for me.

Love

Archie

See if you can get me some cigars and a French-English dictionary, will ya?

Thanksgiving, 1944 [805]
in Belgium[806]

Dear Mehit,

I guess I owe you a letter so this is as good a time as any to start it. We are pretty well fixed right now in a school building in a town and we have lights, heat, and showers which mean everything. It's quite different from the ditches beside the hedgerows of Normandy, but at the time I was perfectly happy to spend my nights below the surface. It's quite annoying to be bombed and strafed when you're trying to get some sleep. We were really sweating it out during those first few weeks on the beachhead. Then after the breakthrough at St. Lo I had one of the many reconnaissance parties looking for new sites and had a couple of close squeaks, but was lucky. Lots of times I was working right behind the armor and got to Le Mans three days before the infantry went through. Lots of fun! And then the war walked off and left us and we've been here and there ever since.

[806] As noted in the first sentence in this letter, Edward Spamer was writing from a school building. The "C" Company chapter of the 816th's unit history–Lt. Spamer was in "C" Co.–notes with regard to this: "St. Trond, Belgium provided a bivouac for the winter in the form of a vacant school. It was not fancy but it was adequate and the stay was enjoyed." (816th Engineer Aviation Battalion Passes in Review (F. Bruckman KG., Munich, [1945]), p. 94).

Have been to Paris several times and what a town it is! There's no place on earth like it and I certainly want to see it in peace time. I wouldn't want to live there because the women would drive me crazy. The first time I saw Paris I was traveling to a new destination with a convoy and "inadvertently" took the wrong road.[807] The first thing I knew I was at Versailles and then Paris. So I took my convoy, heavy equipment and everything, around L'Arc de Triomphe, down the Champs Elysses (spelling?)[808] to the Place de la Concorde. The F.F.I.[809] put us up for the night in an old Chateau and the next day managed to find my way out. While trying to get out of Paris I believe I found every blown up bridge on the Seine.

Went to Brussels on your birthday and that day is quite a holiday over here.[810] Very few places were open but it's a wide awake town. What I've seen of the continent, particularly France, is much nicer than England.

You have never said anything about the package including perfume I sent from Paris and neither has Jeannette.[811] I hope you got it all right. Sorry, no Chanel #5.

The propaganda leaflet is typical of those which have been dropped on France from time to time during the period of preparation.[812]

Now I am going to say good-night and hit the sack. Remember me to Pete and stay sober. I don't know where the cigarettes are, we don't get many over here. That goes for tabac and cigars, too.

Love

Archie

Jeannette (Blouin) Spamer (1920–1987)
(wife of Edward Lawrence Spamer)

The address at which Jeannette Blouin was born was a mill workers' tenement. As noted in the Lowell city directory, the Blouins then resided at "7 rear 21 Hancock Ave."

[807] This incident had been anecdotal information in the family, until this letter was uncovered in the effects of Katharine S. Spamer. The incident probably happened between 3-6 September 1944, as documented by locations noted in the 816th Engineer Aviation Battalion's unit history, referred to in more detail above. A succinct passage in the "C" Company chapter of the 816th's unit history–Lt. Spamer was in "C" Co.–notes: "The convoy to Cormeilles had orders to by-pass Paris. Sunrise on the Champs Elysee [sic] was beautiful and Cormeilles was reached by 9 AM the next morning!" (816th Engineer Aviation Battalion Passes in Review (F. She was baptized as an adult on 5 April 1959 at the Woodland Presbyterian Church, 42nd and Pine Sts., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. If she had been baptized as a child, there is no family record of it. In Philadelphia, she attended the Woodland Presbyterian Church, which she continued to attend for a few years after her move to Gloucester City, New Jersey. In Gloucester, she later began attending the Presbyterian church there, on Monmouth St., which she attended for the remainder of her life.

Occupations of Jeannette Blouin Spamer (from family information):

World War II: Telephone operator, Bell Telephone Co., Vineland, New Jersey
ca. 1958-ca. 1985: Telephone operator, Radio Corporation of America (RCA), Camden, New Jersey

She may have also worked in the businesses run by her mother and step-father in Vineland, New Jersey. At the time, they operated a café and bar, and a small motel, at the intersection of Delsea Drive and Sherman Ave. It was at this time that she met and married Edward Spamer, who was with a Pennsylvania National Guard unit assigned to the Vineland Armory a short distance north of the intersection of these roads. (See more about this under Edward Spamer, above.)

Residences of Jeannette Blouin Spamer after leaving Massachusetts (from family information):

ca. 1935–1945: Vineland, New Jersey (with mother and stepfather)
ca. 1946–1951: 4202 Walnut St., 3rd floor, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania (family with her in-laws) [apartment]
ca. 1951–1952: Spruce St. between 45th and 46th Sts. (3rd floor), Philadelphia, Pennsylvania [apartment]
ca. 1952–1957: 4202 Walnut St., 3rd floor, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania (family with father-in-law) [apartment]

The ring was again passed along to Earle Spamer on his 21st birthday. It was inscribed on each occasion.)

In the "Spamer Families of Baltimore", as informed by Katharine S. Spamer, John Edward Spamer's name is listed mistakenly as Edward Lawrence Spamer, Jr.[813] The details of his name and separate days of birth and death, and place of burial, were not known to present family until his vital records were obtained from the state in 2004.

John Edward Spamer's father, Edward Lawrence Spamer, had on 5 January 1943 departed for England to join his Army unit. According to Jeannette Spamer, news of his son's birth and death took some time to reach him via the Red Cross.

John Edward Spamer was buried on 24 January 1943 in Greenwood Cemetery, Millville, Cumberland Co., New Jersey. A search of the cemetery in 2004 revealed no marker (in the event that the family had placed one). He most likely shares an unmonumented grave used by the Christie Funeral Home of Millville.[814] Attempts to locate the record for the precise grave in 2004 were not fulfilled by the cemetery manager. I was informed that the records for burials such as these from this time period may exist, but they are among thousands of index cards, which requires a hand search with no promise of success.

279. Carol Ann Spamer (1946–)

Carol Ann Spamer was born at 3:36 p.m. She never married. She lived at home until she was in her 20s, then moved to an apartment in Blackwood, Camden Co., New Jersey. She moved from New Jersey to Tucson, Arizona, in 1978.

She worked at the Penn Mutual Life Insurance Company at 6th and Walnut Sts., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, where she was a keypunch operator. During this time, in the 1970s, she attended night school at Rutgers University, where she earned her Bachelor's degree in psychology. When she moved to Tucson, she resided with the mother of an acquaintance she had known in the apartments in Blackwood, until she found employment in the University of Arizona Medical Center.

I have been sorely disappointed with previous family historians' scant accounts of themselves. So, inasmuch as I am the compiler of the present genealogy, I avail myself of the opportunity to provide my own detailed biographical sketch; in some measure an expression of vanity but more one of a hopeful service to a future family historian, who would just like to know something about me. However, the following extensive note was already prepared for another project, which I borrow and reword here in the first person. It is inferentially reliable even if it is biased by a focus more on career than on personal life; in any case, I think this is the more interesting side of the tale.

I was named for a granduncle, Earle Covington Smith (1885–1965).[815] My siblings are a sister, Carol Ann (1946–), and John Edward (who was born prematurely and died after a few hours in 1943). My living nuclear family was a small one: parents, sister, paternal grandfather, maternal grandmother, and one aunt (my father's sister). My father died in 1955, my grandfather in 1960. I had no other aunts or uncles, nor any first cousins; only granduncles and grandaunts and various second cousins or cousins removed, just a few of whom I ever met. Until the late 1960s, my household comprised just my mother and sister, and about 1968 my grandmother moved in with us after the death of her third husband. My grandmother, mother, and aunt all died within a two-year period in the mid-1980s, leaving just my sister as immediate family. By around 2000, most of the extended family was also gone, leaving a documentary record composed essentially of photographs. My genealogical work, begun in earnest in 2004, led me to distant relations and genealogical acquaintances, greatly broadening my understanding of the history of the extended family.

In September 1957, I was enrolled by my mother in Girard College, a boarding school in Philadelphia for fatherless boys founded in the 1831 will of Stephen Girard, a French immigrant who became the leading American financier and mercantile magnate of the early Republic. All expenses and students' needs are borne by the school, which is the legal guardian of each student while they are enrolled there. The school was provided (as indicated in the Girard Will) for "poor, male white orphans," and it was in this environment that I was raised. In 1968 the school was, finally, racially integrated after a second court case heard before the United States Supreme Court (the first case was in the 1950s). This ruling brought to an end a classic battle of staunch administrators, bound by the Girard Will, against an essential social need. In the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, the legal distinction of "orphans" is not that as usually understood by the lay public, but rather it identifies parties (individuals and organizations alike) who cannot legally represent themselves. The school was, and is, overseen by a board of trustees under the Philadelphia Orphans' Court. In terms of law at the time I was a Girard College student, "orphans" included only fatherless children, and indeed all of the students at Girard had no living fathers, but most still had their mothers alive. Later, after a court case won in favor of equal rights, girls were admitted to the school, as were also children from socially and financially disadvantaged households. When I attended Girard, the school housed and educated about 400 students between the first and twelfth grades; its record enrollment was about 1,700 during the Great Depression. When I was enrolled at Girard, all students passed over the seventh grade, a policy since eliminated but which had been designed to allow students to graduate before their 18th birthdays, the Girard Will determining that students must depart the school upon attaining the age of 18. (When I was at Girard, students who attained their 18th birthday during their senior year were administratively granted extensions.) The school year was spent on campus, where the education was traditional but the curriculum was somewhat antique; vacations at home were scattered at holiday times and the summer. I graduated at the age of 16 in June 1969.

My second grade teacher, Miss Ranch (pronounced "Rank"), launched my infatuation with astronomy, and by the fourth grade (with Miss Potts[816]) my interests had grown to embrace the sciences more widely. One of the sustainers of my scientific bent was fellow "junior scientist" and classmate, Darron W. Corriden, with whom I spent years crafting many of the talents I have come to rely upon. Hopes of becoming an astronomer were, however, dashed when I eventually learned that the subject requires a significant understanding of mathematics, in which I never excelled. In the fall of 1969, I entered Camden County College (Blackwood, New Jersey) to study the liberal arts. I became a "professional student" and, after four years at Camden County College (conventionally a two-year institution awarding Associate Bachelor's degrees), transferred without a degree to Rutgers University's Camden College of Arts and Sciences. There I majored in geology for six years, studying full time and taking every geology course that Rutgers offered, including taking several times various honors and special studies programs.

[815] See an extensive sketch about him in Part II: Smith Family, No. 215.

While at Camden County College, I took a semester around 1971 to take on my first job. I worked as a clerk in the traffic (shipping) office of the Ford Parts Depot, an automotive parts distribution branch of the Ford Motor Company, in Pennsauken, New Jersey.

During my years at Rutgers, I began a life-long infatuation with the Grand Canyon. I first visited the chasm in late May 1974 together with Michael Dunn, a friend from geology classes, and again in August of that year with my sister, Carol, when I first hiked in the canyon. That fall I began the compilations that would eventually become the Bibliography of the Grand Canyon and Lower Colorado River, arguably the most comprehensive bibliography embracing any unit administered by the National Park Service, although its scope includes the greater geographical region of the entire lower Colorado River corridor through Arizona, Nevada, California, and Mexico. The bibliography was first published in 1981 by the Grand Canyon Natural History Association (later the Grand Canyon Association), and has been supported by the GCA since then. My interest in bibliography in general was inspired at this time, too.

Also during the Rutgers years, I began my long association with the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia, when in the fall of 1973 I became a student volunteer in that institution's Department of Geology and Paleontology. Financial difficulties in the institution closed the department by 1979, and its collections were dispersed to the care of several other departments within the Academy. By this time, I had begun to take great interest in the history of the Academy and the history of natural history especially in America. I moved with the collections in a capacity of volunteer and student research associate. In 1978-1979, I also was given a paid position of Adjunct Instructor at Rutgers, teaching introductory geology labs and mentoring undergraduate students. Mine was an unusual circumstance, being an undergraduate on financial aid with an office—which also quickly became a lounge for the geology department.

During this time, I was a founding member of the Delaware Valley Paleontological Society (1978), an organization of professionals and amateurs based in Philadelphia, which met most every month at the Academy of Natural Sciences. I was involved in the creation of its occasional journal, The Mosasaur, was for a while the editor of the society's newsletter, and was the organization's President during 1984-1986. I also served on its Board of Directors during 1983-1994.

Compromised by poor mathematical skills, which negated applied work in math, chemistry, and physics, I left Rutgers in 1980 without a degree when its Camden-based Geology Department was closed down by financial pressures within the university. At this time I left a full-time security guard's job with Wells Fargo, which I had held for the previous five years working two double shifts on the weekends in order to attend school during the week. I worked for several months for more money on the production floor of the Hussmann Company, a Detroit-based firm whose Cherry Hill, New Jersey, factory was where I had been a guard for nearly five years. There I was involved in the manufacture of sheet metal shelving, operating spot welders and brakes. I was laid off from Hussmann during employee cutbacks, and, capitalizing on my skills as a typist, went to work for Auerbach Publishers[817] in Pennsauken, New Jersey, which produced summary publications relating to computers and their technology. Beginning as a typesetter, I quickly advanced to positions in the editorial department, eventually taking a Project Editor's position overseeing the "Mainframes" series of publications. In several years, I was hired away from Auerbach by Data Decisions, a Cherry Hill-based competitor (owned by the Ziff-Davis corporation in New York City), where I worked as an Editor/Analyst producing reports about mainframes, peripheral computer equipment, and telecommunications devices. During this time, the first personal computers were being widely marketed, and the world swing into the digital age was in full motion.

During my years with publishers, at the encouragement of a supervisor in 1982 I finally obtained my Bachelor's degree. I accomplished this by transferring my academic credits accumulated at Camden County College and Rutgers University to the Thomas Edison State College (Trenton, New Jersey). There I was an "instant graduate," receiving a Bachelor of Arts degree in "Science and [ironically] Mathematics." Thomas Edison State College was innovative, allowing students to enroll in other institutions and transfer accumulated credits to Edison. Credits were pooled within Edison's program of curricula, fully accredited by the Middle States Association of Colleges and Schools. My distribution of credits was just relaxed enough to qualify for the degree even with marginal mathematical skills. A final examination comprised a one-on-one recorded interview with a professor of geology, and credit was given also for publications and activities to date.

In 1984, Data Decisions was sold by the owner of Ziff-Davis, and I was suddenly unemployed.[818] The next day, however, I was asked to temporarily join the Natural History Bureau of the New Jersey State Museum (in Trenton), helping prepare their database of collections of research specimens and to participate in paleontological field work during the summer months. This was my first exposure to database utilities. During my nearly two years with the state museum, I participated in field work, usually at the "Bobs Run" excavation on Crosswicks Creek near Trenton, which yielded a Cretaceous–Tertiary-boundary "scrap fauna" of fossils that uniquely preserved an interesting paleoenvironment.

In 1986, the Department of Malacology of the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia asked me if I would take over, for six months, the collection manager's position in the Invertebrate Paleontology Section the Univac division of the Sperry Rand Corporation. In 1949, Auerbach had gone to work as director of the Defense and Special Products Division of the Burroughs Corporation. While there he worked for J. Presper Eckert and John W. Mauchly on the BINAC, predecessor of the UNIVAC. Auerbach departed the firm with criticism of Eckert and Mauchly; he said that neither "in my opinion were competent managers, competent leaders, or competent executives, or understood business at all. They were visionaries, and they were brilliant technically, and they would not let somebody else run the side of the company in which they were inept." (George Gray, "UNIVAC I: The First Mass-Produced Computer", Unisys History Newsletter, vol. 5, no. 1 [Jan 2001]). Auerbach was the founder of the International Federation for Information Processing and a co-founder of the American Federation of Information Processing Societies; he also was a Fellow of the Institute of Electrical and Electronic Engineers, a Distinguished Fellow of the British Computer Society, and a Fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science. His papers are today in the Charles Babbage Institute, University of Minnesota. [818] Data Decisions was purchased by McGraw-Hill, Inc., which published a competing series of computer technology reports as Datapro, Inc., in nearby Delran, New Jersey. Only the physical and intellectual assets of Data Decisions were acquired; staff were terminated. During the previous year, the Ziff-Davis corporation sold or closed many of its publications. ("McGraw Deal On Ziff Unit", New York Times, 14 Nov 1985.) What was not disclosed in the newspapers was the fact that the owner of the Ziff-Davis group was selling his assets for cash, having learned of a terminal illness and was assuring his children a future with it; at least this was as conveyed to us at Data Decisions by its chief officer. [All three competing computer-technology report publishers–Auerbach Publishers, Data Decisions, and Datapro–were coincidentally within miles of each other.]

while the collection manager was on leave. This collection was administratively a part of the Department of Malacology after the late 1970s demise of the Academy's Department of Geology and Paleontology. The department chair was pleased enough with my work in curation and database maintenance that he moved me into a grant-funded position in the malacology department, where eventually I rose to the position of Assistant Collection Manager. In due time, I also took on responsibility for the "General Invertebrates" collection that also was under the administrative care of the malacology department, which comprised all of the institution's research specimens of modern invertebrates that were not mollusks, insects, or arachnids (these were kept in other, separate departments). Later, I was hired as the Collection Manager in the Academy's Diatom Herbarium, and, later still, as the Collection Manager in the Department of Botany.

While in the Diatom Herbarium, I had the opportunity to work with the world's largest collection of diatoms (microscopic algae-like organisms usually classified as kinds of plants). The Academy's Diatom Herbarium as it now exists is largely the work of Dr. Ruth Patrick (1907–)[819], who established many of the principles and research procedures of modern freshwater ecology, and for whom the "Patrick Principle" is named. Although I did not work directly with Patrick, we frequently interacted. The Patrick Principle essentially refers to the concept that diversity in the biological realm can indicate the relative health of the environmental conditions. Patrick is also noted elsewhere herein, in the appendix of collateral genealogies. As of 2008, Patrick, at age 100, continues to work at the Academy of Natural Sciences, having been affiliated with this institution now for 75 years.

In 1988, I was approached by the President of the Board of Trustees of the Wagner Free Institute of Science, in Philadelphia, who asked if I would consider joining the board. The Wagner Free Institute is today a National Historic Landmark, which was begun by Philadelphia gentleman-naturalist William Wagner in 1855. The last of the unchanged Victorian era museums in America, its educational programs continue to be given free of charge. The Institute is a not-for-profit, privately endowed institution providing a museum of natural history and technology and public-education programs in science, health, and technology. The Institute has significant merit in the areas of architecture, education, and museology. I had previously done work on the Institute's collection of fossils, and had made a presentation there, which attracted the attention of the board. At the time that I joined the board, appointments were for life in accordance with the institution's Deed of Trust; but this was later changed to term limits by action of the board. I served on the board during 1988-1998, and was the Secretary during 1993-1997. These years saw the Institute waken from decades of obscurity, and its successful efforts to attain the designation of National Landmark. I was the only Academy member to join the Wagner Free Institute's board since the Academy's President, Joseph Leidy, directed the Institute after the founder's death in 1888.

During the time that I worked in the botany department of the Academy of Natural Sciences, 1997-2000, I took it upon myself to create the first digital reference images for the Lewis and Clark Herbarium, the specimens collected during the 1804-1806 expedition to the American Northwest led by Meriwether Lewis and William Clark. The coincidence of the bicentennial of this expedition soon provided the perfect opportunity to capitalize on the great public interest in it. I was a coauthor of a Save America's Treasures grant application to conserve the Lewis and Clark Herbarium, and a CD-ROM was published based on the digital images that I had created a few years before. In addition, I coauthored several other papers and popular articles that relate to the Lewis and Clark Herbarium.

Administrative changes in the botany department in 2000 displaced me as its collection manager. The Academy's Senior Vice-President for Science identified an opportunity for me to assume the responsibilities of Dr. Ruth Patrick, 96, in her office in the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia, on 28 July 2004. As of 2008, at age 100 and 75 years with the Academy, she continues her work as the Francis Boyer Chair of Limnology. She is one of the world's leading fresh-water ecologists and a paramount taxonomist of the microscopic, single-celled plants called diatoms. Dr. Patrick holds a Ph.D. degree—and twenty-six honorary doctorates—the diplomas for none of which are to be seen in her office. Patrick also was a Trustee of the Academy and is now the Honorary Chair of the Academy's Board of Trustees. She also was the first woman elected to the board of directors of the Du Pont chemicals-manufacturing corporation, among numerous other responsible positions and honors. She is a member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science and the American Philosophical Society and a recipient of the National Medal of Science.

Ruth Patrick conceived the "big picture" approach to the analysis of environmental qualilty of fresh waters, whereby the myriad components of an ecosystem—biological, chemical, and physical—are studied as a whole rather than by their separate components. Key to many of these studies is the population of diatoms, the diversity of which prove to be excellent indicators of environmental quality. Diatoms are found in every body of water and even in moist soils. They can be collected from streams, lakes, and oceans; even from the underside of polar ice sheets where sunlight can reach them. Some species live floating freely in the water; other are colonial, attaching themselves in filaments to the bottoms of streams and lakes and to any object in the water. Photosynthesizers, diatoms produce a significant fraction of the world's free oxygen.

Between 1992–1997, Earle Spamer was the Collection Manager in the Diatom Herbarium of the Academy of Natural Sciences, the collection upon which the Academy's former Limnology Department was founded. That department eventually became a much larger, more diversified branch of the Academy, the Patrick Center for Environmental Research, which undertakes contractural investigations for governmental agencies and private industry. The Diatom Herbarium contains arguably the world's largest collection of diatoms, the organization of which was principally the work of Dr. Patrick and colleague Dr. Charles Reimer over fifty years. Spamer was also acting collection manager of the herbarium during 1997–2000 while he worked as the Collection Manager of the Academy's Department of Botany.

the Academy's retiring archivist. While completing the Archives and Manuscripts graduate program at Temple University, in Philadelphia, I took over this position at the beginning of 2001. The program was taught by Martin Levitt, the administrative librarian (later Librarian, or library director) of the American Philosophical Society, a professional acquaintance that would bear more fruit in a few years.

As I had in previous activities, I never gave up one department, or its interests, for another; but I accrued the interests one on another. I continued to work on things relating to the Lewis and Clark Herbarium, and I had the opportunity during this time to participate in numerous events commemorating the expedition. With others from the Academy, I was present in the East Room of the White House when President Bill Clinton, Secretary of the Interior Bruce Babbitt, and Lewis and Clark author and scholar Stephen Ambrose commemorated the expedition in January 2001, and when Clinton announced the creation of several new national monuments. And I was invited with Jane Anderson to Thomas Jefferson's Virginia home, Monticello, to enjoy the day-long outdoor ceremonies (in bitter 8º F temperature in the morning) inaugurating the Lewis and Clark Bicentennial in January 2003.

During my years formally on the payroll of the Academy of Natural Sciences, I continued to publish in a variety of journals and through several scientific or educational publishers. I wrote on subjects as diverse as those in the departments in which I worked. I published in the fields of paleontology, malacology, modern invertebrates, diatoms, botany, and archival theory. Most of these works are curatorial in nature, but a few were scholarly contributions through their updated knowledge of the distribution and understanding of certain organisms, or the application of archival principles to a changing world view. And of course, my work on the Grand Canyon bibliography continued apace, seeing a complete revision published in 1990, a supplement in 1993, and eventually a wholly reedited and searchable version posted on the web in January 2000. The web-based edition is continuously updated.

In the late 1990s, I was asked to assume the Managing Editor's position of the Academy's Scientific Publications department, which oversaw the institution's Proceedings and other serials comprising the oldest publishing program in natural history in America, begun in 1817. The editor's position had for decades traditionally been occupied by a curator with a Ph.D. degree; but again, my background and abilities proved by practica raised me into still another responsible position. I served in this position for seven years, celebrating Volume 150 of the Proceedings and producing the Academy's first electronic publication on CD-ROM, among others. When in 2003 the Archivist's position was made full-time (for the first time ever) I stepped down as Managing Editor.

In December 2004, I received notice that the following March the position of Archivist at the Academy of Natural Sciences would be eliminated in an administrative attempt to dissolve the huge deficit that gripped the entire institution, foretelling the end of my 30-year relationship with the Academy. In January, Martin Levitt contacted me to inquire if I would be interested in applying for a two-year grant-funded position as an Assistant Reference Librarian at the American Philosophical Society. Even without the formal credentials normally required of the position—specifically, an American Library Association-accredited Master of Library Science degree—I was hired, working in a polymathic environment at a world-class scholarly research institution. Often I had walked past the APS, realizing that I was not likely ever to obtain a position there. After I left the Academy, the curators there elected me a Research Associate, thus not absolutely ending my association with this institution. In November 2006, the APS permanently hired me as Research Archivist and Library Programs Coordinator, effective February 2007. An additional part of my responsibilities is as Assistant Managing Editor of the Mendel Newsletter, an informational annual publication relating to research resources in genetics.

During the 1990s, I also began a closer association to the Grand Canyon by working on rafting trips on the Colorado River. My first, and only trip as a paying passenger, was with the 28th International Geological Congress in 1989. What I thought would be only the trip of a lifetime became a working-vacation the next year when I was asked by the Grand Canyon Expeditions Co. of Kanab, Utah, to be a geology interpreter on a special-interest trip. I had been recommended to the company by Robert C. Euler, who at the time was the archaeologist and anthropologist for Grand Canyon National Park. This turned into a once-yearly job nearly every year through 2001, when other responsibilities and medical issues interfered.

I also joined two research trips on the Colorado River (vernacularly called "science trips") under the auspices of the Glen Canyon Environmental Studies, a federal program that conducted baseline and applied research studies in the river corridor as part of the Environmental Impact Statement relating to the operation of the hydropower plant at Glen Canyon Dam just upstream from the Grand Canyon. During one trip I carried out the first-ever inventory of the mollusk fauna of the river corridor, which revealed the endangered Kanab ambersnail living at Vasey's Paradise. This discovery led to a great amount of ecological and taxonomic research on the mollusk by other scientists, produced at least two master's degrees by graduate students, and resulted in the establishment of refugia at other Grand Canyon locales and a captive breeding population at the Phoenix Zoo.

On one of the two Colorado River "science trips" I was as a "swamper," or helper, to boatman Richard Quartaroli, an acquaintance and fellow bibliophile who at the time was the librarian for the Glen Canyon Environmental Studies office in Flagstaff, Arizona (later he became Special Collections Librarian in the Special Collections and Archives, Cline Library, Northern Arizona University, Flagstaff). In 1997, I also accompanied Quartaroli's "private trip" on the Colorado when Quartaroli's National Park Service trip permit finally came to the top of what then was a waiting list of about ten years. The Spamer-Quartaroli correspondence is by far the most extensive of correspondences of this collection, made all the more voluminous by the burgeoning informality of the electronic medium of "email" beginning in the 1990s.

My archival training convinced me of the need to gain control of and manage the great number of photographs that I had assembled from travels and avocations. Included among them were many photographs taken during Colorado River and other Grand Canyon trips. I created databases with report functions, and assembled the photos in archival sleeves, arranged according to trip or event. The photograph collection, perhaps more than any other one of my collections, demonstrates my inseparable interests across a number of fields.

A more interesting, unlikely sidebar to my editorial and publishing endeavors is my association with the Annals of Improbable Research, which also hosts the annual Ig Nobel Prize ceremonies that recognize research that "cannot, or should not, be reproduced". "AIR" by its own definition is the "journal of record for self-inflated personalities and improbable research"; and nearly from the journal's inception I have served on its editorial board (which as of 2007 included nine—bona fide—Nobel Laureates). I published numerous items in AIR, including the classic work in the inaugural issue in 1995, "The Taxonomy of Barney: Evidence for Convergence in Hominid Evolution," by Edward Theriot, Arthur Bogan, and myself.[820] This paper also gave rise to the so-called "dreaded Theriot Effect"[821], which is a scientific—or rather, unscientific—process of purposefully adding or selecting data until pre-expected results are achieved. Perhaps somewhat dubiously, this and other work of mine has been translated and reprinted in German, Italian, and Chinese. My records, improbably, hold no correspondence relating to AIR; and my association with the journal and its editor is recorded solely by my publications.

Spamer, "The Taxonomy of Barney: Evidence of Convergence in Hominid Evolution", Annals of Improbable Research, Vol. 1, no. 1 (Jan/Feb 1995), pp. 3-7. "Barney" was (and still is to some degree) a popular televised young-children's purple-colored dinosaur character portrayed by a person in costume. My coauthors were colleagues; Theriot was at that time with the Academy of Natural Sciences with me (in fact, he was my supervisor), and Bogan had formerly been at the Academy with me.

During my Rutgers years, I married Donna Alvin on 6 December 1977.[822] But that marriage ended in 1984 when she divorced and remarried; there were no children. In 1995, I was introduced by a mutual acquaintance to Jane Anderson, a recently widowed woman who had moved from Arlington, Texas, to the Philadelphia area and a new job. I had known Keith Vine, our mutual acquaintance, while at Rutgers, who had known Anderson while they were graduate students ten years earlier at Kent State University, Kent, Ohio. Nearly a year later, Jane and I became "significant others," or companions, which we considered a lifetime attachment. On 11 February 2005—three days before I began my two-year reference librarian's position at the American Philosophical Society—we married at the Franklin Institute.[823] (This old Philadelphia institution was once a research organization, but today it is a museum of science and technology. When I was a young boy, I had taken summer courses in astronomy and astronautics at the Franklin Institute under the renowned Dr. I. M. Levitt, and here I also visited occasionally, as pocket money would allow, with fellow "scientist" Darron Corriden.) Jane, with a master's degree in geology, had been a research coordinator for glaucoma medical studies in Texas before moving to a similar position in Philadelphia at the University of Pennsylvania's Scheie Eye Institute. Later, in 2005, she moved within the university to the medical school's Office of Human Research, where she is a Regulatory Compliance Monitor (an auditor of research protocols).

In the early 2000s, Jane introduced me to genealogy. Beginning with her data-mining of two unpublished histories of branches of the Spamer family[824], and some Internet web searches, I continued the work using web and published resources to research the family's relations and history. Jane and I also traveled to family sites to document their present-day conditions and add to a growing collection of photographs.

At the time, I had catalogued my entire collection of photographs that related to my travels and avocations. Coming to terms with chaotic assemblages of family photographs, stored haphazardly in non-archival quality albums and lying loose in boxes, I also selected from, identified, and completely organized these photographs. In addition to the photographs collected by me, my parents, and my sister, I also acquired the collections assembled by other members of the family—my paternal aunt, Katharine S. Spamer, paternal grandfather, John Ward Spamer, and maternal grandmother, Palmina (Martel) Kears. Yet more photographs were acquired by gift from more distant family members, including my granduncle, Earle C. Smith. I also copied the photographs of even more distantly related family members, dating to as early as ca. 1845. Collectively they comprise a well-identified series of photos that illustrate community and household life styles and aspects of family history. Some sets of photos, with their associated genealogical data, have value to historians and genealogists of the Chesapeake Bay area of Maryland and the area surrounding historic mill town Lowell, Massachusetts; they document families for which there is no known information currently available in archives and study collections. Regretfully, primary documents belonging to the family do not survive, but the interpretive aspects of the materials in this collection substitute for some of those documents. In some respects, this is more similar to methods of historiography.

As heir to many different collections in the family, my family-photographs series comprises a genealogically unusual set, in that the collection is nearly whole, not divided up among numerous descendants. Ironically, I have come to learn more about the family than the family ever knew, and yet within the family virtually no one now survives to know it. The end of a family line may not be unusual, but this kind of documentation of it is surely less common.

Mounted on the wall behind the group are original portraits of (left to right) Thomas Jefferson, by Thomas Sully, apparently the portrait painted from life at Monticello, 1821; Benjamin Franklin, by Charles Willson Peale, 1772 (after David Martin's 1767 portrait); and Peter Stephen Du Ponceau, by Thomas Sully, 1830. (Franklin was the founder of the Society, and its president until his death in 1790. Jefferson was vice-president of the Society, 1791–1795, and president, 1797–1814, also concurrently while serving as the third President of the United States. Du Ponceau was a Philadelphia lawyer and linguist who was vice-president of the Society after Jefferson's presidency, 1816–1828, and president, 1828–1844.)

On 16 December 2002, Earle Spamer and Richard McCourt delivered some specimens from the Lewis & Clark Herbarium to be exhibited at Monticello, Thomas Jefferson's home in Virginia. The expedition of Lewis and Clark was conceived by Jefferson, who also was the intellectual mentor of those who studied the materials that were collected by the explorers. Specimens and artifacts were first delivered to Jefferson at the President's House (today the White House) in Washington, D.C. He subsequently sent them to the American Philosophical Society in Philadelphia, of which he was its president (and where in two years after this photo Spamer would be working). (Above) Earle Spamer in Thomas Jefferson's study. (Below) Spamer (reflected in mirror) photographs Richard McCourt studying some artifacts from Thomas Jefferson's life, displayed in Jefferson's bedroom adjacent to the study.

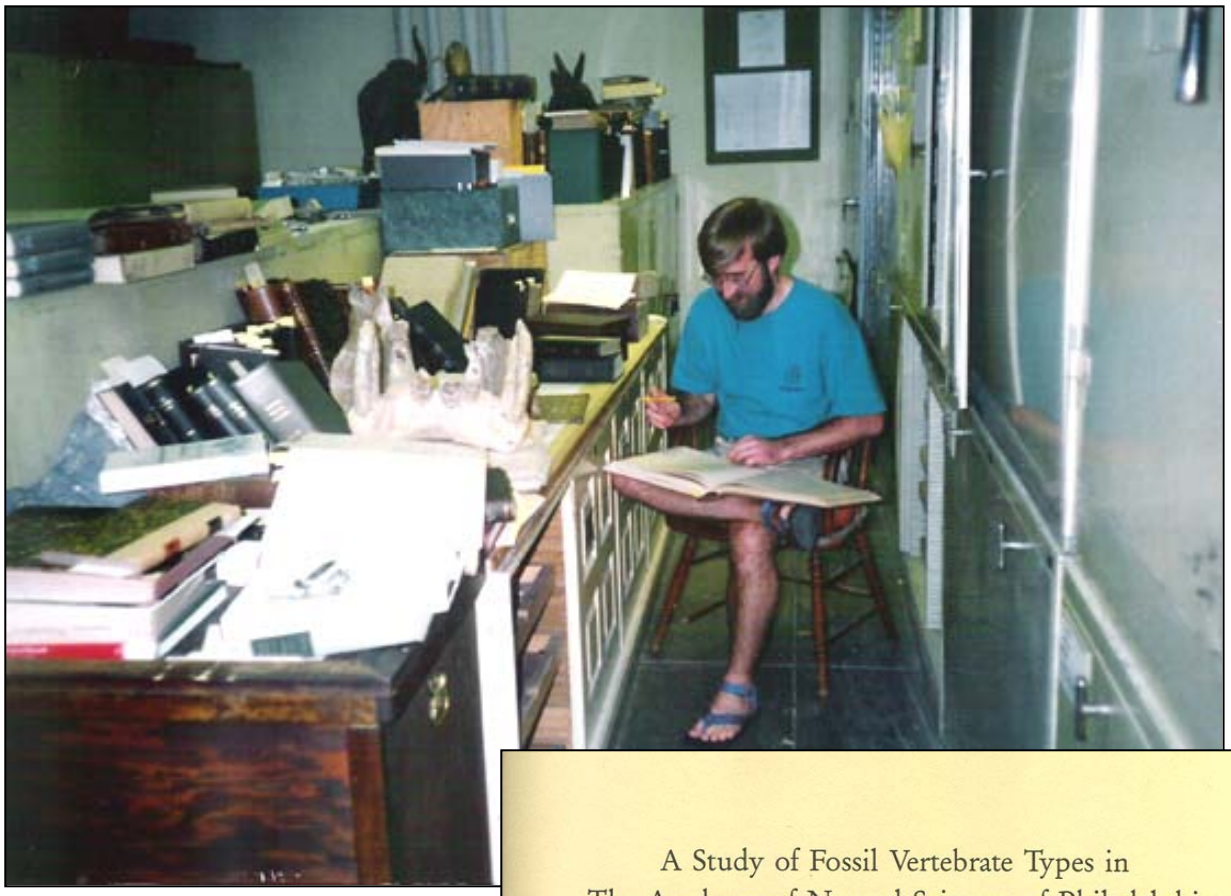
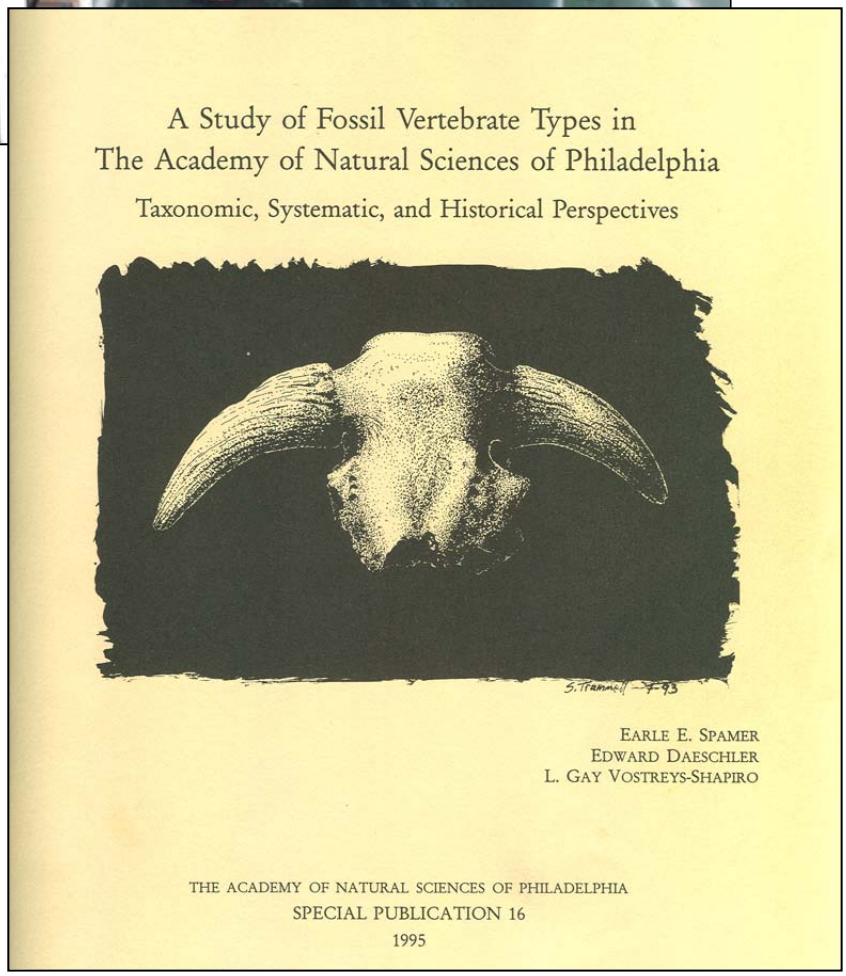
On 17 January 2001, President Bill Clinton conducted the last official White House ceremony of his administration. Here President Clinton (right) leads author and historian Stephen Ambrose (center) and Secretary of the Interior Bruce Babbitt (left) to the podium in the East Room. They commemorated several things—the forthcoming bicentennial of the explorations made under the leadership of Meriwether Lewis and William Clark in 1804–1806, conducted through the foresight of President Thomas Jefferson; the formal elevation of William Clark to the rank of Captain, U.S. Army (by Act of Congress); honorary appointments at the grade of Sergeant, given to Sacagawea (the Native American woman who served as an interpreter and cultural consultant on the expedition and who traveled to the Pacific with her newborn son, nick-named by the explorerers "Pomp") and to York, William Clark's enslaved manservant (who accompanied the group as a co-member of the expedition); and the creation of several new National Monuments in the West.

Earle Spamer and several other staff members of the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia were invited to the ceremony for their rolls in the preservation and documentation of the Lewis & Clark Herbarium, the collection of pressed plants taken by the explorers, which collection is today housed in the Academy. Stephen Ambrose also was a Friend of the Academy Herbarium. The bright lights were for the benefit of C-SPAN television coverage. On the table next to the podium lies a compass used by Lewis and Clark, from the collections of the Smithsonian Institution. Regardless of one's own political persuasion, the privilege of being invited to the White House is an experience never forgotten.





(Above) Earle Spamer was photographed in September 1993 surrounded by books and specimens while working in a deep corner of the Vertebrate Paleontology collection in the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia. Although at that time he was an employee in another department of the Academy, he used his own time to research the hundreds of original specimens in this collection that were used to establish new species of fossil vertebrate animals; such specimens are called "type specimens", or "types". The product of this work was the 400-page study of the collection (right), published by the Academy in 1995.

(Center) The Academy of Natural Sciences has had only three professional archivists. On 26 April 2001, all three were photographed in the Library of the Academy, to commemorate the third (and final) retirement of Carol Spawn (center), former manuscripts librarian and head librarian of the Academy. With her are Karen Stevens (left) and Spamer, who was at this time the archivist of the Academy. (The position was eliminated in 2005.) Stevens is today (and at the time of this photo) the archivist of Independence National Historical Park in Philadelphia.

All of these occupations were a far cry from Spamer's first job in 1971 (left), pushing paper in the shipping office of the Ford Motor Co. Parts Depot in Pennsauken, New Jersey. (Spamer is the one facing the camera, disinterestedly. Also note the antiquated adding machines—before calculators.)

Earle Spamer has been an afficionado of space exploration since his childhood. After the first manned moon landing in July 1969, he went to New York City on 14 August with his sister, Carol, and aunt, Katharine Spamer, to see the ticker tape parade in honor of Apollo 11 astronauts (left to right, waving from rear of automobile) Neil Armstrong, Edwin "Buzz" Aldrin, and Michael Collins. (On 42nd St. at Grand Central Station; restored from a negative. Spamer photo.)

On 26 April 2008, as part of the Spring General Meeting of the American Philosophical Society, where Earle Spamer currently works as an archivist, a session was presented on "Space: The Evolving Frontier". Neil Armstrong, who is a member of the Society, moderated the session (below, with Armstrong at the lectern during the question and answer period).

Living in the Philadelphia area has advantages. On 6 July 1976, Earle Spamer photographed Queen Elizabeth II during her presentation of the Bicentennial Bell, which was cast in 1976 at the Whitechapel Bell Foundry, the same foundry at which was made the Liberty Bell. The ceremony took place at the (former) Visitors Center of Independence National Historical Park, 3rd Street between Chestnut and Walnut Streets, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Prince Phil ip sits at the right.

Spamer's photo position was just about fifty feet away, on the west side of 3rd Street, at a time when security concerns, although tight, were more relaxed than they are today. The Queen had arrived in Philadelphia aboard the royal yacht, H.M.S. Britannia, which had berthed at Penn's Landing.

Jane Anderson (1958–)
(wife of Earle Edward Spamer)

All information for Jane Anderson's genealogy are taken from her extensive genealogical database. She retains her own name.

Jane Anderson and I met in September 1995 and became partners 13 August 1996 when we began living together, which date we consider as our anniversary. Our marriage at The Franklin Institute (a science-education museum in Philadelphia, and one-time research institution for science and technology founded in 1824) was part of a group wedding in celebration of the 50th anniversary of "The Giant Heart" exhibit. (The Giant Heart is a two-story human heart model scaled to the size of that of the Statue of Liberty, through which visitors can walk and climb a narrow, undulating, circuitous passage tracing the path of blood through the heart and lungs.) The ceremony was officiated by Hon. Frederica A. Massiah-Jackson, President Judge of the Court of Common Pleas of Philadelphia and Chair of the Administrative Governing Board of the First Judicial District of Pennsylvania.

Jane Anderson received an M.S. degree in Geology from Kent State University, Kent, Ohio, 1985.

She works for the Medical School of the University of Pennsylvania, where she is a Regulatory Compliance Monitor in the Office of Human Research, auditing the activities of clinical trials with human subjects and serving on an Internal Review Board. Previously she had worked for the university's Department of Ophthamology in the Scheie[825] Eye Institute, where she was a Clinical Coordinator. Prior to arriving in Philadelphia in 1995, she had worked for ten years in Dallas, Texas, in ophthamological research. At the time she resided with her (now deceased) husband in Arlington, Texas.

Alvin Family
Collateral Genealogy
(14 descendants)

The genealogy of the Alvin family, as it relates to our Spamer lineage and as currently understood, is as follows:

Descendants of Jerome Alvin

Generation No. 1

1. Jerome[1] Alvin was born about 1866 in Italy, and died after April 1930. He married Mary about 1896 in Italy. She was born about 1877 in Italy, and died after April 1930.

Children of Jerome Alvin and Mary are:

\+ 2 i. Joseph[2] Alvin, born 31 March 1897 in Italy; died January 1983 in Woodbury, Gloucester Co., New Jersey.

3 ii. Katharine Alvin, born about 1900 in Italy.

---

[825] Pronounced "shay".

Earle Edward Spamer (1952–) and Jane Lou Anderson (1958–) were married on 11 February 2005 at the Franklin Institute, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

We capitalized on an event celebrating the 50th anniversary of "The Giant Heart", a tremendously popular walk-through exhibit remembered by generations of school children and families. And of course, Earle had spent untold hours at the Institute while growing up, roaming its exhibit halls and taking its courses in science and technology. The Institute had promoted the anniversary by offering to host marriages at The Giant Heart. We were married by Hon. Frederica Massiah-Jackson, then President Judge of the Philadelphia Court of Common Pleas.

4 iii. Michael Alvin, born about 1905 in Pennsylvania.
5 iv. Antony Alvin, born about 1907 in Pennsylvania.
6 v. Albert Alvin, born about 1912 in Pennsylvania.
7 vi. Frank Alvin, born about 1914 in Pennsylvania.

NOTES

Jerome Alvin (ca. 1866–after April 1930) [No. 1] and his wife, Mary Alvin (ca. 1877–after April 1930), immigrated to the U.S. 1902.

Occupations of Jerome Alvin (from U.S. censuses):
1910: Laborer
1920: Proprietor, shoe-shining shop

Residences of Jerome Alvin (from U.S. censuses):
1910: 122 Moore Ave., Greensburg, Westmoreland Co., Pennsylvania
1920: 922 Wylie Ave., Pittsburgh, Allegheny Co., Pennsylvania

In the 1910 census, he seems to be registered as James Alvin, but the name is not very legible on the census sheet. At the time of the 1920 census, both he and his wife were still alien residents.

Katharine Alvin (ca. 1900–) [No. 3] presumably immigrated to the U.S. at the same time as her brother, Joseph, in 1912. She is not living with her parents and family at the time of the 1920 census, and might have been married at that time.

Generation No. 2

2. Joseph[2] Alvin (Jerome[1]) was born 31 March 1897 in Italy, and died January 1983 in Woodbury, Gloucester Co., New Jersey. He married Mary Pisanelli about 1920. She was born about 1905 in Pennsylvania, and died before 1977.

Children of Joseph Alvin and Mary Pisanelli are:
\+ 8 i. Jerome J.[3] Alvin, born 04 August 1921 in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; died 08 January 2005 in Atlantic City Medical Center, Atlantic City, New Jersey.
9 ii. June Alvin, born about 1923 in Pennsylvania; died before January 2005. She married Zook.
\+ 10 iii. Evelyn Alvin, born after 12 April 1930; died after January 2005.

NOTES

Joseph Alvin (1897–1983) [No. 2] immigrated to the U.S. in 1912.

Occupations of Joseph Alvin (from U.S. censuses):
1910: Barber
1920: Proprietor, shoe-shining shop
1930: Stationary engineer in coal mine

Residences of Joseph Alvin (from U.S. censuses):
1920: 922 Wylie Ave., Pittsburgh, Allegheny Co., Pennsylvania
1930: 216 Indianola Rd., Indiana, Allegheny Co., Pennsylvania

At the time of the 1920 U.S. census, Joseph Alvin was still an alien resident. In his last years, he resided with his daughter, June, and son-in-law, and was eventually moved to a nursing home in Deptford, New Jersey.

The parents of Mary Pisanelli (ca. 1905–before 1977), wife of Joseph Alvin, were born in Italy.

Generation No. 3

8. Jerome J.[3] Alvin (Joseph[2], Jerome[1]) was born 04 August 1921 in Pittsburgh, Allegheny Co., Pennsylvania, and died 08 January 2005 in Atlantic City Medical Center, Atlantic City, New Jersey. He married (1) undetermined wife 1.[826] He married (2) Mary Catherine Deitz, daughter of Ralph and undetermined wife. She was born in Tennessee. Also see Additions & Corrections Mary Catherine died 02 December 2013 in New Jersey

Child of Jerome Alvin and undetermined 1 is:

\+ 11 i. Donna J.[4] Alvin, born 31 March 1954 in Cooper Hospital, Camden, Camden, New Jersey.

Child of Jerome Alvin and Mary Deitz is:

12 i. Sandra[4] Alvin, Adopted child.

NOTES

8. Jerome Alvin (1921–2005)
"Jerry"

He was raised in Indiana, Allegheny Co., Pennsylvania. In World War II, he enlisted in the U.S. Army on 12 September 1942 in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. He was honorably discharged September 1943 at the rank of Corporal. He was married at the time, but it is not known now whether his marriage was to the same woman as who was the mother of his daughter, Donna. He divorced Donna's mother.

Occupations of Jerome Alvin (from personal information):
Tool, die, and model maker, RCA, Camden, Camden Co., New Jersey, for 39 years
Supervisor of physical plant for a hotel, Runnemede, Camden Co., New Jersey
1978-1990: Supervisor of Buildings and Grounds, Mount Laurel Township Public Schools, New Jersey

Residences of Jerome Alvin (from personal information):
Numerous residences in the Camden–Gloucester Cos. area, New Jersey
Later career and retirement: Egg Harbor City, Atlantic Co., New Jersey
Late-life care: Ocean Point Healthcare Center, Somers Point, New Jersey

Mary Catherine (Dietz) Alvin (wife of Jerome Alvin)
"Mary Catherine"

She had previously been married to Mynes, with whom she had a daughter, Marilyn.

Marilyn Mynes married McDonald, a man with grown children, and with whom she had at least two children of her own. They subsequently divorced. Also see Additions & Corrections

12. Sandra Alvin Also see Additions & Corrections

She was adopted by Jerome Alvin and his wife (mother of Donna). She became a nun. In 2005, she resided in Cincinnati, Ohio.

---

10. Evelyn[3] Alvin (Joseph[2], Jerome[1]) was born after 12 April 1930, and died after January 2005. She married Zook.
Also see Additions & Corrections

[826] I have forgotten her name as well as the name of her second husband. When I knew them, they lived in a small apartment in Cherry Hill, New Jersey, on Kings Highway near Haddonfield.

Child of Evelyn Alvin and Zook is:
13 i. Jack[4] Zook. He married Iris.

Generation No. 4

11. Donna J.[4] Alvin (Jerome J.[3], Joseph[2], Jerome[1]) was born 31 March 1954 in Cooper Hospital, Camden, Camden Co., New Jersey. Anderson Family
Collateral Genealogy
(10 descendants)

The genealogy of the Anderson family, as it relates to our Spamer lineage and as currently understood, is as follows. The lineage here only lists the immediate ancestry of Jane Anderson. She maintains her own exhaustive database of genealogical data, which due to its size is not added to the present collateral genealogy.

Descendants of David Anderson

Generation No. 1

1. David[1] Anderson was born 03 December 1797. He married Nancy. She was born 09 September 1807.

Child of David Anderson and Nancy is:
\+ 2 i. George W.[2] Anderson, born 13 February 1827 in Pennsylvania; died March 1910.

Generation No. 2

2. George W.[2] Anderson (David[1]) was born 13 February 1827 in Pennsylvania, and died March 1910. He married Louisa Kretzinger 24 March 1851 in Tuscarawas Co., Ohio, daughter of John Kretzinger and Mary Sawyer. She was born 12 February 1834 in New York or Pennsylvania, and died 07 May 1909 in Franklin Township, Tuscarawas Co., Ohio.

Child of George Anderson and Louisa Kretzinger is:
\+ 3 i. Charles Leroy[3] Anderson, born 22 September 1861 in Franklin Township, Tuscarawas Co., Ohio; died 03 May 1931 in County Home, Goshen Twp., Tuscarawas Co., Ohio.

NOTES

2. George W. Anderson (1827–1910)

At the time of the 1860 U.S. census he was a laborer. The 1880 census indicates that both of his parents were born in Pennsylvania.

Residences of George W. Anderson (from U.S. censuses):
1860: Wayne Twp., Tuscarawas Co., Ohio (Dundee post office)
1880: Franklin Twp., Tuscarawas Co., Ohio

Louisa (Kretzinger) Anderson (1834–1909)
(wife of George W. Anderson)

Her date of birth given in family Bible is 15 February 1833. The 1880 U.S. census indicates that both of her parents were born in Bavaria. Her death certificate indicates that she was born in Pennsylvania.

She was buried 9 May 1909 in Grandview Cemetery, Strasburg, Ohio.

The marriage of George W. Anderson and Louisa Kretzinger was officiated by Rev. Francis Hildt.

Generation No. 3

3. Charles Leroy[3] Anderson (George W.[2], David[1]) was born 22 September 1861 in Franklin Twp., Tuscarawas Co., Ohio, and died 03 May 1931 in County Home, Goshen Twp., Tuscarawas Co., Ohio. He married Anne (Lydia A.) Hoover 22 March 1881 in Tuscarawas Co., Ohio, daughter of Joseph Hoover and Margaret Benell. She was born 1862 possibly in Strasburg, Tuscarawas Co., Ohio, and died 03 December 1931 in Union Hospital, Dover, Tuscarawas Co., Ohio.

Child of Charles Anderson and Anne Hoover is:
\+ 4 i. Grover Cleveland[4] Anderson, born 20 January 1885 in Strasburg, Ohio; died 13 March 1959 in Union Hospital, Dover, Ohio.

NOTES

3. Charles Leroy Anderson (1861–1931)

His date of birth is listed in a family Bible as 27 September 1856.

At the time of the 1900 U.S. census he was in clay mining. His death certificate indicates he was a coal miner.

He was buried 6 May 1931 in East Avenue Cemetery, New Philadelphia, Tuscarawas Co., Ohio. There may be no grave marker.

Anne (Hoover) Anderson (1862–1931)
(wife of Charles Leroy Anderson)

At the time of her death she resided in New Philadelphia, Tuscarawas Co., Ohio.

Generation No. 4

4. Grover Cleveland[4] Anderson (Charles Leroy[3], George W.[2], David[1]) was born 20 January 1885 in Strasburg, Ohio, and died 13 March 1959 in Union Hospital, Dover, Ohio. He married Della Bernice Fox 15

June 1912 in Tuscarawas Co., Ohio, daughter of undetermined husband and Orpha Fox. She was born 14 June 1895, and died 27 November 1944 in Dover, Ohio.

Child of Grover Anderson and Della Fox is:

\+ 5 i. Robert Glenn[5] Anderson, born 14 May 1926 in Dover, Ohio; died 26 February 2007 in Arbors at Canton, Canton, Ohio.

NOTES

4. Grover Cleveland Anderson (1885–1959)

His marriage certificate with Della Fox gives his name as Charles Grover Cleveland Anderson.

He was a coal miner.

At the time of his death he resided at 218½ N. Tuscarawas Ave., Dover, Tuscarawas Co., Ohio. He was buried 16 March 1959 in Maple Grove Cemetery, Dover, Tuscarawas Co., Ohio; no marker.

Della (Fox) Anderson (1895–1944)
(wife of Grover Cleveland Anderson)

Her death certificate lists her father as Christian Fox and her mother as Orpha Ankney; the informant was Lester Anderson. Her birth certificate lists no father's name, and she is listed only as illegitimate; date of birth may be 14 June 1894 but was recorded in 1895.[827]

At the time of the 1910 U.S. census she resided in the household of Homer Casebeer.

Her name on her marriage certificate is given as Della Bernice Knecht.

She was buried 30 November 1944 in Maple Grove Cemetery, Dover, Tuscarawas Co., Ohio. Her grave marker appears to have been turned 180 degrees.[828]

Generation No. 5

5. Robert Glenn[5] Anderson (Grover Cleveland[4], Charles Leroy[3], George W.[2], David[1]) was born 14 May 1926 in Dover, Ohio, and died 26 February 2007 at "Arbors at Canton", Canton, Ohio. 195. Rosalie Elisabeth[6] Karner (Susan Mae[5] Spamer, Peter Heinrich Christian[4], Johann Conrad[3], Johann Conrad[2], Johannes[1]) was born 11 June 1903 in Maryland, and died 10 April 1967. She married John A. Little. He was born in New York.

Child of Rosalie Karner and John Little is:
281 i. Lucia Jean[7] Little, born 28 January 1940 in New York. She married Douglas Freeth 1964.

NOTES

At the time of the 1930 U.S. census, Rosalie Elisabeth Karner (1903–1967) [No. 195] was a school librarian.

There is a ship's passenger record of John, Rosalie, and Lucia Little arriving in New York, 13 July 1954, aboard R.M.S. Queen Elizabeth, having sailed from Southampton, England, on 8 July. They were First Class passengers and traveled with eight pieces of luggage. No further information is had regarding the Littles or their voyage, other than the listing of their U.S. passport numbers: John, 332643; Rosalie, 332614; Lucia, 332613.

1930 census: 531 E. Lincoln Ave., Mount Vernon, Westchester Co., New York (apartment?)
1948 Westport directory: Roosevelt Rd.
1959 Stamford directory: Stamford
1961 Stamford directory: 16 Revere Dr.

W. Dale Wassell was a part of the Wassell Organization, Inc., a company started in Westport, Connecticut, by F. Lloyd Wassell (president), supplying office products and services. The products included office-management systems that presaged modern computerized systems but used electro-mechanical devices. (Also see Frank Lloyd Wassell in the Wassell Family collateral genealogy.)

During 1948-1952 at least, the Wassell Organization, Inc., had offices at the intersection of West State St. and Sylvan Road, Westport, Connecticut.

The Canadian Intellectual Property Office has a listing for Patent No. CA 490905, to Willard Dale Wassell, 3 March 1953, for “Record Filing and Signaling Constructions”.

When Margaret and W. Dale Wassell resided in Stamford, Connecticut, they were coincidentally near her uncle, John Ward Spamer, and his daughter, Katharine S. Spamer. It is not known whether either party knew of the other's presence. (I do not recall Katharine mentioning them.)

When Margaret Karner married W. Dale Wassell, she joined into a circuitous genealogical connection with George Washington, through the family of Washington's mother, Mary Ball Washington. That collateral genealogy is listed below, after the Wassell Family collateral genealogy.

Spamer Family genealogy continues after the following collateral genealogy

Wassell Family
Collateral Genealogy
(23 descendants)

The genealogy of the Wassell family, as it relates to our Spamer lineage and as currently understood, is as follows. A paternal lineage is listed for the earliest Wassell generations. A maternal lineage is listed, through Emma Rowswell, the mother of W. Dale Wassell, which also touches on the connection with the extended Washington family (as is outlined more fully in a separate collateral genealogy, following this one).

A biographical sketch of Harry B. Wassell [No. 7 in the maternal lineage, below] was published in a Pittsburgh area history.[829] The sketch included a genealogical history of the family, including the connection to the extended Washington family that is likewise been mentioned herein; this volume has been the source of some the genealogical data listed here, in addition to the usual public-records sources that have contributed additional information. The published sketch (as of 1922) is reproduced below, which pertains to several of the individuals cited in the Wassell Family collateral genealogy. Pertinent names are shown in bold.

> "HARRY B. WASSELL—One of the leading members of the Allegheny county bar, widely known in his profession, and also in other activities, is Harry B. Wassell, of Pittsburgh. Mr. Wassell comes of a very old and honored family of Staffordshire, England, many generations of this name having been connected with the steel industry, in that country, and builders of engines. The family coat-of-arms is as follows:
> Arms—Or, three fleurs-de-lis gules, a chief ermine.
> "John Wassell, grandfather of Harry B. Wassell, and the fist of this family to emigrate from their native land, came to the United States in his early manhood, bringing his young wife and children, and settled at Bradys Bend, Armstrong county, Pa., where he became identified with the Bradys Bend Iron works, the association continuing throughout his active lifetime. He died Jan. 13, 1884, at a ripe old age. He married, May 11, 1826, at the old church in Sedgeley, England, May Turley Shaw, who died May 7, 1841.
> "William Wassell, son of John and May Turley (Shaw) Wassell, was born May 22, 1838, at Claridge House, Staffordshire, England, and was a child of six years when he emigrated to America with his family. He was educated in the schools of Armstrong county, Pa. At an early age he became interested in the same line of endeavor as that of the family tradition, and became a roller in the employ of the Carnegie Steel Company, at their Upper Union Mills, continuing for a number of years. Later he took an active interest in various Pittsburgh enterprises. William Wassell was one of the first to enlist in defense of the Union, in 1861, and as a member of the Fifteenth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, saw service in many important engagements under the late General Palmer, of Denver, Col.[830] In later life he was a member of the Union Veteran Legion, and of Duquesne Post, No. 259, Grand Army of the Republic. He was a devoutly religious man, an honored member and deacon of the Shady Avenue Baptist Church. During the latter years of his life he served as tipstaff in the Orphans' Court. He died June 12, 1911, and although more than a decade has now passed since that time his name is still widely honored in many circles.

"William Wassell married, Nov. 13, 1873, Emma Rowswell, daughter of William and Mary Ann (Rhoudebush) Rowswell, of Pittsburgh. The family of Emma (Rowswell) Wassell traces back through four generations of maternal ancestors to the Ball family, famous in Colonial history, earliest mention of which appears n the person of William Ball, of Berks, who died in 1480. Through ancient and incomplete records the line is traced by the head of the family in each generation, Robert Ball, of Berkham, being son of William Ball, died 1543; William Ball, son of Robert Ball, died 1550; John Ball, son of William Ball, died 1599, married (first) Alice Haynes, their children being William, Richard, Elizabeth and James; married (second) Agnes Holloway, their children being Joh, Robert, Thomas and Rachael; John Ball, son of John, and Agnes (Holloway) Ball, died 1628, married Elizabeth Webb; Colonel William Ball, son of John and Elisabeth (Webb) Ball, died 1680, married Hannah Atheral; Captain William Ball, son of colonel William and Hannah (Atheral) Ball, died 1699, married Margaret Downman; William Ball, son of Captain William and Margaret (Downman) Ball, died 1740, married Mary ———. Joseph Ball, brother of William Ball, was the father of Mary Ball, who became the mother of George Washington, first president of the United States. Mary Ball, daughter of William and Mary Ball, died 1816. She married Thomas Brown, who received a grant of land for services to the cause of the Nation during the Revolutionary War as a member of Second Troop, First Regiment, Light Dragoons, Continental Troops, under command of Captain John Watts. Rebecca Brown, daughter of Thomas and Mary (Ball) Brown, was born in 1772, and died in 1802; married Joseph Sailor, son of Joseph and Hannah (Holawy) Sailor, of Ohio. Mary Ann Sailor, their daughter, married Daniel Rhoudebush, of Clermont county, Ohio. Mary Ann Rhoudebush, their daughter, married William Rowswell, and of their children, Emma, born Aug 16, 1852, married William Wassell, as noted above. Mr. and Mrs. Wassell were the parents of eight children: Clara F., George K., of Dallas, Tex., deceased; Harry B., of whom extended mention follows; Jennie M., wife of Oscar B. Winey, of Pittsburgh; F. Lloyd, of Chicago, Ill.; Martha W., wife of Joseph C. Faloon, of Pittsburgh; Helen B.; and W. Dale, of Pittsburgh.

"Harry B. Wassell, third child and eldest living son of William and Emma (Rowswell) Wassell, was born in the old Fifteenth Ward of Pittsburgh, Dec. 2, 1877. He began his preparation for his career in the public schools of his native city. Early in life he entered upon the duties of office boy, in the employ of the Carnegie Steel Company. Making this only a means to an end, however, he entered Bucknell University, Lewisburg, Pa., from which he was graduated with honors in his class of 1900. Thereafter entering Pittsburgh Law School, he was graduated from that institution in 1903, and on September 26, of the same year, was admitted to the Allegheny county bar. He has since practiced continuously in this city, winning prominence in corporation law, handling the affairs of some of the foremost operators in coal, oil and copper, and becoming an authority in this branch of the law.

"Fraternally, Mr. Wassell is widely known, having served as national secretary of the Phi Gamma Delta fraternity. He is a member of Fellowship Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons; of Tancred Commandery, Knights Templar; and of Syria Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. His clubs are the Duquesne, the Union, and the Pittsburgh Athletic Association, also the Oakmont Country Club, where he finds his favorite recreation on the golf links. He is a member of the American, the Pennsylvania State and the Allegheny County Bar associations. Early in February, 1918, Mr. Wassell volunteered for service in the World War, and after many months was recommended for a commission as captain, on Oct. 30, 1918, but with the armistice bringing an end to hostilities, the commission was never issued. Mr. Wassell is a Republican by political affiliation, is a member of the First Baptist Church, of Pittsburgh, and broadly interested in every phase of public progress.

"Mr. Wassell married, Nov. 30, 1920, Edith Taylor, second daughter of William D. and Mary V. (Gwynne) Taylor, and great-granddaughter of Rev. John Taylor, first rector of historic Trinity Church."

The 1890 Pittsburgh city directory also lists a William H. Wassell, Editor of Town Talk, with an address of 77 Diamond St., Room 42. He could be a family relation.

A United Press International wire service item noticed F. Lloyd Wassell in 1963, then 73 years of age.[831] He was quoted as saying, "If you like your work, you don't think in terms of success—but of progress", and "Success is the spring in your walk at the end of a day's hard work that proves your problems haven't licked you." Wassell had begun his professional career during the Depression as a "methods engineer" or "efficiency expert", have earlier worked shoveling coal, delivering newspapers, and selling magazines, then in management for office appliance companies. He devised mechanical control boards that displayed production progress and allowed the integrated control of machines, labor, and materials. His entrepreneurial philosophy was a simple one, as stated in the wire service item:

[831] UPI wire service, "'. . . The Spring in Your Walk': 73- Year-Old Industrialist Prefers to Think in Terms of Progress", as cited from Dallas Morning News historical archives, 28 Apr 1963.

> "One thing Lloyd Wassell cannot understand is young men who cling to salaried jobs and refuse to give their abilities full rein. 'This country was built by men willing to gamble on their ability to make good,' he said. 'In their demand for security, young men today are actually sharing their potential income with four or five others who fail to make good.'"

In January 1949, the first two of ten "Wassell Units" were installed by the Pennsylvania Railroad in its Penn Station Reservation Bureau in New York. Wassell Units were mechanical reservation systems operated by clerks with headphones who were in communication with ticket agents.[832]

15. Harry Wassell (ca. 1917–)

The 1948 Westport, Connecticut, directory lists a Martha Wassell, widow of Harry Wassell, residing at 70 S. Treadwell Ave. It is not clear whether she is the widow of this Harry Wassell. The 1950 directory lists her as the widow of Harry B. Wassell and being then married to William Buchroeder.

18. Charles Wassell (ca. 1921–)

The 1948 Westport, Connecticut, directory lists a Jacqueline Wassell, widow of Charles Wassell, residing on Bauer Place (post office Southport RD 2). The 1950 directory lists her as the widow of Charles and being then married to Thomas W. Burton.

11. William L.[6] Wassell (Emma[5] Rowswell, Mary Ann[4] Rhoudesbush, Mary Ann[3] Sailor, Joseph[2], Joseph[1]) was born about 1891 in Pennsylvania. He married Georgine E. She was born about 1893 in Pennsylvania.

Children of William Wassell and Georgine are:

21 i. Harry[7] Wassell, born about January 1917 in Pennsylvania.
22 ii. Frank Wassell, born 25 September 1917 in Chicago, Illinois.
23 iii. Elizabeth Wassell, born about November 1918 in Pennsylvania.

NOTES

At the time of the 1920 U.S. census, William L. Wassell (ca. 1891–) [No. 11] was the proprietor of an office supply company; he resided at 3400 Dartmouth Ave., Dallas, Texas.

Frank Wassell (1917–) [No. 22] is listed on the passenger list of the S.S. Amor, arriving in New York City on 14 July 1935, having departed from Curacao. His residence was then listed as 48[?] Kilaire Rd., St. Davids, Pennsylvania.

The Circuitous Link to the Family of George Washington

When Margaret Karner, daughter of Frederick and Susan Mae (Spamer) Karner, married W. Dale Wassell, she joined into a circuitous genealogical connection to George Washington—the common ancestor was George Washington's great grandfather, William Ball (1614/15–1699). The genealogy, descending from Col. William Ball, passes through five additional marriages where it joins the Ball family with Mary (Ball) Brown (died 1816), who was a first cousin to Mary (Ball) Washington (1709/09–1789), mother of George Washington.

Descendants of William Ball

Generation No. 1

1. Col. William[1] Ball was born between 1614–1615 in Millenbeck, Lancastershire, England, and died 1699. He married Hannah Atherold 02 July 1638 in London, England. She was born between 1614–1615, and died between 1694–1695.

Children of William Ball and Hannah Atherold are:
+ 2 i. William[2] Ball, died 1740.
+ 3 ii. Joseph Ball, born 24 May 1649 in England; died 11 July 1711 in Epping Forest, Lancaster Co., Virginia.

Generation No. 2

2. William[2] Ball (William[1]) died 1740. He married Mary.

Child of William Ball and Mary is:
+ 4 i. Mary[3] Ball, died 1816.

---

3. Joseph[2] Ball (William[1]) was born 24 May 1649 in England, and died 11 July 1711 in Epping Forest, Lancaster Co., Virginia. He married Mary Bennett between 1706-1707. She was born in West Chester, England, and died between 1720-1721.

Child of Joseph Ball and Mary Bennett is:
+ 5 i. Mary[3] Ball, born between 1708-1709 in Lancaster Co., Virginia; died 25 August 1789 in Fredericksburg, Virginia.

Generation No. 3

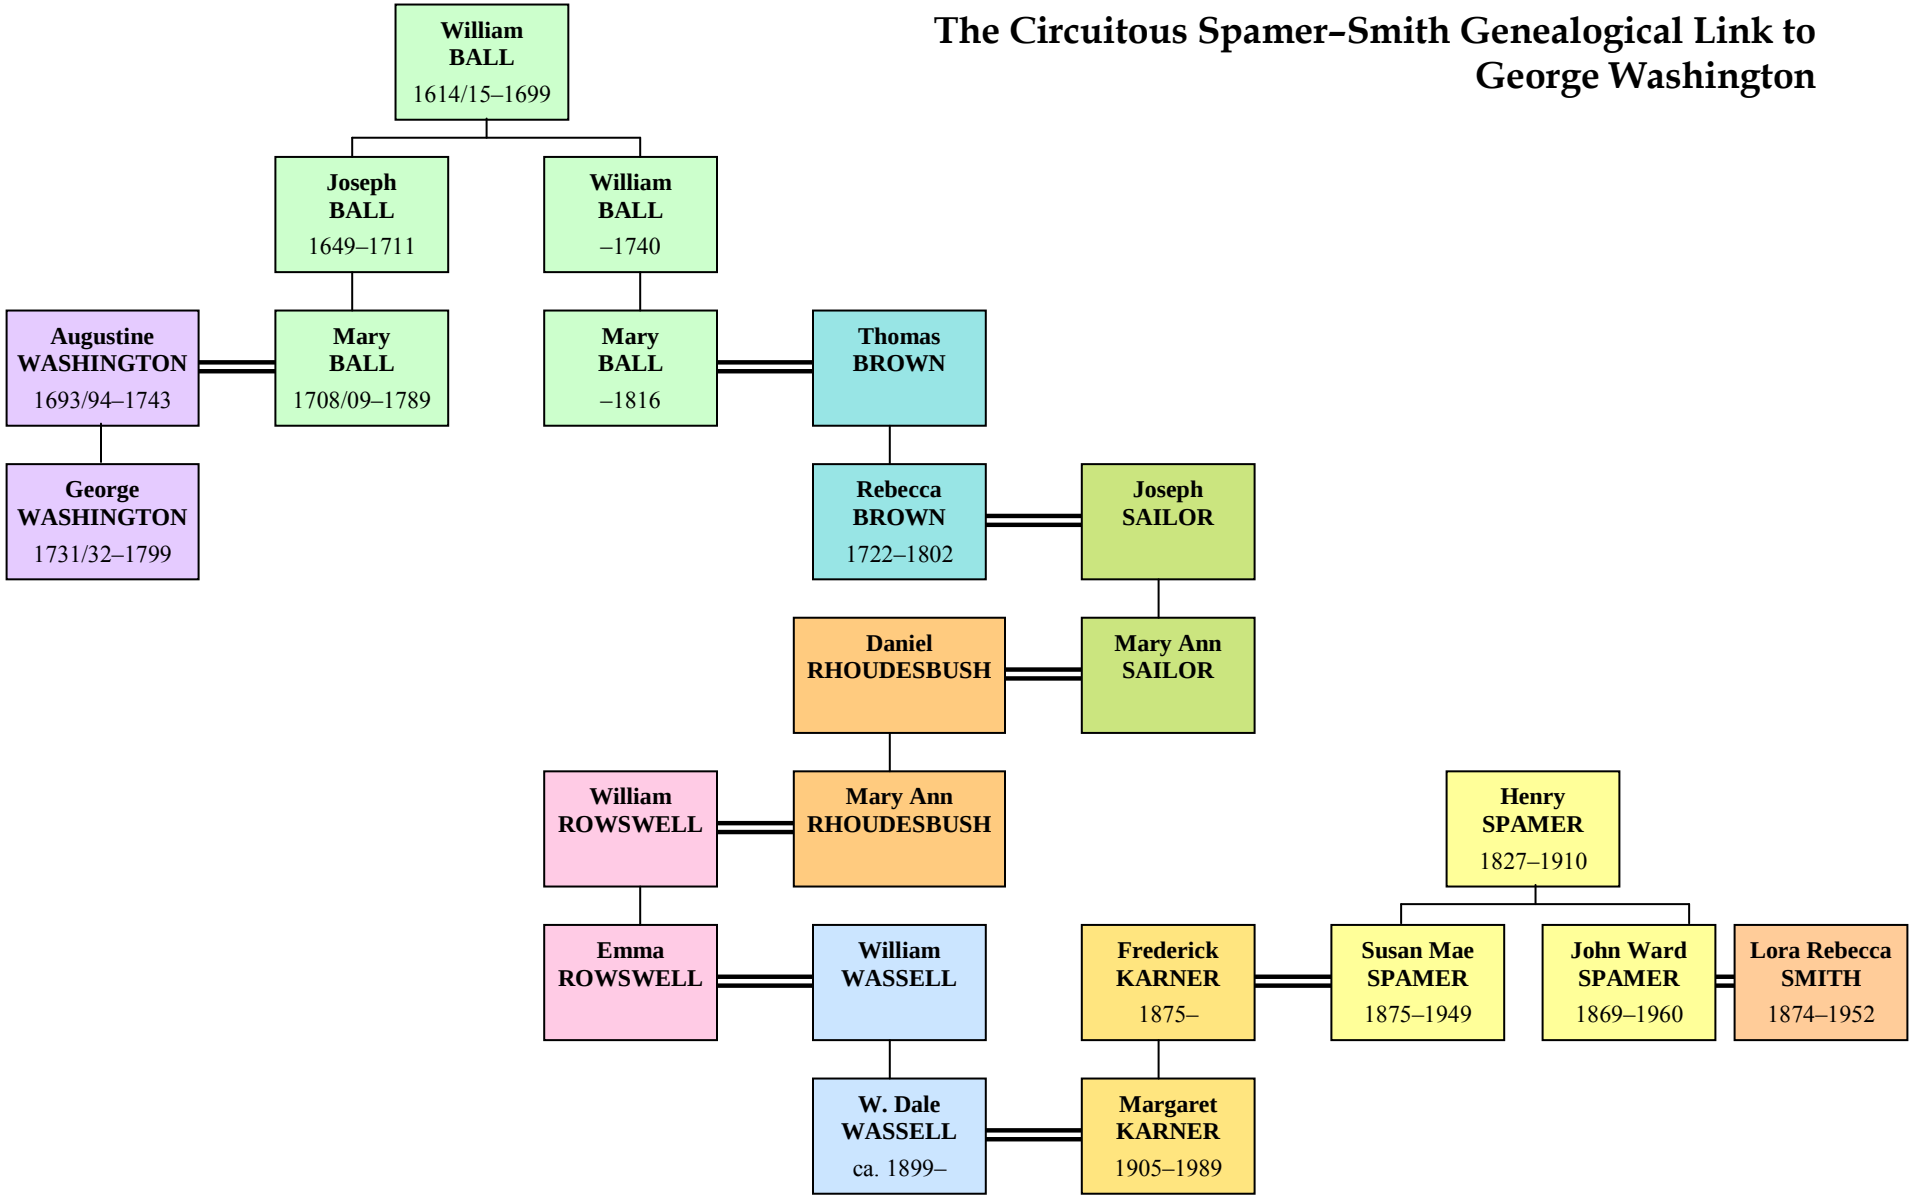
4. Mary[3] Ball (William[2], William[1]) died 1816. She married Thomas Brown.

Child of Mary Ball and Thomas Brown is:
+ 6 i. Rebecca[4] Brown, born 1722; died 1802.

NOTES

During the Revolutionary War, Thomas Brown was with the 2nd Troop, 1st Regiment, Light Dragoons, under Capt. John Watts.

The Circuitous Spamer–Smith Genealogical Link to George Washington



5. Mary[3] Ball (Joseph[2], William[1]) was born between 1708-1709 in Lancaster Co., Virginia, and died 25 August 1789 in Fredericksburg, Virginia. She married Capt. Augustine Washington 06 March 1730/31 in Fredericksburg, Virginia, son of Laurence Washington and Mildred Warner. He was born between 1693-1694 in Wakefield, Westmoreland Co., Virginia, and died 12 April 1743 in Ferry Farm, King George Co., Virginia.

Children of Mary Ball and Augustine Washington are:

7 i. George[4] Washington, born 11 February 1731/32 at Pope's Creek, Wakefield, Westmoreland Co., Virginia; died 14 December 1799 at Mount Vernon, Fairfax Co., Virginia. He married Martha Dandridge 06 January 1759 at St. Peter's Church, New Kent Co., Virginia; born 21 June 1731 in New Kent Co., Virginia; died 22 May 1802 at Mount Vernon, Fairfax Co., Virginia.

8 ii. Betty Washington, born 1732.

9 iii. Samuel Washington, born 1733.

10 iv. John Augustine Washington, born 1735.

11 v. Charles Washington, born 1737.

12 vi. Mildred Washington, born 1738.

NOTES

Gen. George Washington commanded the Continental Army during the war for American independence, and he was the first President of the United States. His remains and those of his wife, Martha, are in a mausoleum at Mount Vernon. In this venue at least, it is superfluous to summarize anything more about George and Martha Washington.

Generation No. 4

6. Rebecca[4] Brown (Mary[3] Ball, William[2], William[1]) was born 1722, and died 1802. She married Joseph Sailor, son of Joseph Sailor and Hannah Holaway.

Child of Rebecca Brown and Joseph Sailor is:

\+ 13 i. Mary Ann[5] Sailor.

Generation No. 5

13. Mary Ann[5] Sailor (Rebecca[4] Brown, Mary[3] Ball, William[2], William[1]) She married Daniel Rhoudesbush.

Child of Mary Sailor and Daniel Rhoudesbush is:

\+ 14 i. Mary Ann[6] Rhoudesbush.

Generation No. 6

14. Mary Ann[6] Rhoudesbush (Mary Ann[5] Sailor, Rebecca[4] Brown, Mary[3] Ball, William[2], William[1]) She married William Rowswell.

Child of Mary Rhoudesbush and William Rowswell is:

\+ 15 i. Emma[7] Rowswell.

Generation No. 7

15. Emma[7] Rowswell (Mary Ann[6] Rhoudesbush, Mary Ann[5] Sailor, Rebecca[4] Brown, Mary[3] Ball, William[2], William[1]) She married William Wassell.

Children of Emma Rowswell and William Wassell are:

+	16	i.	William L.[8] Wassell, born about 1891 in Pennsylvania.
+	17	ii.	W. Dale Wassell, born about 1899 in Pennsylvania; died after 1960.

Generation No. 8

16. William L.[8] Wassell (Emma[7] Rowswell, Mary Ann[6] Rhoudesbush, Mary Ann[5] Sailor, Rebecca[4] Brown, Mary[3] Ball, William[2], William[1]) was born about 1891 in Pennsylvania. He married Georgia. She was born about 1893 in Pennsylvania.

Children of William Wassell and Georgia are:

18	i.	Harry[9] Wassell, born about January 1917 in Pennsylvania.
19	ii.	Frank Wassell, born about September 1917 in Pennsylvania.
20	iii.	Elizabeth Wassell, born about November 1918 in Pennsylvania.

17. W. Dale[8] Wassell (Emma[7] Rowswell, Mary Ann[6] Rhoudesbush, Mary Ann[5] Sailor, Rebecca[4] Brown, Mary[3] Ball, William[2], William[1]) was born about 1899 in Pennsylvania, and died after 1960. He married Margaret Helen Karner, daughter of Frederick Karner and Susan Spamer. She was born 18 January 1905 in Maryland, and died 15 May 1989.

210. Velmore B.[7] Spamer (Lawrence Blakeman[6], Reuben Olive[5], Heinrich Conrad Ludwig[4], Johann Conrad[3], Johann Conrad[2], Johannes[1]) was born 26 September 1916 in Stratford, Fairfield Co., Connecticut, and died 20 September 1989 in Stratford, Fairfield Co., Connecticut. He married Claribel May Nothnagle 01 May 1943 in the Nothnagle home, Stratford, Fairfield Co., Connecticut, daughter of Harold E. Nothnagle and Claribel Lewis. She was born 22 November 1916 in Connecticut, and died 30 October 1998 in Connecticut.

Children of Velmore Spamer and Claribel Nothnagle are:

	283	i.	Laurence Edgar[8] Spamer, born 1944.
	284	ii.	James Blakeman Spamer, born 29 August 1947 in Bridgeport Hospital, Bridgeport, Fairfield Co., Connecticut; died 04 July 2000 in Dallas, Dallas Co., Texas. He married Maryann Cooley 08 September 1979; born 16 March 1944.
+	285	iii.	Emmy Lou Spamer, born 1950.
	286	iv.	Elisabeth Ann Spamer, born 1954. She married Rand Enas 14 May 1977 in Stratford, Fairfield Co., Connecticut. Also see Additions & Corrections

NOTES

Although Velmore and Claribel Spamer lived not far from Katharine S. Spamer, in Connecticut, I do not know if either party was aware of the other's presence; certainly Katharine never mentioned them. A. M. Spamer, in correspondence, inquired of Katharine if she knew of Velmore and Claribel, but I do not know what her response was to him.

210. Velmore B. Spamer (1916–1989) Also see Additions & Corrections

In the 1930 U.S. census, Velmore B. Spamer is mis-indexed as "Velman" B. Spamer.

Velmore B. Spamer enlisted in the U.S. Army on 17 January 1941; the occupational category noted for him included general bookkeeper or clerk. He had had a post-graduate college education at the time of his enlistment. In the service, he attained the rank of Staff Sergeant in the U.S. Army Medical Corps. By the time of his marriage he was in Officers Candidate School.

Velmore Spamer graduated from the Bridgeport Engineering Institute, Bridgeport, Connecticut, and the University of Connecticut.

The "Spamer Families of Baltimore" summarizes for Velmore Spamer: [833]

> Velmore went to business school after graduating from high school then studied electrical engineering. He became involved with politics and was secretary to Raymond E. Baldwin when > he was elected governor of Connecticut.[834] He remained with the state for 35 years working in the State Auditor, Welfare and Highway Departments and retired as Assistant Commissioner of Transportation. During WWII he was the first draftee from Stratford, served in the Pacific Area, was sent to O.C.S. and was discharged in 1948. After his discharge he became involved with the reserves and retired as a Lt. Col.

[833] "Spamer Families of Baltimore", p. 6.

From before 1947 to 1989, Velmore B. Spamer's residence was at 121 Huntington Rd., Stratford, Fairfield Co., Connecticut. It seems that the Spamer residence no longer stands. The website of the Stratford Baptist Church mentions that they had acquired the property:

> In February 2001 the Spamer property on the corner next door was purchased to make room for more parking for our growing church. The former Spamer home also provided the potential for housing church offices or temporary living quarters.[835]

Claribel (Nothnagle) Spamer (1916–1998)
(wife of Velmore Spamer)

Claribel Nothnagle was a graduate of Middlebury College, Middlebury, Vermont, 1938; and Boston University. She resided in Stratford, Fairfield Co., Connecticut all her life. She and her mother are listed as descendants of the widow Elizabeth Curtis, an early settler of Stratford, Connecticut.[836]

Her engagement to Velmore Spamer was announced in The New York Times on 25 November 1942, and the wedding plans were announced 24 April 1943.[837]

[834] Raymond Earl Baldwin (1893-1986), Governor (Republican) of Connecticut 1939-1941, 1943-1946. Velmore Spamer must have worked with Baldwin during his first term as governor. Earlier, Baldwin had served as Prosecutor in the Stratford Town Court (1931-1933) and in the House of the Connecticut General Assembly (1930-1935). The Biographical Directory of the United States Congress records that he was "born in Rye, Westchester County, N.Y., August 31, 1893; moved to Middletown, Conn., in 1903 and attended the public schools; graduated, Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn., 1916; entered Yale University in 1916 but, when war was declared, enlisted as a seaman in the United States Navy; assigned to officers' training school, commissioned an ensign in February 1918, and promoted to lieutenant (jg.) in September 1918; resigned from the Navy in August 1919 and returned to Yale University Law School, graduating in 1921; admitted to the bar in 1921 and practiced in New Haven and Bridgeport, Conn.; prosecutor of Stratford Town Court 1927-1930; judge of Stratford Town Court 1931-1933; member of the State house of representatives 1931-1933, serving as majority leader in 1933; resumed the practice of law 1933-1938; town chairman of Stratford, Conn. 1935-1937; Governor of Connecticut 1939-1940; unsuccessful candidate for reelection as Governor in 1940; again elected Governor in 1942 and 1944, and served until his resignation on December 25, 1946, having been elected United States Senator; elected as a Republican to the United States Senate on November 5, 1946, to fill the vacancy in the term ending January 3, 1947, caused by the death of Francis T. Maloney, and at the same time was elected for the term commencing January 3, 1947, and served from December 27, 1946, until his resignation on December 16, 1949; associate justice of the Connecticut Supreme Court of Errors; appointed chief justice in 1959 and served until his retirement in 1963; chairman, Connecticut Constitutional Convention 1965; died in Fairfield, Conn., October 4, 1986; interment in Indian Hill Cemetery, Middletown, Conn." [843] Thule Air Base was constructed a part of a worldwide system of modern air bases in the years following World War II. During the war, the site was one of several Greenlandic bases operated as weather stations by U.S. and Danish personnel. The Thule Air Base site was selected as a precise midway point between New York and Moscow, selected as a strategic point for intercepting enemy bomber attacks approaching North America from the Northeast via polar routes. Ratified agreements with Denmark, whose sovereignty includes Greenland, established NATO military facilities in Greenland beginning in 1951. Thule Air Base was constructed in secret as Operation Blue Jay between 1951 and 1953, a construction job said to have been comparable in scale and complexity as that of the Panama Canal. An armada of U.S. Navy ships conveyed 12,000 men and 300,000 tons of cargo from Norfolk, Virginia, arriving in Greenland on 9 Jul 1951, and construction took place 24 hours a day. The air base at Thule was designed to be a forward base of operations for Strategic Air Command nuclear bombers (B-36s, B-47s, and KC-97c at first) and tankers, centered around a runway 10,000 ft in length and 200 ft in width and a fuel storage depot of 100 million gallons (the largest fuel farm in the U.S. Department of Defense). A 1,000 ft pier was constructed to receive ships. Air operations began 11 Sep 1951, and exactly one year later the first fighter interceptors, four F-9As, began operations out of Thule. In Spring 1953, the village of Thule and its Inuit residents, who declared that base operations had disrupted their cultural survival, were moved from the base of Mt. Dundas 65 mi north to Qaanaaq on Red Cliff Peninsula. The Thule base was expanded continuously, and military operational groups of various kinds were assigned to and reassigned from Thule during its decades of service. In 1982, Thule became a U.S. Air Force Space Command base, providing for space surveillance, missile warning, and satellite command and control; with expansions it remains the largest satellite tracking facility in the world. However, there have never been any permanently assigned aircraft at Thule, and it is the only U.S. Air Force facility with a tugboat. Aerospace control includes ensuring air sovereignty and air defense of the airspace of Canada and the United States." NORAD headquarters, located at Peterson Air Force Base, Colorado Springs, Colorado, is supported by a command and control center at the Cheyenne Mountain Operations Center a short distance away, which "serves as a central collection and coordination facility for a worldwide system of sensors designed to provide NORAD with an accurate picture of any aerospace threat." The Cheyenne Mountain facility, construction of which was begun in June 1961, has been the photogenic focus of numerous action films and the subject of innumerable articles extolling its architectural and engineering uniqueness. The facility is now no longer used as a day-to-day operations center because of the changed dimensions of the world political scene, most notably the downfall of the Soviet Union; but it remains at a full state of readiness should highly secure operations be required again at a nearly impregnable site. "Will"

As of 2008, William Jasper Spamer still resides at "Rockland", the Spamer homestead in Perry Hall, Baltimore Co., Maryland. His son, Stanley, resides with him.

With his brother, Morris ("Bud"), Will Spamer operated a recreational airstrip on the farm as part of Will's avocation of restoring old biplanes and building experimental miniplanes.[845] The house served also as a construction shed for numerous projects, which attracted pilots to assist from all around the area—the so-called "Spamers International". As his wife, Hazel, recounted to a reporter, "I've had the wings and tail surfaces in this kitchen, but I draw the line when they want to bring an airplane engine into the kitchen." The north–south landing strip, 2,400 feet long, was cut from the current crop being grown, with an east–west crosswind runway just 600 feet long. "Spamer's is not for the casual pilot," the reporter wrote. "The final approach is a dog leg, coming in over the trees in a gradual turn. Miss the landing row . . . and you'll wind up buying some of the crop." (More than a "dog leg", the airstrip followed the land's contour, curving through an arc of more than 45 degrees, with trees on the approach [or take-off] near both ends.)

NOTES

246. William Andrew Spamer, Sr. (1900–1994)

At the time of the 1930 U.S. census, William Andrew Spamer, Sr. resided at 1517 Register St., Baltimore, Maryland. He resided in Stuart, Martin Co., Florida, at the time of his death.

Martha (Hughes) Spamer (1904–1977)
(wife of William Andrew Spamer, Sr.)

The family of Martha Hughes has thus far not been located in census information. However, the 1920 U.S. census for the unincorporated Flohrville Village, Freedom District of Carroll Co., Maryland, includes one Martha W. Hughes, aged 15, born in Maryland. She is listed as sister-in-law in the household of Emory G. and Florence G. Barnes, in whose household also was their daughter, Blanche G., aged 7.

Martha Hughes Spamer resided in Towson, Maryland, at the time of her death. She is buried in Parkwood Cemetery.

315. William Andrew Spamer, Jr. (1922–1995)

William Andrew Spamer, Jr. enlisted in the U.S. Army on 16 June 1944 at Fort George G. Meade, Maryland. He had had one year of high school education at the time, and his civilian occupation is listed as railway brake inspector.

World War II army enlistment records also note a William A. Spamer enlisting on 6 January 1943 at Camp Blanding, Florida; the record indicates he was born in 1922 in Maryland but was residing in Florida. If the Florida enlistment is in fact William Jr., the subject here, note that he would have been 17 years old on the date of enlistment; if so, perhaps he had been discovered and turned away as under age, and he reenlisted a year later in Baltimore.

Carl Meyer Spamer, Jr. resided in Columbia, Howard Co., Maryland at the time of his death.

Spamer Family genealogy continues after the following collateral genealogy

[851] "Spamer Families of Baltimore", p. 12.

[852] The Clyde Steamship Co., Inc., was established in Philadelphia by Thomas Clyde in 1844, serving east coast ports and, later, the West Indies. In 1872 the headquarters moved to New York. After transfers of ownership, in 1911 the consortium called Atlantic, Gulf & West Indies Steamship Lines acquired the Clyde flag, which continued in use until 1932 when the line was combined with the Mallory Line to become the Clyde-Mallory Line. In 1949, the line was sold to the Bull Line and the Clyde-Mallory name and flag was discontinued. Anna (Meyers) Ackerman (1877–)
(wife of Charles Ackerman)

The 1880 census for 18th Ward, Precinct 5, Baltimore, Maryland, lists an "Annie Myers", aged 4, in the family of Stephen and Sallie Myers (aged 40, 35 respectively; he is a policeman) who also have a daughter, Emma (11), and son, Marrion (7); also in household is Stephen's father, Christian, aged 70, a coal dealer born in Pennsylvania. (All other household members born in Maryland.) Whether this is the family of Anna Meyers who married Charles Ackerman has not yet been determined.

She is buried in Schwartz Cemetery (First United Evangelical Cemetery), O'Donnell St., Baltimore, Maryland.

9. Ernst Andrew Ackerman (1899–1985)

He was educated at Capitol College, Columbus, Ohio. His draft registration from World War I indicates that he "works at Sparrow Point, Md". At the time of the 1930 U.S. census he was a draftsman for a fertilizer plant, residing at 421 Luzerne St., Baltimore, Maryland. He worked as a mechanical engineer.

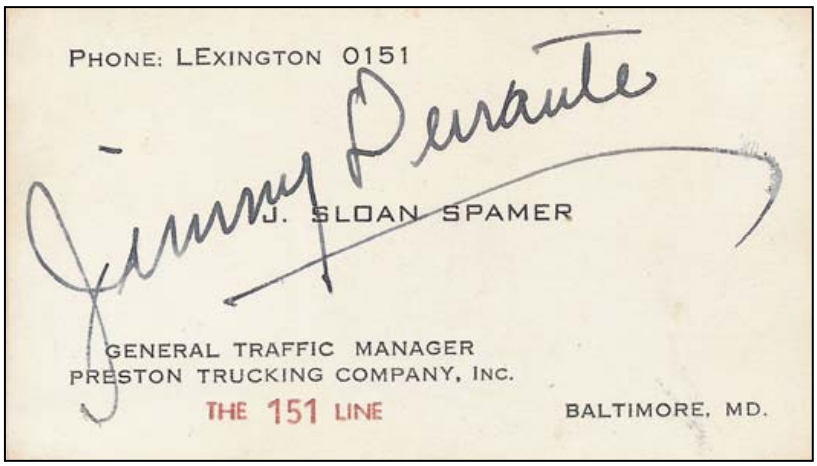
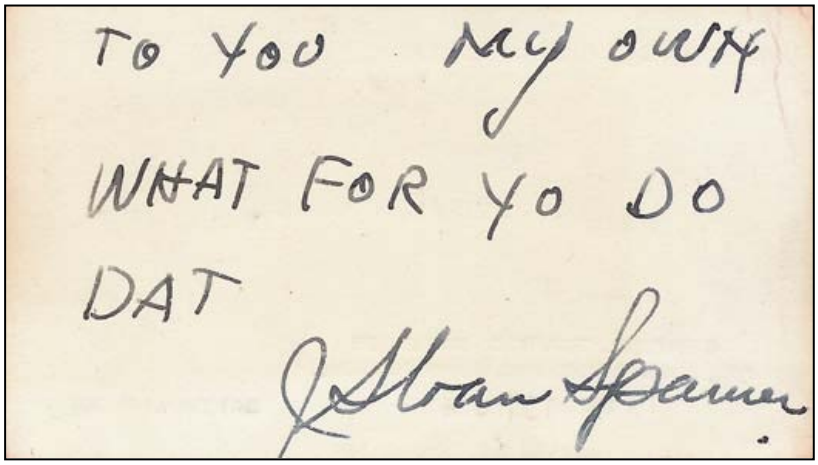
249. James Sloan Hoskins[7] Spamer (William Otis[6], William[5], Christian[4], Johann Conrad[3], Johann Conrad[2], Johannes[1]) was born 26 June 1907 in Maryland, and died 20 September 1980. He married Caroline Catherine Engler 07 October 1930. She was born 31 January 1908; died 11 May 2007 in Florida.

Child of James Spamer and Catherine Engler is:
\+ 319 i. Charles Ronald[8] Spamer [Sr.], born 19 December 1934.

NOTES

James Sloan Hoskins Spamer (1907–1980) [No. 249] was known as "Sloan Spamer". At the time of the 1930 U.S. census, he was an assistant cashier for a steamship company, residing with his widowed mother at 1742 Olive St., Baltimore, Maryland.





Sloan Spamer's business card, signed by entertainer Jimmy Durante. The signature appears to have been a reciprocal acknowledgement from Jimmy Durante. J. Sloan Spamer may have used the card first to acknowledge Durante, with a signed statement on its back that seems to borrow a catch phrase used by Durante in his entertainment acts. (Spamer collection)

An undated business card of "J. Sloan Spamer" gives his occupation as General Traffic Manager, Preston Trucking Co. [no street address], Baltimore, Maryland. (The card is signed by entertainer Jimmy Durante.[853]) He went on to become an officer if this, or another, trucking company.

J. S. H. Spamer resided in Baltimore, Maryland, at the time of his death. Also see Additions & Corrections

253. Andrew H.[7] Hobbs [Sr.] (Mary Elisabeth[6] Spamer, William[5], Christian[4], Johann Conrad[3], Johann Conrad[2], Johannes[1]) was born 13 October 1902 in Maryland, and died before 25 April 1998.

Children of Andrew Hobbs. are:

322 i. Andrew H.[8] Hobbs, Jr.

323 ii. Dorothy Hobbs. She married Boone.

NOTES

At the time of the 1930 U.S. census, Andrew H. Hobbs, Sr. (1902–before 25 April 1998) [No. 253] was a "state roads chauffeur".

---

254. Mary L. H.[7] Hobbs (Mary Elisabeth[6] Spamer, William[5], Christian[4], Johann Conrad[3], Johann Conrad[2], Johannes[1]) was born 22 October 1905 in Carroll Co., Maryland, and died 25 April 1998 in the Golden Age Guest Home, Sykesville, Carroll Co., Maryland. She married Clement L. Dietrich. He died before 25 April 1998.

[853] The signature appears to have been a reciprocal acknowledgement from Jimmy Durante. J. Sloan Spamer may have used the card first to acknowledge Durante; on the back he wrote, "TO YOU MY OWN WHAT FOR YO DO DAT [signed] J. Sloan Spamer", which seems to borrow a catch phrase used by Durante in his entertainment acts. Although there is a James Sloan Spamer (1925-2005) [No. 316], who was a nephew of J. S. H. Spamer, this business card probably was that of James Sloan Hoskins Spamer rather than James Sloan Spamer because: 1) the "Sloan" given name is emphasized, and J. S. H. Spamer was known as "Sloan"; 2) nephew James Sloan Spamer went into the engineering profession after World War II; 3) J. S. H. Spamer began his career in shipping occupations, a business in which also his brother, Carl [No. 248], was engaged; and 4) J. S. H. Spamer's occupation is corroborated in "The Spamer Families of Baltimore", which notes (p. 12), "Sloan worked in transportation industry and became a vice-president of a trucking company." The card was obtained by Earle Spamer through an Internet auction in 2004, for its association with J. Sloan Spamer.

Children of Mary Hobbs and Clement Dietrich are:

324 i. Alice[8] Deitrich, born about 1928; died before 25 April 1998.
\+ 325 ii. Clementine Deitrich, born after 1930.

NOTES

At the time of the 1930 U.S. census, Mary (Hobbs) Dietrich (1905–1998) [No. 254] and her daughter, Alice (ca. 1928–before 25 April 1998) [No. 324], resided with her parents; her husband, Clement, is not listed with them. Mary Dietrich was survived by her daughter and son-in-law, three granddaughters, and four great-granddaughters. She is buried in Springfield Cemetery, Sykesville, Carroll Co., Maryland.

254a. Helen[7] Spamer (Joseph[6], William[5], Christian[4], Johann Conrad[3], Johann Conrad[2], Johannes[1]) was born 05 January 1907 in Maryland; died September 1979. She married Charles Vernon Pierpont 1928 in Baltimore, Maryland. He was born 01 November 1899 in Baltimore, Maryland; died 1957.

Children of Helen Spamer and Chalres Pierpont are:

\+ 325a i. George C.[8] Pierpont, born 1928 in Maryland.
325b ii. Phillip Pierpont.
\+ 325c iii. Charles Vernon Pierpont, born 22 April 1940; died 13 September 2005.
325d iv. Donald S. Pierpont, born 03 December 1944; died 30 June 1996.

NOTES

254a. Helen (Spamer) Pierpont (1907–1979)

According to her grandson, Charles V. Pierpont, Helen Spamer Pierpont had "always claimed that she had been adopted. But I have never been able to find evidence of this. The family story is that City Hall had a fire and many records were destroyed"[854] Of course, for whatever reason the claim of adoption was made, the fire could not have been the great fire of Baltimore, which was in 1904, and which in any case was halted across the street from City Hall. Her father's unsettled life may figure into this claim.

She is supposed to have married Charles V. Pierpont after a very brief courtship, but they separated after the birth of their first son, George. They later reconciled.[855]

At the time of her death she resided in Baltimore, Maryland.

Charles Vernon Pierpont (1899–1957)
(husband of Helen Spamer)

At the time of the 1930 U.S. census he is listed as Charles "E." Pierpont, residing as a boarder in the household of Edgar T. and Julia A. Wise, 916 Rosedale St., Baltimore, Maryland. He was occupied as a

Charles Ronald Spamer, Sr. (1934–) [No. 319] served in the U.S. Navy. During 1953-1955 he was aboard the aircraft carrier U.S.S. Lake Champlain (CV-39)[863]; his rank was Boatswain's Mate 3rd Class (BM3). However, Spamer apparently served in the Navy at least until the early 1960s, as he records with some pride that he had been aboard the Lake Champlain when that ship recovered the capsule from one of the American space flights—"Favorite Memory Recovery of NASA Capsule".[864] However, he did not specify which one of the three capsules that were recovered by the Lake Champlain.

Since Charles Spamer refers just to one flight—one that incidentally elicited great pride in having been a shipboard participant—presumably it is the first of the three flights that are cited here, which in retrospect is also the most historic of the three. The Lake Champlain recovered:

1) Freedom 7, the Mercury capsule flown on a suborbital flight on 5 May 1961 by Alan B. Shepard, Jr., the first American in space;
2) Gemini 2, an unmanned test flight in January 1965; and
3) Gemini 5, an orbital flight flown in August 1965 by Gordon Cooper and Charles Conrad, Jr.[865]

Charles Spamer resided at 3510 Carriage Hill Circle, #104, Randallstown, Baltimore Co., Maryland, and at 5121 Fiddleleaf Drive, #37, Fort Myers, Lee Co., Florida. An attempt to contact him by mail in November 2007 resulted in the letter returned as undeliverable, although his name still appeared in the Public Records Index online.

On the U.S.S. Lake Champlain crew members' website he lists his civilian occupation as "Penitentiary".

Charles Ronald Spamer, Jr. (1958–) [No. 360] at the time of his death had residences in both Randallsown, Maryland, and Lehigh Acres, Florida. His obituary mentions no marriage.

[863] The U.S.S. Lake Champlain was laid down in Norfolk Navy Yard, Portsmouth, Virginia, 15 Mar 1943; launched 2 Nov 1944. An Essex class aircraft carrier, she displaced 27,100 tons; length 888 feet; beam 93 feet; speed 33 kts; ship's complement 3,448. Her first naval assignment was to return troops from Southampton to New York in Oct 1945. In 1947 she was retired to the "Mothball Fleet" at Norfolk and was reactivated during the Korean War. After continued service including the Mediterranean, she was converted to antisubmarine service as CVS-39 and saw service in several world areas. On 1 May 1961 she was the primary recovery ship for the flight of Freedom 7, flown by Cmdr. Alan Shepard. In 1962 she participated in the naval quarantine of Cuba during the Cuban Missile Crisis. On 19 Jan 1965, she recovered the unmanned Gemini 2 capsule after a suborbital test flight. Her last major duty of her career was service as the primary recovery ship for Gemini 5, which splashed down in the Atlantic Ocean 90 miles off target after a record-breaking 8-day space flight. She shortly later sailed for Philadelphia, where she began an inactivation process that ended with her decommissioning on 2 May 1966. She was stricken from the Navy List on 1 Dec 1969 and sold as scrap to the Defense Reutilization and Marketing Service on 28 Apr 1972. [865] Both Alan Shepard and Charles "Pete" Conrad later flew Apollo space missions that landed on the moon. Conrad commanded Apollo 12, Shepard commanded Apollo 14; as flight commanders they both walked on the moon. Gordon Cooper also was one of the original seven Mercury astronauts.

The U.S.S. Lake Champlain (CV-39) (above, seen in 1953) was the primary recovery ship for America's first manned spaceflight, Freedom 7 flown by Alan B. Shepard, Jr. (right) on 5 May 1961; and Gemini 5 (below), flown by Gordon Cooper and Charles Conrad, Jr. in August 1965. Charles Ronald Spamer, Sr., indicated that he was aboard the Lake Champlain for one of these recoveries, most probably Freedom 7.

Additions and Corrections

Hyperlinks embedded in the main genealogy will, when clicked in the computer's web-browser environment, redirect the user automatically to the pertinent additions, emendations and corrections that are compiled in this "Additions and Corrections" section.

Additions apply newly found information to particular parts of the main genealogy. Emendations rewrite parts of orginal texts. Factual errors and errors that may misconstrue meanings are corrected. Inconsequential typographical errors are not corrected.

All additions, emendations, and corrections are in order by page numbers to which they apply in the main text.

The pagination of the "Additions and Corrections" section begins with Roman numeral "i". Footnotes within this section continue the enumeration from the last number used in the main genealogy.

Bear in mind that the pagination and the enumeration of footnotes within the "Additions and Corrections" section will change from revision to revision as new material is continually added here. The content, pagination, and footnote numbers of the main part of the original genealogy do not change.

If the "Additions and Corrections" section is printed out to accompany a printed version of the main genealogy, these pages may be kept either as a separate document or they may be interleaved where appropriate within the main text of the genealogy.

‡ Signifies NEW individuals to this genealogy, whose enumeration numbers are assigned in this "Additions and Corrections" section.

Referred page numbers pertain to the original, printed version of this genealogy. Occasional (but infrequent) one-page variations may be noted between the digital and printed versions, but this does not affect the proper function of hyperlinks within the digital version. Introduction to Part I

Correction
For
Christian Spamer, actually; compiled by Hermann Spamer. This is Chronik der Schotten-Crainfelder Familie Spamer mit vorangehender Studie zur Chronik der Schottener Familie Spamer und mit nachfolgenden Gedichten und Aufzeichnungen seines Vaters, Christian Spamer, Pfarrer in Hermannstein, zusammengestelt von Hermann Spamer (Münchow'sche Hof- und Universitätsdruckerei (Otto Kindt), Gießen, 1904) [Chronicle of the Schotten-Crainfeld Family Spamer with Preceding Study to the Chronicle of the Schotten Family Spamer and with Following Poems and Annotations of His Father Christian Spamer, Clergyman in Hermannstein, Composed by Hermann Spamer]. It does not seem likely that Andy Spamer completed the prodigious task of translating this lengthy work. Chronik is a historical sketch, but most of the work transcribes the genealogical poems of Hermann Spamer. I received a copy, which had been only partly translated by A. M. Spamer, through Carl Spamer of Wisconsin. [Carl Spamer is related to the Baltimore Spamers only through the distant German ancestor, Cuntz Spanamer (ca. 1460-) (Ton Spamer to Bonnie Spamer, 30 Dec 2007).]

Christian Spamer had composed mostly in verse but which includes a lengthy prose introduction. The work seems never to have been translated in full; and the original is difficult to obtain.

[N.B.: In the digital version of the Spamer-Smith genealogy ("New Edition") a transcription of the whole Chronik, as well as a rough English translation, is provided on the disk as a service to our family, who may otherwise never have access to this interesting early genealogy and its historical notes. 7. Johann Conrad Spamer [Conrad Spamer] (1794–1849)
Johanetta (Heinzeberger) Spamer (1798–1883)

Additions

Regarding the alternative spelling of Johannetta Spamer's maiden name, as Heinzenberger, bear in mind also that Carl Ober Spamer's report of his visit in 1911 to the ancestral Spamer homeland in Germany notes having met individuals of the Heinzenberger family. And further, the Baltimore city directory contains various entries for individuals named Heinzenberger, but whether these actually are relations to Johanetta Spamer is not known at this time. (Also see comments below.)

In the 1868 Baltimore city directory, Johanetta Spamer is listed as Nettie Sparmer [sic], residing at 26 Fawn St.

Contemporary records (based on newspaper notices of her death, and family correspondence, as recited in the main genealogy) note that Johanetta Spamer had been buried in Western Cemetery, Baltimore, on 3 August 1883. Until now it was only supposed that she was buried in the lot that her son, Henry, had purchased in January 1849 at the time of Johann Conrad Spamer's death. Record received from Western Cemetery in April 2009 does confirm her burial in Area C, Lot 189, the lot purchased by Henry Spamer. The cemetery records list her name as "Anette Spamer". Why this information was not included in the information originally sent to A. M. Spamer ca. 1980 is not known. (On the other hand, the information sent to the present compiler in 2009 omitted the Holm family details that had been sent to A. M. Spamer, and for whom the lot is monumented.)

Comments on Heinzeberger/Heinzenberger

It is not known at this time whether any of the "Heinzeberger" (probably Heinzenberger) family related to the Spamers emigrated to the United States. However, there are various Heinzenbergers, including several in Baltimore, who indicated that their parents were born in Germany. Thus far no Heinzenberger has been surely identified in public records, who might have been a relation to Joahnetta Heinze(n)berger, who emigrated to Baltimore or elsewhere in America.

As noted in the main part of the genealogy, one Conrad Heinzenberger applied to be a naturalized citizen, and that on 16 September 1882 Christian Augustus Emanuel Spamer [No. 81] was the witness on this application. Interetestingly, a week later, on 22 September, Conrad Heinzenberger was himself a witness on the naturalization petition for a Ludwig Heinzenberger, also born in Germany. Like Conrad, it is unclear how he may be related to the Spamer family, if at all, although the coincidence of C. A. E. Spamer serving as a witness for Conrad is compelling enough to suggest that these are family relations. Ludwig Heinzenberger has not been located in any other pubic records thus far examined.

Conrad Heinzenberger is listed in Baltimore city directories as a baker (as noted in the following directories examined and in U.S. censuses):

1870 census: residing [single?] in the household of Eiseman and Sophia Bernhautt [Eiseman Bernhautt was also a baker]*†
1873 city directory: 235 E. Fayette St.
1880 census: 867 W. Pratt St. †‡
1880, 1882 city directories: 867 W. Pratt St.
1883, 1885, 1886 city directories: 868 W. Pratt St.
1888 city directory: 1824 W. Pratt St.
1890 city directory: 1821 W. Pratt St.

*In the 1870 census Conrad Heinzenberger gave his age as 24 (born ca. 1846), born in Hesse Darmstadt.
†In both the 1870 and 1880 censuses he is listed as "Heinsenberg".

‡In the 1880 census Conrad Heinzenberger gave his age as 45 (born ca. 1835), born in Hesse Darmstadt.

At the time of the 1880 census, Conrad Henzenberger's household was listed as follows:
Mary (wife), aged 34, born in Hesse Darmstadt
Henry (son), 6, born in Maryland
Louis (son), 4, born in Maryland
William Schwartz (boarder), 21, occupation baker, born in Maryland (parents born in Wurtemburg, Germany]

Conrad Heinzenberger may have died on or about 5 August 1897. A memorial notice appeared in The Sun (Baltimore) for 5 August 1899, which read:

> HEINZENBERGER—In memory of our dear father, CONRAD HEINZENBERGER, who departed this life two years ago today.
> He was thoughtful, loving and kind
> With us each and every one;
> How he suffered, but is now rejoicing
> In Heaven, where he longed to be at rest.
> BY HIS CHILDREN.

An obituary notice has not thus far been located in the newspapers for early August 1897.

At least one Baltimore Heinzeberger removed to Pittsburgh, Allegheny Co., Pennsylvania. Arthur Emory Heinzenberger, born in Baltimore 31 August 1895, was at the time of the 1942 military draft, resided in Pittsburgh, working in the shops of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. Take notice, too, that George T. Yost, the brother-in-law of Mr. Florence Spamer [No. 123 in the main genealogy, but see the Additions & Corrections for p. I-272, farther below], also worked in railroad shops in Pittsburgh. The Spamers likewise resided in Pittsburgh and elsewhere nearby in Allegheny Co. Whether this is only a coincidence of family names and locales is not known at this time.

Additions

Western Cemetery was visited for the first time by a Spamer family historian (Earle Spamer, with his wife, Jane Anderson) on 23 July 2009. Area C, lot 189 was located (see illustration page I-50A revised) by the presence of a principal four-sided columnar marker inscribed on the north side, "Sarah E. beloved wife of A. E. Holm. Died Nov 17, 1911, aged 59 yrs. At rest." At the top of all four sides of the monument is carved the letter "H". The east side of the monument is inscribed "Holm". Two small monuments appear at the foot of the graves of Sarah Holm and Andrew Holm; they read, respectively, "S. E. H." and "A. E. H." Sarah Elizabeth Spamer, a granddaughter of Johann Conrad Spamer, married Andrew E. Holm (her second husband, the first having predeceased her). Although Louisa Bruckner Holm (Andrew's second wife, Sarah having predeceased him) is shown in cemetery records to be buried in the same grave with Andrew, there is no marker for her.

Notably, a stone, mostly overgrown, was seen lying in the ground, positioned atop the two unmarked graves that are those of Johann Conrad and Johanetta Spamer. It is possible that it is a fallen marker for one or both of these graves, but thus far no investigation has been undertaken [July 2009; see illustration page I-50A revised].[867] The compiler's visit was made in the rain, and a review of the photographs taken raised this suggestion after the fact. It is, frankly, almost inconceivable that Henry Spamer (or the family) would not have placed a marker on the grave(s) of either his father (first) or his father and mother (after her decease).

[867] Although the stone lying in the ground was observed at the time of the visit, weather conditions were inclement, and the possible significance of the stone was not considered until photographs were examined later.

Despite Henry Spamer's various episodes of financial distress (see the main genealogy), he nonetheless had money to remove several family members from Baltimore Cemetery to Loudon Park Cemetery, and for whom monuments are present there. The postulated fallen marker at Western Cemetery remains to be investigated.

Addition

In January 2011 , George Spamer's military records were examined from archival sources. They fairly corroborate the information that is given in this genealogy, but which are summarized with information below for the sake of a more complete, authentic record from original sources.

The military records spell his surname both as "Spamer" and "Sparmer", which is consistent for other Spamer-family notices in the late 19th and early 20th centuries.

George Spamer first enlisted in the U.S. Army in Baltimore, where he appears in the Company Muster-In Roll for Co. G, 10th Regiment, Maryland Infantry, 25 June 1863; rank Private. The original enlistment paper is not present. The enlistment was for six months. The Muster-Out Roll for Co. G gives the date 29 January 1864; his rank, Private. He had last been paid to 31 October 1863, and was in debt to the government for 44 cents "for canteen".

George Spamer's second "Volunteer Enlistment" in the U.S. Army was completed in Baltimore on 1 June 1864. The form is filled in by a clerk spelling George's name "Spanner", but George has signed, "George Spamer". The enlistment was for 100 days. He listed his civilian occupation as "Clerk". His physical description noted that he had hazel eyes, black hair, fair complexion, and was 5 ft. 11 in. tall. He began his service as a Private in Co. I, 11th Regiment of the Maryland Infantry.

His service record is otherwise uninformative, other than he mustered in at the rank of Sergeant, and mustered out in Baltimore on 1 October 1864 also at the rank of Sergeant, had last been paid to 30 June 1864, and was in debt to the government for $5.15 "for arms, equipments, &c."

Addition
George Degenhardt is in all liklihood the "George Degenhard" listed in the 1870 U.S. census for Baltimore, then aged 40, occupation "Sailor". He was born in Hesse Kassel, Germany.

Page I-57

Addition
Francisco (or Francesco) Parodi was an alias of Buoneventure Parodi, as indicated from legal proceedings mentioned later in this discussion.

Page I-59

Addition
A legal notice The Sun for 6 November 1878 (p. 2) requested any claims against the late Francesco Parodi were to be filed with the estate administrator. In this notice the deceased name is listed and spelled, "Buonaventura Parodi, otherwise known as Francesco Parodi".

Addition
The Ella in New York may appear in some later reports in The Nautical Gazette, although there is no way to ascertain that the Ella there reported is the same vessel as that which is the subject here, although, as discussed, it seems as though the Ella was transferred to New York after the U.S. Marshal's sale in which she was forfeited by the Spamer brothers in restitution for the death of Buoneventure Parodi.

On 26 March 1892, an item in The Nautical Gazeette indicated that one-half interest in the Ella had been conveyed to Thomas K. Gibbons.

On 4 October 1906, the following item in The Nautical Gazette was reported: "Tug S. O. Co. No. 10 was rammed by the propeller Ella off Dock Street, East River, on the evening of the 25th and sank, one life lost." The notice that it was the "propeller" Ella is not certainly the Ella formerly of the Spamers. However, if it was, the vessel was in keeping with the smaller kind that the steam-tug Ella was, which by this point in time was substantially less powerful than other tugboats in use, thus she would have been relegated to less taxing harbor tasks such as towing barges or vessels not under their own power.

Page I-60

Addition
Insert the following newspaper item from The Sun (Baltimore), 16 Apr 1879:

> Investigation.—The board of United States local inspectors of steam boilers have investigated the case of the explosion on the steam tug Ella, in the harbor a few days ago, by which a colored hand lost his life. The portion of the iron where the boiler was patched was taken to their office. The finding of the board has not yet been reached, but they are satisfied the patching was faulty.

For

Nothing else is known of him other than his death, although a line in the 1864 Baltimore city directory lists a George Spanner [sic], tobacconist, at 14 E. Pratt St., which could possibly be George Washington Spamer inasmuch as the family name is often misspelled even in directories, and no other George Spamer is known from that time in Baltimore.

Read

Nothing else is known of George Washington Spamer other than the circumstances of his death. He does not appear in St. Louis, Missouri, city directories in the few years prior to his death. However, he may have still been in Baltimore at least at the time when the 1863 and 1864 city directories were prepared. In the 1863 Baltimore directory there is a George Spamer, 14 E. Pratt St., listed under tobacconists; in the 1864 directory this individual is listed as George "Spanner". This person may have been George Washington Spamer; the listing is not for his uncle, George Spamer [No. 44], who at the time was serving in the Union Army during the Civil War.

- - - -

It seems from this information that Mary Spamer may have been born in Prussia, but her age in 1880 (29) would indicate that she was born about 1851, which if correct (and there is no surety of this) would indicate that she was about 15 when she married George Washington Spamer in 1866. If "Mary" in 1870 is the widow Mary Spamer, aged 23, an birth year of about 1847 would be indicated for her, and thus an age of about 19 when she married G. W. Spamer. Again, census data are rife with inconsistencies and outright errors; all we can do is point to the data and surmise from there.

Neither Charles nor Mary Witte have been located in censuses later than 1880, nor has Charles been surely identified in any St. Louis city directories. An examination of census records elsewhere than St. Louis, in years after 1880, are likely inconclusive. Again we have lost touch with Mary C. Gettys.

Maryland, a few years later [the newspaper account here read shows the year illegibly; it could be 1893] ("Church Notes and Pulpit Topics", Baltimore American, 25 Sep 1920, p. 3).

Rev. Allbutt was the pastor in the Calvert Street Church 1895-1900. In 1900 he celebrated the centennial of the first New Church temple in America, as noticed in The Sun (6 Jan 1900):

THE FIRST IN AMERICA

Centennial Anniversary Of New Church Temple Celebrated.

The celebration of the centennial anniversary of the dedication of the First New Church Temple in America was begun last night at the house of worship of the Baltimore Society of the New Jerusalem Church, Calvert street, near Chase. The exercises will be continued today and tomorrow.

The First Temple was situated at the southwest corner of Baltimore and Exeter streets. The building was of brick, about 32 by 40 feet, and was torn down about 1866. The parsonage on the left is still standing, though the exterior has been somewhat changed. The present church, on Calvert street, was built about 1874. The membership at first was very small, but at present numbs about 110.

Rev. Lawrence [sic] Allbutt, who has been the pastor since 1895, opened the exercises last night with an address of welcome. In it he referred to the dedication of the temple on January 5, 1800, and quoted Rev. John Hargrove, who a short time afterward wrote:

"I stand alone here as to a fellow laborer in the pulpit. None preach the new doctrines publicly in America now but myself. Yet none of these things move me."

"The heroic attitude of this faithful pioneer," continued Mr. Allbutt, "encourages us in our apparent loneliness to persevere, for each New Church minister with his little flock still seems to stand alone in his own community to bear witness that the Lord has made His second coming, plainly revealing Himself, opening up the inner wisdom of His word, and winning us to walk according to His pattern."

["]We welcome our visiting brethren and extend hearty greeting to them, desiring to receive of their counsel, and to be encouraged by the presence.["]

Responses to the welcome were made by Mr. William McGeorge, Jr., representing the Philadelphia society, and Mr. John W. Stockwell, Jr., of Philadelphia, representing the American League of the New Church Young People's Societies.

Mr. McGeorge spoke at considerable length about the first temple, of the priest that served in it and worked so faithfully for the church, and finally retired as president of the general convention at the age of 82 years—Rev. John Hargrove. He told of the erection of the first temple in Philadelphia and its consecration by Rev. Mr. Hargrove, January 1, 1817, and of the general progress of the church, recalling the names of a number of the prominent workers in the early part of the century.

"When we look at the picture of the very modest little edifice that was erected at the southwest corner of Baltimore and Exeter streets," he said, "we cannot but be impressed with the thought that there is little in that structure to suggest the surpassing and eternal beauty of the Holy City, New Jerusalem, and yet it was that first temple erected in America by that church, which was to be the crown of all the churches, and to endure forever. Today there are thousands of New Church men and women in every part of this broad land who will be thrilled with emotion as they read the account of what is done here today, and as they recall the little edifice whose dedication 100 years ago we celebrate. But as the centuries and ages go on and the world comes more and more under the influence of the mighty agencies here started, this little edifice will be more and more prized and revered as the cradle of the New Church in America."

Mr. Stockwell said the young people would place their participation in the celebration upon a bright page in their history. "Our organization," he said, "should not be regarded as a lightweight lyceum, or a bureau of entertainment, merely, but as a strong right arm. Love of the church is the motive of our being; the mainspring of our activity."

Rev. Willard Hall Hinkley, of Boston, superintendent of the Church Mission of the United States, made the historical address. Of the First Temple, he said: "Rev. John Hargrove and Rev. Ralph Mather officiated at the dedication. The former afterward became the sole pastor. He was well known in Baltimore, having filled the office of City Register for 17 years. The New Church Society, worshiping on North Calvert street, of which Rev. Mr. Allbutt is pastor, is the legitimate successor of the one of which Mr. Hargrove was pastor, which was formed in 1798. In that year Mr. Hargrove withdrew from the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he had been a minister, ordained by Asbury."

As noted by a brief newspaper item, without elaboration, in 1900 Rev. Allbutt was not re-elected by his congregation; and it is after this event that he established the Northwest Mission, and with whom it is known that some of the Spamer family removed with him to the mission (The Sun, 18 Jun 1900, p. 12):

Rev. G. Lawrence [sic] Allbutt To Go.

Rev. G. Lawrence Allbutt will retire from the pastorate of the New Jerusalem Church, Calvert street, near Chase, at the end of this month. No successor has been elected.

By the rules of the church the pastor is elected every year. Rev. Mr. Allbutt failed to be re-elected this year, he says, by the small margin of one-third of a vote, three-fourths of the members present and voting being required to elect. He has been pastor of the church since 1895.

The mission was originally located in Horn's Hall, on North Ave. between Madison Ave. and Eutaw Place (Advertisements, The Sun, 15 Mar 1902, p. 4, 27 Jun 1903, p. 4; "Mission To Celebrate", The Sun, 2 Dec 1922, p. 5). After a couple of years the mission relocated to Harrison or Harrison's Hall at 1515 N. Fulton Ave. By 1920 it was noticed as located in Weber's Hall, at the same address.

After his founding of the Northwest Mission, Rev. Allbutt's work was not exclusively limited to the mission. In 1911, he began "periodical visits" to the First German New Jerusalem Church at Aisquith and Fayette Sts. (The First German church had also once been a Spamer family church, as noted elsewhere in this genealogy.) At this time, Rev. Allbutt was visiting the First German church on the second and fourth Sunday mornings of the month, "on the invitation of the congregation." (>>"The Spiritual Birth. Rev. G. L. Allbutt Begins His Periodical Visits", The Sun, 11 Dec 1911, p. 13.) The relationship of the churches had been one of ecclesiastical reciprocity, inasmuch as it is known from newspaper records that the pastor of the First German church, Rev. Louis H. Tafel [see also in the Tafel Family collateral genealogy in the present genealogy], at times preached at the Northwest Mission (for example, "In Honor of Swedenborg. Rev. Louis H. Tafel Preaches Anniversary Sermon", The Sun, 29 Jan 1906, p. 9).

A few newspaper notices about sermons and talks and an article about Emanuel Swedenborg by Rev. Allbutt have been located: "Mission of New Jerusalem Church. Fifth Anniversary Celebrated in Harrison's Hall—Sermon by Rev. Allbutt", Baltimore American, 4 Dec 1905, p. 4; "Says God Is One. Fifth Anniversary Of Northwest Mission Celebrated", The Sun, 4 Dec 1905, p. 10; "'The Holy Spirit'. Rev. G. L. Allbutt's Whitsunday Sermon at New Jerusalem Church Mission", Baltimore American, 4 Jun 1906, p. 9; "The Divine Power. Subject of Sermon Preached by Rev. G. L. Allbutt at New Jerusalem Church Mission", Baltimore American, 18 Nov 1907, p. 15; "Quotes Swedenborg on Mars", The Sun (Baltimore), 18 Sep 1909, p. 7; "Emanuel Swedenborg. Born 222 years ago his fame as scientist, philospher and theologian increases with the years", Baltimore American, 30 Jan 1910, p. 46; "God Has Been Forgotten. But He Has Not Forgotten Us, Says Rev. G. L. Albutt [sic]", Baltimore American, 11 Apr 1910, p. 12; "True Idea of Heaven. Rev. G. L. Allbutt Says It Is a Community of Uses", Baltimore American, 25 Apr 1910, p. 16; "The Triumph of the Cross. Sermon by Rev. G. L. Allbutt at New Jerusalem Church", Baltimore American, 10 Apr 1911, p. 13.

By 1922, the mission's work was being conducted by Rev. Allbutt's son, G. Clement Allbutt, who was then a candidate for the New Church ministry. When the mission ceased is not known to this genealogy; it still was offering services and programs in January 1922. In more recent years, the hall at 1515 N. Fulton Ave. has seen distinctly different uses. In February 1999 it opened an after-school tutoring program for training young fighters in boxing; a classroom was downstairs and a gym upstairs (Tom Scocca, "Glove Story. From Streetside to Ringside with the Umar Boxing Club", Baltimore City Paper, 19 Jul 2000). In 2009, the location was an insurance agency on the ground floor, and the Rise N Shine Daycare Center upstairs.

ACCUSED OF FORGERY.
Mr. George O. Demuth, Piano Dealer, Locked Up on a Serious Charge
IN DEFAULT OF $5,000 BAIL.
Alleged Forged Indoresements Foot Nearly $14,000.
Statement of Mr. Herman T. Gernhardt, Who Says that His Signature Was Forged—Mr. Henry Spamer Held About $10,000 of the Notes.

George O. Demuth is locked up at the northwestern police station in default of $5,000 bail, charged with forgery. Unless bail is furnished this morning he will be sent to jail. The aggregate of the alleged forgeries is nearly $14,000.

Mr. Demuth is a piano dealer who was formerly engaged in business on Fayette treet, near Paca street, but who has for some time been in business on Baltimore street, near Fremont street.

About five years ago he moved into the house at 1400[?] Harlem avenue and soon won the confidence of the people residing in that vicinity.

His arrest was brought about by Mr. Herman T. Gernhardt, 1322 Harlem avenue[868], who stated that several years ago Mr. Demuth came to him with notes representing the sale of a piano for $700 on the installment plan; said that he required $400 for the purchase of the piano, and that if Mr. Gernhardt would indorse the notes he could secure the money from a bank and would give Mr. Gernhardt $75 for the accommodation. Mr. Gernhardt indorsed the notes, which were paid when they became due. Several other transactions of a similar nature took place between them.

Last October, when Mr. Gernhardt returned home from a business trip, he was informed by his bookkeeper that one of his notes had gone to protest at the Continental National Bank. He said that he had no knowledge of a note due at that bank, and went there to inquire. He was shown a note with his name on it as indorser, and he prnounced the indorsement a forgery. While he was talking to the bank teller a gentleman whom he knew stepped up and said he also had several notes with Mr. Gernhardt's indorsement. The notes were produced, and they also were pronounced forgeries, so far as the indorsements were concerned.

Further inquiry developed the fact that Mr. Henry Spamer, 1201 West North avenue, also held a lot of notes aggregating $10,000 bearing his indorsement. These notes, it is alleged, had been secured from Mr. Demuth.

According to Mr. Gernhardt Mr. Demuth called a meeting of Messrs. Gernhardt, Spamer and the teller of the Continental National Bank at his house. "There he produced," said Mr. Gernhardt, "a bundle of installment papers which he admitted were bogus and said, "now, gentlemen, you may send me to prison if you want to."

Mr. Spamer formerly conducted a shoe business on Harlem avenue, near Calhoun street. He said Mr. Demuth asked him to discount several notes. The notes appeared to have been indorsed by Mr. Gernhardt. He furnished the accommodation and for a time the notes were paid as they became due. Afterward, he said, Mr. Demuth would come to him and say that it was inconvenient for him to meet a note when it came due and would ask permission to extend the note. Relying on the indorsement, Mr. Spamer would grant the extension. He also bought other notes, until the total amount of the paper in his hands was in the neighborhood of $10,000.

Several banks in Baltimore are said to hold paper which they discounted for Mr. Demuth, but it is said these represent bonafide transactions and that the banks will not be losers.

Mr. Demuth declined to make a statement. He waived an examination when he was taken before the justice late yesterday afternoon, and will take his case to court. He was unable to furnish bail and was locked up until this morning.

It is said that George O. H. Spamer[869], a son of Henry Spamer, holds bogus paper that he purchased from Mr. Demuth amounting to $1,700.

[868] This address was next door to the 1324 Harlem Ave. address formerly occupied by Henry Spamer, but who at this time was at 1201 W. North Ave.

[869] Edward Otis Hinkley Spamer [No. 113].

The following item appeared in The Sun the following day (26 Dec 1896):

> Charges Against George Demuth.
> George Demuth, who was committed to court Thursday by Justice Schoen, charged with forgery, was arraigned before the same justice yesterday and the general charges against him was made specific.
> Four charges were made of forging the name of Herman T. Gernhardt to as many notes as indorser. The notes were drawn for $177.50, $150, $172.50 and $195. Demuth declined to make a statement and asked for a jury trial. He was committed to jail in default of $1,000 bail in each case. Demuth will be taken before Justice Schoen again today when he will be charged with obtaining money through false representations in papers which purported to be contracts for the sale of pianos on the installment plan.
>
> It was stated yesterday that there are other sufferers beside Mr. Gernhardt. Mr. Henry Spamer claims to have lost more than $14,000 by Mr. Demuth's aleged faudulent transactions. It is said that the total amount will reach $25,000. Among the alleged sufferers are two sons of Mr. Henry Spamer.

Addition

Although George O. Demuth has thus far not been located in the 1860 U.S. census, as already indicated in this genealogy, the following advertisement is noticed in The Sun (8 Sep 1862, p. 3):

> GEORGE DEMUTH, PROFESSOR OF MUSIC, 97 W. BIDDLE ST., will resume the duties of his profession on the 1st of September. Orders left at Mr. H. McCAFFREY'S MUSIC STORE, 207 West Baltimore street, will meet with prompt attention. Terms to suit the times.

Addition

The following obituary is noted from The Sun (6 Dec 1867), but how or whether he relates to George O. Demuth is not determined here:

> "DEMUTH—On the 2d of December, GEORGE M. DEMUTH, son of the late John Demuth, in the 22d year of his age."

1910: Engineer, iron foundry

He immigrated into the U.S. in 1867, and by the time of the 1900 census was a naturalized U.S. citizen.

23a. Henry W. Braun (ca. 1869–) and his wife, Jeannette (Donovan) Braun

The wedding announcement for Henry and Jeannette Braun appeared in The Sun (Baltimore) for 18 June 1896:

BRAUN–DONOVAN.

A very pretty home wedding took place last night at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Donovan, 739 East Preseton street. The bride was Miss Jeannette A. Donovan and the groom was Mr. Henry W. Braun. Rev. Peregrine Wroth, pastor of the Church of the Messiah, corner Gay and Fayette streets, performed the ceremony.

The bride was attired in a dress of white organdie, trimmed with white ribbons and lace, and carried a bunch of Bride roses. She was escorted into the parlor by her father, who gave her away. After the ceremony a reception was held, after which Mr. and Mrs. Braun left for a trip to New York and New Haven, Conn. Upon their return they will reside at 1631 East Lanvale street.

The residence, 1631 E. Lanvale St., was the residence of George and Mary (Spamer) Pausch (see No. 94, Mary Elisabeth Spamer, in the main Spamer family genealogy, p. I-216.)

could not be connected due to absent information about her parents and the grandmother in question. (See the original information pertaining to Marie Stein Strange in the Heinzerling Family collateral genealogy, No. 23. See below for greatly revised information.)

Henry Spamer, likewise mentioned in the newspaper article, is Peter Heinrich Christian Spamer (Americanized to Henry Spamer) [see No. 41 in the main Spamer Family genealogy], whose second wife was Catherina Elizabeth Heinzerling who had been nine years of age when she immigrated into Baltimore with the family and her newborn brother, "Frederik" (John). Further corroborating the identity of Henry Spamer is the fact that he was in the shoe business all his adult life.

Adolph Spamer [No. 99 in the main Spamer Family genealogy], also mentioned in the newspaper article, was a nephew of Henry Spamer.

John G. Heinzerling has not been found in any U.S. censuses other than those mentioned here, nor has he been identified in any public records other than the military records cited here. He may have married, as noticed in the 1920 U.S. census (see farther below).

John G. Heinzerling served in the U.S. Army, but seemingly was not a Civil War veteran. Despite the note in the newspaper article cited above, that he had been separated from his family since the "breaking out of the Civil War", his volunteer enlistments did not occur until 1865 and after the conclusion of the war. There may be records of service sometime during the war, but if they exist they have not been located, at least not under the name of John Heinzerling.

On 12 August 1865, aged 20, John G. Heinzerling enlisted in the Regular Army in Washington, D.C., for a period of three years. The record there notices that he was born "On the Ocean", his occupation was as a baker. (The 1864 Baltimore city directory lists a John Heinzerling, baker, at 830 W. Baltimore St.; whether this was this John Heinzerling, his father, or another, is uncertain.) John G. Heinzerling was subsequently discharged from the army "for disability" on 16 September 1865, at Fort Columbia, Kentucky. On 23 September, he enlisted again, in Baltimore, Maryland; the record corroborates this as the same John G. Heinzerling—aged 20, born "At Sea", occupied as a baker. He then served in Co. B, 2nd Cavalry, and was discharged 2 September 1868 at Fort McPherson, Nebraska, at the rank of Private.

There is also record of John G. Heinzerling serving in the 18th Regiment, U.S. Infantry (Regular Army), but no further details are forthcoming at this time [>>U.S. National Park Service, U.S. Civil War Soldiers, 1861-1865 (database online), Provo, Utah, The Generations Network, 2007]. There is no listing for a John Heinzerling in the History and Roster of Maryland Volunteers of Civil War service (L. Allison Wilmer, J. H. Jarrett, and George W. F. Vernon, History and Roster of Maryland Volunteers, War of 1861-5, Prepared Under Authority of the General Assembly of Maryland, Baltimore, Gugenheimer, Weil and Co., 1898).

Nothing more is known about John G. Heinzerling from this time until he sought out his family in 1914. On 15 June 1915, John G. Heinzerling filed for a veteran's pension as an invalid, filing in Kansas (application no. 1,420,137). He had been admitted to the National Military Home, a hospital in Leavenworth on 11 June 1915. Note that this follows by six months the article in the Baltimore Sun, which recorded that he was in a soldiers' home in Monte Vista, Colorado. The 1920 U.S. census for Leavenworth, Kansas, lists John G. Heinzerling (born "At Sea", aged 76, widower) as a resident of the National Military Home. Today the home is the Dwight D. Eisenhower Veterans Administration Medical Center. The census record is the only indication that he may have married.

The following information was retrieved from the U.S. National Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, 1866-1938 [database online] (The Generations Network, Provo, Utah, 2007), which was obtained from the U.S. National Archives, Record Group 15, Records of the Department of Veterans Affairs, National Archives Micofilm Publication M1749. Register page 22268 for the Leavenworth home lists for John G. Heinzerling: Military History: enlisted in Baltimore, Maryland, 23 September 1865; served at the rank of Private, 2nd U.S. Cavalry, Co. B; discharged at Ft. McPherson, Nebraska, 23 September 1868; discharged due to expiration of service; disability when admitted to the home, "right scrotal hernia & chronic arthritis". Domestic History: born in Baltimore, Maryland [sic]; aged 69, height 5 ft. 3 in., light complexion, blue eyes, gray hair; can read and write; Catholic; occupation as laborer; residence subsequent to discharge, Monte Vista, Colorado; marital status Single; name and address of nearest relative, Mrs. Mary P. Brown [sic], 601 N. Bond St., Baltimore, Maryland. Home History: admitted 11 June 1915; died 3 March 1923; cause of death "Acute Cardiac Dilatation. Myocarditis Arteriosclerosis". General Remarks: "Died at Hospital at 5.55 P.M. March 3, 1923 Telegram letter to Mrs. Mary C. Brown, 601 N. Bond St., Baltimore, Md. Buried Sec 30, Row 17, Grave 6832 Rev. Taton, Chaplain". Effects "Sold at Public Sale June 18, 1924 proceeds $1.00". [Another source specifies Sec. 30, Row 17, Grave 29.]

In the above record, it is clear that Mary C. Brown is his sister, Mrs. Mary C. Braun; but she had died a year earlier than John Heinzerling. The fact that she had been listed as a nearest relative is some indication that John had been successful in contacting his sister. Whether John had ever visited Baltimore during the decade after he had tried to locate his family is not known.

He had immigrated from Germany in 1880 and was, by the time of the 1900 U.S. census, a naturalized U.S. citizen.

31. Marie (Stein) Strange (1897–1986)

The original text of the genealogy indicated uncertainty about the genealogical lineage of Marie Stein Strange. All that was known surely was that her grandmother was a sister to the grandmother of Katharine Seville Spamer [No. 192 in main Spamer Family genealogy]. Her parentage has since been established as shown above, in these revisions to the Heinzerling Family collateral genealogy.

The "Spamers of Baltimore" takes note that "The grandmother of Marie Steen [sic] Strange (widow of Harwood Strange) and Katharine S. Spamer's grandmother were sisters."[870] Also noted in correspondence from Katharine S. Spamer to Marie Stein Strange is Katharine's inquiry, "Do you have any information on my grandmother's children (Elizabeth Katharine—your grandmother's sister)?"[871] In addition, Earle Spamer recalls Katharine Spamer saying that Marie was related through their grandparents. Marie Stein Strange and Katharine Spamer met several times during the later part of their lives, and they corresponded with each other.

Occupational and residential information for Marie K. Stein (from U.S. censuses, city directories, and other sources):
1920 census: Office accountant; 601 N. Bond St., Baltimore, Maryland [with parents]
1930 census: Student nurse, Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore, Maryland; student nurse housing, 600 block of Broadway
1945 newspaper item: Director of nursing, Annapolis Emergency Hospital
1949 Annapolis, Maryland, directory: Clinic supervisor, County Health Department; 68 East St.
1954 Annapolis, Maryland, directory: Clerk, City of Annapolis Treasurer's Office; 68 East St.
1959 wedding: 68 East St., Annapolis
1962 death of husband: 9 Shipwright St., Annapolis, Maryland
ca. 1976 correspondence: Apt. 910, 3939 Roland Ave., Baltimore, Maryland
At time of death: Homewood Retirement Center, 11 York St., Hanover, Pennsylvania

An obituary notice for Marie Stein Strange indicated that she "was a former employee of the Annapolis City Clerk's Office, and also of the Maryland Income Tax Division in Annapolis" (The Capital [Annapolis], 28 Jan 1986, p. 6).

870 [227] "Spamer Families of Baltimore", p. 28. Katharine S. Spamer is No. 192 in this genealogy (under John Ward Spamer, No. 114). [Original footnote 227 in Part I of Spamer–Smith genealogy.]

871 [228] Katharine S. Spamer to Marie Stein Strange [ca. Jan 1976]. [Original footnote 228 in Part I of Spamer–Smith genealogy.]

In 1919, Marie K. Stein is listed as a new member of the Consolidated Gas, Electric Light and Power Co., Baltimore. (>>National Electric Light Association Bulletin, Vol. 6 (new series), no. 1 (January 1919), p. 190.)

Marie K. Stein is noticed in the 14 July 1920 issue of The Frederick Post (Frederick, Maryland), as having registered as a delegate to the Reformed Missionary Conference held at Hood College. (>>"Scope of Missionary Field Confab Theme", Frederick Post, 14 Jul 1920, pp. 1, 6.)

The following brief note appeared in The Capital (Annapolis, Maryland) for 4 October 1945:

Miss Stein Vacationing

> Miss Marie K. Stein, director of nursing at the Emergency Hospital[872], left today for Baltimore where she will visit her brother, Mr. William C. Stein. Miss Stein will return to her post at the hospital on October 25.

The Social Security Death Index lists Marie Strange with a birth date of 18 February 1898.

33. Emma B.[6] Stein (Ida A.[5] Braun, Maria Catharina[4] Heinzerling, Johannes[3], Arnold[2], Johannes[1]) was born 12 December 1903 in Maryland; died July 1983 in Maryland. She married Vernon Bevans. He was born about 1901 in Maryland.

Child of Emma Stein and Vernon Bevans is:
37 i. Margaret J.[7] Bevans, born about 1925 in Maryland.

NOTES

At the time of the 1930 U.S. census, Vernon Bevans and family resided with Emma's parents. He was employed as a salesman in a grocery store, presumably in his father-in-law's store.

At the time of her death she resided in Williamsport, Washington Co., Maryland.

August Otto died 9 October 1915. A notice of his failing health appeared in the Baltimore Sun that day:

> Charles [sic] Otto Not Expected to Live.
> The condition of Charles Otto, who has been ill, suffering from infirmities of age and a complication of diseases, at Ashwal, the house of his daughter, Mrs. Edward O. H. Spamer, at Holbrook [sic], for several months, is growing worse and little hope of his recovery is entertained.
> Mr. Otto formerly was well known in Baltimore, where he was engaged in business in Hanover Street.

His obituary appeared the following day (The Sun, 10 Oct 1915), which additionally provides some information about his children, some of it not previously recorded:

> August Otto.
> August Otto, 79 years old, and for 40 years a butcher in the Cross Street Market, died from the infirmities of age at the home of his daughter yesterday afternoon in Holbrooke, Baltimore county. He was a member of Union Lodge of Masons, who probably will have charge of the funeral services. The body will be taken to the home of a son, Julius Otto, of Baltimore, and the burial will take place in Loudoun [sic] Park Cemetery. Six children survive—Mrs. Frank Webber, Miss Bertha Otto and Julius Otto, all of Baltimore, and Mrs. William Grill, Arbutis, Md.; Mrs. George Huster, Philadelphia, and Mrs. Edwin [sic] O. H. Spamer, of Holbrooke.

From this information we also have now a closer understanding of the genealogical connection of "C. A. Weber", whose correspondence is cited in several places in this genealogy. His mother was one of the married daughters of August Otto (other than Amelia): either Wilhelmina or Anna.

The William Grill there mentioned also is likely to have been related to Franz Grill, who is noted as a litigant in the matter of guardianship of the child George Peabody Spamer (younger) [No. 190], which is mentioned more fully on p. I-93 under Henry Spamer [No. 41].

The Sun for 11 October 1915 reported the funeral plans for August Otto:

> OTTO.—On October 19, 1915, at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. Amelia Spamer of Holbrook [sic], Md., AUGUST, in the 80th year of his age, beloved husband of the [late] Margaret A. Otto. (Philadelphia papers please copy.)
> Funeral will take place from the residence of his son, Lewis Otto, 1505 Marshall street on Tuesday at 2.30 P. M. Interment (private) at Loudon Park Cemetery.

(Lewis Otto is Julius Augustus Otto [No. 12 in the Otto Family collateral genealogy presented in the main text.)

28 years, and was not naturalized. However, note that her marriage was in 1860; that she appears with Charles in the 1860 census without children; and that their first-born, Lorenda, 9 years of age at the time of the 1870 census, was born in Maryland.

It is possible that Margaret Spangler was from the Pittsburgh area, and that Charles Spamer had had some connection with this area prior to his marriage even though their first children were born in Maryland. The 1850 U.S. census seems to identify Margaret Spangler's parents and siblings residing in Allegheny City, Allegheny Co., Pennsylvania. Without other corroboration, that household is listed here for the possible information it conveys:

> George Spangler, aged 47, butcher, born in Germany
> Josephine, 43, born in Germany
> Susan, 18, born in Germany
> Charles, 15, born in Germany
> Margaret, 14, born in Germany
> Louis, 10, born in Pennsylvania
> John Kreeseg [Kruseg?], 28, carpenter, born in Germany
> Susanna Kreeseg [Kruseg?], 34, born in Germany

In the 1840 census for Allgegheny City, Pennsylvania, there is a two-person household listed for George Spangler; however, the ages for both the male and female are tallied in the 20–29 age range.

Replacement text as follows:

Her birthplace is given variously as Maryland (family record, and 1860 census) and Germany (1870, 1880, 1900 censuses); her death notice in The Pittsburgh Press for 10 Feb 1908 indicates that she was born in Heidelberg. The 1900 census indicates that she immigrated to the U.S. in 1872, had been in the U.S. for 28 years, and was not naturalized. However, note that her marriage was in 1860; that she appears with Charles in the 1860 census without children; and that their first-born, Lorenda, 9 years of age at the time of the 1870 census, was born in Maryland. Furthermore, her newspaper death notice provides the following information: "Mrs. Spamer . . . came to this country when two years old. Settling in Allegheny, she has resided there ever since."

Of the family of Margaret Spangler, only her parents and siblings have thus far been determined; this information from the 1850 U.S. census:

> George Spangler, aged 47, butcher, born in Germany
> Josephine, 43, born in Germany
> Susan, 18, born in Germany
> Charles, 15, born in Germany
> Margaret, 14, born in Germany
> Louis, 10, born in Pennsylvania
> John Kreeseg [Kruseg?], 28, carpenter, born in Germany
> Susanna Kreeseg [Kruseg?], 34, born in Germany

The relationships of the Kreesegs between themselves and with the Spangler family have not been determined.

In the 1840 census for Allgegheny City, Pennsylvania, there is a two-person household listed for George Spangler; however, the ages for both the male and female are tallied in the 20–29 age range, and there seems to be no accounting for the children of George and Josephine born in Germany.

Margaret Spamer's death notice provides the following note about her husband, in addition to the time of the family's immigration into America: "Her father, the late George Spangler, was among the first to install a meat stand in the Allegheny market."

> C. Augustus E. Spamer, of the law firm of Spamer & Hinkley, died at 1.30 o'clock this morning at his home, 1702 Bolton street, after a lingering illness. Mr. Spamer was stricken several months ago and for the past two weeks was confined to his bed.
> He was president of the Baltimore Society of New Jerusalem and for the past 21 years served as secretary of the General Convention of the New Jerusalem Church. Mr. Spamer took an active part in Grand Army Republic [sic] work, and at one time was Commander of Dushane Post.
> Born in Baltimore 68 years ago, he was the son of the late Ludwig Spamer. He was a graduate of the Baltimore City College. He studied law in the office of Hinkley & Morris. Mr. Spamer was instrumental in erecting the memorial to the soldiers and sailors of the Union on the Mount Royal drive in Druid Hill Park and served as secretary of the commission that had charge of the work.
> Mr. Spamer married Miss Abbie O. Smith, of Boston. She died 25 years ago. He is surived by one son, Carl Ober Spamer, and two daughters, Miss Lois Mae Spamer and Miss Bona Pearl Spamer.

A brief funeral notice appeared in another one of the Baltimore newspapers (Baltimore American, 10 Jan 1912):

> Mr. C. A. E. Spamer.
> The funeral of C. Augustus E. Spamer, prominent churchman, Civil War veteran and a member of the law firm of Hinkley, Spamer & Hisky, who died early Sunday morning at his home, 1702 Bolton Street, took place at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon from New Jerusalem Church, Calvert near Chase street. For many years Mr. Spamer had been prominent in the work of this church, and his funeral was attended by many members of the congregation. for the last 21 years he had been secretary of the General Convention of the New Jerusalem Church, and had been president of the Baltimore Society of the Jerusalem Church of the past 15 years. Rev. H. S. Conant, pastor of the Baltimore church, assisted by Rev. Dr. Frank Sewall, of Washington, and Rev. S. S. Seward, of Massachusetts, officiated at the services. Interment was made in Loudon Park Cemetery.

The pallbearers were Louis J. Bargay, Frederick J. Slagley, George J. Tinksley, Albert U. Crownfeld, George Pausch and Leonard Burbank.

The Maryland State Bar Assocation noticed the death of C. A. E. Spamer (Report of the Seventeenth Annual Meeting of the Maryland State Bar Association at Cape May Hotel, Cape May, N. J. July 1st, 2nd and 3d, 1912, Maryland State Bar Association, 1912, pp. 69-70):

C. AUGUSTUS E. SPAMER.

C. Augustus E. Spamer was born in Baltimore September 25, 1843. Mr. Spamer was of German descent, his father, Ludwig Spamer, having been born in Oberschmitten, near Frankfort on the Main.

Mr. Spamer was educated in the public schools of Baltimore and at the Baltimore City College, from which institution he was graduated in 1860. He studied law in the office of Hinkley & Morris, and was admitted to the Bar of Baltimore City on March 16, 1870. He was married on March 29, 1870, to Miss Abbie O. Smith, of Boston. Mr. spamer leaves a son and two daughters surviving him, his wife having died in 1886.

He was a devout member of the Baltimore Society of the New Jerusalem Church, of which he was for many years president and superintendent of the Sunday school. He was secretary of the General Convention of the New Jerusalem Church for twenty years up to the time of his death.

He was much interested in charitable work in many different fields, and was chairman of the District Board of the Federated Charities. He was also treasurer of a special relief fund of that body.

He was for a number of years treasurer of the Bar Association of Baltimore City, which position he resigned on the occasion of taking a trip to Japan in 1909.

He was well known to the members of the Bar of Baltimore City for his thorough and accurate work, and his extreme patience and good nature. His law practice was more in the line of conveyancing than any other field, and he was rated as among the best conveyancers n Baltimore City. He was associated during the whole of his leagal career with the office of Hinkley & Morris, becoming a partner after the death of Mr. John T. Morris, in 1909, at which time the firm of Hinkley, Spamer & Hisky was formed, his associates in that firm being John Hinkley, Thomas foley Hisky, Louis J. Burger and Frederick J. Singley.

Mr. Spamer was a Union Veteran of the Civil War, having served in the Third Maryland Volunteer Infantry from March 22, 1864, until his discharge, on July 31, 1865, having participated in the battles of the Wilderness and of Spottsylvania Court House. He was much interested in the Grand Army of the Republic, and was appointed by Governor Warfield on the commission which erected a monument to Union soldiers and sailors, which was dedicated in 1909.

Mr. Spamer's death occurred at Baltimore on January 7, 1912.

Addition

Regarding C. A. E. Spamer's involvement with the Grand Army of the Republic, a newspaper item in the Baltimore American (21 Aug 1905) notes that he and his son, Carl Ober Spamer, were part of the Maryland delegation to the G.A.R. National Encampment in Denver, Colorado. [See also under additonal notes for p. I-137, below.]

Addition

In January 2011, C. A. E. Spamer's military records were examined from archival sources. They fairly corroborate the information that is given in this genealogy, but which are summarized with information below for the sake of a more complete, authentic record from original sources.

The military records have variously spelled his surname "Speamer" and "Spamer", and in a few instances as "Spramer" that was corrected to "Speamer" 25 January 1910, apparently when these service records were compiled. (Note that "Sparmer" is not used, which is so often cited for "Spamer" at this time.)

C. A. E. Spamer's original "Volunteer Enlistment" in the U.S. Army was completed in Baltimore on 22 March 1864; signed, "C. Augs. E. Spamer". The enlistment was for up to three years. He listed his civilian occupation as "Clerk". His physical description noted that he had blue eyes, brown hair, fair complexion, and was 5 ft. 5 in. tall. He began his service as a Private in Co. A, 3rd Regiment of the Maryland Infantry.

His service record in the 3rd Maryland Infantry is briefly listed as follows (as noted in the official Returns) [dates thus]:

1864 March 25	Lafayette Barracks
1864 March–April	New recruit, received 1 month pay in advance, $13
1864 April	Recruit from Depot
1864 April 3	Clerk, Regiment Headquarters
1864 May	Clerk, 2nd Brigade Headquarters
1864 June	Co. A Battalion [place illegible]
1864 June 24	Clerk, 2nd Brigade Headquarters. "Near Petersburg Va Transfer from Co. K by Battn Orders No 1 June 24/64 pursuant to G.O.W. Dept. No. 86 & S.O. Hdqrs 9 A.C. No 83 June 24/64"
1864 July	"On daily duty", Brigade Headquarters, 2nd Battalion
1864 August	Co. K, 2nd Brigade
1864 September	Clerk at Headquarters
1864 October–1865 June	Clerk, 1st Division Headquarters
1864 Nov–Dec	at Friend House, near Petersburg, Virginia
1864 Nov 3	absent on leave

C. A. E. Spamer was discharged from the U.S. Army with the mustering out of Co. A, 3rd Maryland Infantry, 31 July 1865.

John Hinkley, of the fifth generation back, who held a commission of the Colonial wars, and the Reverend John Hargrove, of Baltimore, the third generation removed, who was one of the first ministers in America of the New Jerusalem church (commonly known as Swedenborgian).

The origin of the family name of Hinkley is Saxon, being more than nine hundred years old in England. The manufacturing and market town of Hinckley, in Leicestershire, dates back as far as 1080. The name is derived from a Saxon word meaning "horse" and "lea" or meadow. The armorial records of England show curiously enough the grant of coat armor to "Hinkley or Hinckley," that being the precise form of the grant, and indicating that both spellings were used indifferently.

Major Hinkly was fortunate in his immediate parentage, was a healthy boy, surrounded by the best home influences, and aside from the natural fondness of boys for sports had a decided partiality for reading. He pursued his studies in the private school of Geroge G. Carey in Baltimore, a school noted for the thoroughness of its instruction, and from that school in 1881 he passed to the Academic Department of Johns Hopkins University. In 1884 he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and then took up the study of law in the Law School of the University of Maryland, from which he received the degree of LL.B. in 1886. The succeeding twenty-four years have been passed in the practice of his profession. The profession of law came to him as an inheritance, for his father and both grandfathers were capable lawyers. His first legal work was done under his father's eye, and, to some extent, under his direction. That direction, however, was wisely exercised, as he threw upon the young lawyer matters requiring self-confidence and judgment, and thus taught him self-reliance.

In 1888 he was admitted as a junior partner in the old firm of Hinkley and Morris, of which his father was a senior member. In 1893 he succeeded his father as secretary of the American Bar Association. The elder Hinkley was the secretary of that association from its foundation in 1878, and had given fifteen years of service. The son was the second secretary and gave sixteen years of service, declining a re-election in 1909. Thus father and son contributed more than thirty years of hard work to the building up of that association, which has been of immense value to the legal profession in our country.

Politically, Major Hinkley may be classed as an independent Democrat, for while his convictions hold him in line with the Democratic party as a rule, he has frequently, on occasions of local reform movements, voted for opposing candidates, and on the question of the gold standard voted with the Republican party in national elections. Many of the leading men of Baltimore of the present generation have given some service in the Fifth Maryland Regiment. Major Hinkley joined that famous organization in 1884 and is still a member, having held since 1903 the rank of major. On the outbreak of the Spanish-American war, when the regiment was mustered into the United States Volunteer army, he served with the rank of captain from May to October, 1898.

In this day of the making of many books, he has not contributed to literature beyond editing the proceedings of the American Bar Association. He is member of many societies and clubs, among which may be mentioned the University Club, the Johns Hopkins Club, the Baltimore Country Club, the Baltimore Whist Club of which he has been president, the Sudbrook Golf Club, the Baltimore Reform League, the Maryland Historical Society and the Civil Service Reform Association of Maryland.

His religious affiliation is with the New Jerusalem church. He has served as a director and counsel for the Female House of Refuge, as a member of the Executive Committee of the Baltimore Reform League and as a director of the "Friendly Inn." He holds membership in the state and city Bar Associtations and the International Law Association.

Major Hinkley has led the life of a hard-working lawyer, but has not become so absorbed in his professional work as to forget other needful things. He has given careful attention to civic duty, both in peace and war, to the cause of religion and to the support of philanthropic institutions.

Thomas Foley Hisky
(>>"Various Contributors", Baltimore: Its History and Its People, Volume II—Biography, Lewis Historical Publishing Co., New York and Chicago, 1912, pp. 204-205)

In proportion to the number of its inhabitants, Baltimore has a long list of legal practitioners, the oldest firm in this profession in the city having been established in 1819 by Edward Hinkley. Thomas Foley Hisky is a member of the firm which succeeds that so established. He is of German ancestry on the paternal side and English on the maternal, and has inherited a number of the admirable traits of these nations, notably the thoroughness and accuracy which characterize all that they undertake, and which have contributed not a little to the success which has attended the career of Mr. Hisky.

Joseph Hisky, the direct ancestor, came to America from Vienna in the early part of the nineteenth century, and took up his residence in Baltimore. He engaged in the manufacture of pianos, establishing the first factory for this purpose in the city of Baltimore, and resided there until his death.

John F. Hiskey, father of Thomas Foley Hisky, also resided in Baltimore. He married Matilda L., daughter of William Bennett Shipley, of Wilmington, Delaware. Mr. Shipley served in the War of 1812, and was a son of Samuel Shipley, a soldier of the Revolution, and a grandson of William Shipley, a native of Leicestershire, England, who came to Delaware with the Swedes and Finns who colonized that State.

Thomas Foley Hinkly was born in Baltimore, Maryland, July 22, 1865. He acquired his elementary education in the public schools of his native city, subsequently attending the Baltimore City College, from which he was graduated fourth in a class of twenty-one, in 1883. Having decided upon the legal profession as his life work, he commenced the study of law in the office of Hinkley & Morris, then composed of Edward Otis Hinkley and John T. Morris, the firm which had succeeded the Mr. Hinkley mentioned above. Messrs. Hinkley and Morris were the most prominent lawyers of their time, and under their able supervision Mr. Hisky studied and was enabled to pass the severe and thorough examination with honor. He was admitted to the bar of Baltimore, November 11, 1886, remaining with the firm with which he had studied. In 1888 he became an associate of the firm of Hinkley & Morris, and upon the death of Mr. Morris, the present firm of Hinkley, Spamer & Hisky was formed.

As a business man Mr. Hisky is quick to see an emergency and equally quick in formulating a plan to overcome it, and he takes high rank among his professional brethren. His interests are numerous and varied. He is a director of the Central Savings Bank of Baltimore, and of some other corporations. His political opinions are those of the Democratic party, and although he has never sought public office, he has fulfilled several public trusts to which he was appointed. By appointment of Mayor Hooper he served as a member of the Commission in City Charities, and by appointment of Mayors McLane and Mahool, he was a member of the Board of Visitors to the Baltimore City Jail, who also have charge of the reformatories in the city of Baltimore, with which it has contracts. As one of the two referees in bankruptcy for Baltimore City, he has been very efficient since 1898. He is connected with several charitable institutions, and is a member of the Board of Federated Charities. He is past chancellor of the Catholic Benevolent Legion, having served as president of its State Council, and was secretary of this Council for a period of fourteen years. Shortly after its organization he became a member of the Catholic Club, was a member of its board of governors and a member of the committee which established its present home. Other organizations with which he is connected are: Maryland Historical Society, Bar Associations of the City of Baltimore and of the State of Maryland, the American Bar Association, German Society of Maryland, University Club, Royal Arcanum, Children's Aid Society, Young Catholics' Friends' Society, St. Vincent de Paul Society and the Alumni Association of the Baltimore City College of which he has served as president.

Mr. Hisky married Hannah T., daughter of George McClelland, a native of Edinburgh, Scotland, and for many years a resident of Baltimore. They have had six children. Personally Mr. Hisky is a popular and highly respected citizen. An eloquent and witty and convincing speaker, the arguments he advances are so liberal and broad-minded that his opponents invariably have a hard battle to fight, and in the majority of cases he remains the victor. He is most practical in the application of the knowledge he has acquired, and has done much to further the growth of Baltimroe in various directions.

C. A. E. Spamer was closely involved in the affairs of the patrotic fraternity of the Grand Army of the Republic. In 1903 at least he was Junior Vice-Commander ("With the Several Posts", The Sun (Baltimore), 31 May 1903). He was also, at least in 1907, the secretary of the Maryland Department of that organization (>>"G.A.R. Affairs", Baltimore American, 13 Jan 1907).

Addition

Among probably numerous other civic activities, C. A. E. Spamer was a member of the Icarus Literary Debating Club. (>>"Icarus Club Has Dinner". The Sun (Baltimore), 9 Dec 1905.)

Page I-141

Addition

C. A. E. Spamer was elected corresponding secretary of the Maryland Association of the Church of the New Jerusalem in November 1868.

Addition

C. A. E. Spamer was involved in the formation of the Baltimore City Sunday School Association, of which he was a member of its Executive Committee; created at a meeting at St. Paul's Evalangelical Lutheran Church (Druid Hill Ave. and McMechen St.). According to the newspaper article, "The purpose of the organization is to further the efforts of the Sunday school workers in churches of various Protestant denominations." (>>"To Aid Sunday-school Work", The Sun (Baltimore), 12 May 1904.)

Addition

C. A. E. Spamer's trip to the Orient with his daughter, Bona Pearl, while surely involving some kind of church business, was also an opportunity to visit his son, Carl Ober, who then worked in Japan (about which see more farther below under discussions of Carl Ober Spamer).

The Baltimore American for 20 March 1910 (p. 14) included an article relating to a letter sent from Japan by C. A. E. Spamer to John G. Taylor, who both were affiliated with the Grand Army of the Republic. The article is as follows, in full:

Enjoying Life Among the Japs

Capt. Spamer's Interesting Letter to Col. Taylor.

Member of Grand Army of the Republic, Who is Making His Home in the Orient, Surprised at Intelligence of Japanese — Their Wonderful Patriotism — Great Opportunity for Christianity.

Col. John G. Taylor, 712 North Fujlton avenue, a prominent Grand Army man, and treasurer of the Grand Army Club, was the recipient of a letter last week from Capt. C. A. E. Spamer, who is at present on a visit to Japan, China and the Philippines, and also of his experiences in the Orient. Captain Spamer in his letter says:

My tour of the foreign lands has been exceedingly interesting, alternating between activity and rest, or rather, vice versa, as rest periods proceed, as a rule, my activity in travels.

The never ceasing wonders in the Orient, in Japan, China and the Philippines have afforeded a great variety of entertainment, amusement and adventure. Things are all so different—customs and habits so strange in contrast with the Occidental civilizaiton with which we are more familiar.

I am living semi-Japanese style, in a little bungalow. My son and daughter are my companions, and a three years' residence with these people can enable us to more fully enter into the life of this wonderful nation. I have been astonished at the intelligence of many I have met, and some of them surprise me in their discussion of abstract principles, so great a knowledge do they show of philosophy, psychology and kindred subjects and familiarity with the great authors. Of course, there is also a lower class where dense ignorance prevails.

Patriotism is their cardinal virtue, the Japanese soldier rejoices to die for his emperor, who is the embodiment to him of all that is great and good. Religion rests lightly upon the people, notwithstanding the multitude of temples and the thousands of gods scattered all over the land. Much attention is given to education of the rising generation and with the advance of intelligence, superstitious worship must necessarily go, and in the breach thus created a true Christianity ought to be ready to follow, that there may be an uplift of the benighted humanity in this part of the globe.

My experiences on the rim of an active volcano and at another time among the rapids of a torrential river, furnished strong contrast to our quiet cottage life, amid the pastoral scenes, so you can see it gives me a variety of entertainment suited to both active and passive states of mind. I expect that I shall miss some familiar faces on my return home; you tell me of the passing of Captains Zimmerman and Ruth, and from friends in other walks of life, I hear of others who have jonied the hosts above. I shall think of you on Memorial Day when, as it would naturally occur to Grand Army of the Republic men, a beautiful wreath of flowers will doubtless be circled around the neck of the hero in the group on the monument dedicated last November.

On or about January 27, 1932, Consul General Cunningham, Consul Spamer, and Clerk Vivian E. Hooper, stationed at Shanghai, sent certain articles of clothing and furnishings to be laundered to certain Chinese laundries, which were located within the zone of the hostile operations, and as soon after the cessation of hostile operations as was considered safe a messenger was sent to inquire regarding the said laundry, but no trace of it nor of the laundrymen could be found.

A summary of the amounts claimed and the amounts allowed and recommended to be appropriated for reimbursement are:

Name	Claimed	Disallowed	Allowed
Edwin S. Cunningham, consul general	$147.00	$32	$115.00
Carl O. Spamer, consul	33.00		33.00
Vivian E. Hooper, clerk	17.50		17.50

Consuls Cunningham and Spamer, and clerk Hooper, apparently were greatly delayed in, or never received, reimbursement. An identical bill, with sundry emendations apparently not affecting this claim, appeared in subsequent House resolutions and reports in 1937.

Emendation and Addition

Carl Ober Spamer transferred to Tokyo sometime between January–July 1932. Records are noted here of his presence as Consul in that city by July. In the examples seen, he conveys confidential memoranda (declassified 1980) dated 7 July and 31 August, relating to his interviews of U.S. citizens who had visited Soviet Russia. These documents also further illustrate the kinds of duties performed by Consul Spamer. A newspaper record, published upon the return of Carl Ober and Frieda Spamer to Baltimore in 1911, notes, "Just six years ago yesterday a young man left his father's home in Baltimore and satrted for the Orient, where he had been sent by the Young Men's Christian Association to teach a people whose language and customs were unknown to him." (The Sun, 3 Sep 1911). This at least gives us the timing of Carl Ober's departure from Baltimore (September 1905). See farther below for a complete transcription of this newspaper article.

Correction

For

Nothing further is known of Frieda Lorenz until she meets Carl Ober Spamer probably in Japan or China sometime during the latter part of the first decade of the 1900s.

Read

Based on information now known from the newspaper report of Frieda Lorenz's marriage to Carl Ober Spamer in 1910 (see p. I-150), she had been a resident of Ohio when she became a foreign missionary in Kucheng, China. Sometime around 1907, she was in Tokyo, where she met Carl Ober, who was an English teacher there.

Addition

A brief sketch about Frieda Lorenz, accompanied by a photograph of her, appeared in the Woman's Missionary Friend (Vol. 37, no. 4, April 1905, p. [122]), in a summary item that takes notice of numerous women who were going overseas as missionaries of the Women's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church:

> MISS FRIEDA V. LORENZ sailed from Seattle for Kucheng, China, November 30, 1904, under the auspices of the Minneapolis Branch. Miss Lorenz came to America from Germany in 1896 and for eight years have [sic] been full of earnest work in preparation for the field to which God's Providence has called her. Her father's dying prayer was that one of his children might go as a missionary to the foreign field. Miss Lorenz attended the General Executive Meeting in Kansas City, where many met her and realized that she was a young woman of rare promise.

Addition

Miscellaneous records provide more information of the whereabouts of Carl O. Spamer during the period 1907-1910:

In 1907, he is listed among "Association Teachers in Japan" (>>The Christian Movement in Japan. Fifth Annual Issue. Methodist Publishing House, Tokyo, for The Standing Committee of Co-operating Christian Missions, 1907, p. 397.)

At the 88th annual session of the General Convention of the Church of the New Jerusalem, Carl O. Spamer is listed c/o Rev. H. M. Landis, Meiji, Gakuin, Shirokane, Tokyo. (>>Journal of the Eighty-Eighth Annual Session of the General Convention of the New Jerusalem in the United States of America, 1908 [convention in June 1908].) The Meiji address is also listed in the 1907 "Missionary Directory" in the 5th annual The Christian Movement in Japan (Methodist Publishing House, Ginza, Kyobashi, Tokyo, 1907, for The Standing Committee of Co-operating Christian Missions).

At the 90th annual session of of the General Convention, Carl O. Spamer is listed at Hama no cho, Kagawa ken, Shikoka, Takamatsu. (>>Journal of the Ninetieth Annual Session of the General Convention of the New Jerusalem in the United States of America, 1910 [convention in May 1910].)

Page I-149–150

Addition

A newspaper record indicates that Carl Ober Spamer's father and sister (Christian Augustus Emanuel Spamer and Lois Mae Spamer) departed for Japan on 5 October 1909 ("Will Visit Son In Japan", The Sun (Baltimore), 5 Oct 1909):

> Will Visit Son In Japan.
> Mr. C. A. E. Spamer, of the law firm of Hinkley, Spamer & Hisky, will leave to day for Japan, where he will visit his son, Carl Ober Spamer, who has lived there for two years, engaged in teaching.
>
> Mr. Spamer will extend his tour to the Philippines during the Christmas holidays, with a short stay in China.
> He will be accompanied by Miss Lois Mae Spamer. They will sail from Vancouver, British Columbia, on October 20, and will return next May via Honolulu and San Francisco.

Correction and Addition
Paragraphs 2 and 3 to be emended with the following information:

Carl Ober Spamer and Frieda V. Lorenz were married 31 August 1910 in Yokohama, Japan. The wedding information was communicated to Carl Ober's father, C. A. E. Spamer, in Baltimore, Maryland. A first announcement appeared in the Baltimore American for 24 September 1910 (p. 14), but a somewhat more informative article was printed in the Baltimore American for 27 September 1910, as follows:

> Baltimorean Married in Japan.
> Word has been received by Mr. C. A. E. Spamer, of 1702 Bolton street, that his son, Carl Ober Spamer, and Miss Frieda V. Lorenz, of Ohio, but a missionary at Kucheng, China, were married on August 31. The ceremony took place at the American Consulate, Yokohama, Japan, and was performed by the Rev. H. M. Landis, of Tokio, The groom's father said last night that his son had met Miss Lorenz about three years ago at Tokio, where they were attending some social function. Mr. [C. O.] Spamer was at that time instructor of the English language at Aoyma College, Tokio, and Miss Lorenz a missionary stationed at that place. the couple are now living at Takamatsu, on the Island of Shikoku. Mr. Spamer is instructor of English at a government school at the place. Mr. and Mrs. Spamer will leave Japan in December on their honeymoon. They will arrive here sometime in September, 1911.

Note that this report also provides information that Frieda Lorenz had once resided in Ohio, where presumably her parents or guardians resided. This does not conflict with the circumstantial information provided elsewhere in this part of the genealogy, which indicated that Frieda Lorenz had immigrated into the United States apparently with an intended destination in Illinois. She eventually had settled in Michigan, as was noted in the newspaper item quoted below, although this is not surely corroborated by other evidence (noting here that in other sources she is indicated as having been from Ohio). Despite numerous, wide-ranging attempts, including many partial misspellings and the use of "wildcards", Frieda Lorenz has not yet been located in the 1900 U.S. census.

Still yet another notice of Frieda Lorenz Spamer has been found in The Fort Wayne Daily News (Indiana) for 19 February 1912 (p. 10), which provides some scant information about her whereabouts prior to her marriage. The notice was listed under the separate section for "Auburn News":

> Mrs. C. O. Spamer, formerly Miss Frieda Lorenz, well-known here, now a returned missionary from China, filled the M. E. pulpit Sunday morning. [Entire note.]

From the above-noted different sources, we may discern that Frieda Lorenz had migrated throughout the Ohio–Illinois–Indiana–Michigan area, although the circumstances of her movements are not known now, nor whether some of her movements were with her guardians while still underaged.

The Spamer–Lorenz marriage was also noted briefly in Woman's Missionary Friend for November 1910.

The Sun (Baltimore) for 3 September 1911 took note of the Spamers' return to Baltimore. It also provides us with information on the circumstances of Carl Ober's first overseas work, which was on behalf of the YMCA, and that, at least at that time (1905) he did not speak Japanese. The article is, in its entirety, as follows (explanations for footnotes appear after the text and illustrations):

Young Baltimorean Returns To Pursue Studies
For Missionary Work in Flowery Kingdom

Just six years ago yesterday a young man left his father's home in Baltimore and started for the Orient, where he had been sent by the Young Men's Christian Association to teach a people whose language and customs were unknown to him.

He was again under his father's roof yesterday. He had circled the globe, had been married and traveled with his bride 12,000 miles on a wedding tour. This young man is Mr. Carl Spamer, son of Mr. C. A. E. Spamer, 1702 Bolton street. He left Japan for a short time to learn more from America and go back to teach it to the young men of Nippon. Mrs. Spamer was Miss S. [sic] V. Lorenz, of Michigan, a missionary to Japan.

But all of all his experiences, Mr. Spamer is proudest of the occasion when he stood within touching distance of the Emperor of Japan* when Admiral Togo†, lately the guest of Baltimore, was personally greeted by his Imperial Majesty. "And this is a sight which few have the privilege of witnessing," Mr. Spamer said.

"General Nogi‡ was there, too," he added. "Those three are the three greatest men in the East. It was at the time of the cherry blossom festival in 1907. The Emperor was giving an annual reception and I was one of the chosen few to attend this affair. It took place in the beautiful garden of one of the Imperial palaces. The ladies were fashionably, but uncomfortably, dressed in the latest Parisian costumes, and all the men, except the military atttaches of the embassies, in frock coats, silk hats and striped trousers. And those frock coats were of all fits and lengths.

"When the Emperor appeared every voice was hushed, the way before him was cleared and only the low melody of the national anthem could be heard. He went to his seat, and I was within three feet of him—and there he received Admiral Togo and the others. I especially remember Togo and his little round cheeks.

"There are many quaint but unbreakable formalities which still hedge about the Emperor, but I think they will be changed when his son succeeds him. The Crown Prince§ is absolutely modern, but he has not the appearance and the deep eyes of his father.

"Japan is a beautiful country and the people are true artists. It is a great nation, and I will be back there soon with my wife, of course, after pursuing some special studies in this country."

* The emperor was Mutsuhito, the first monarch of the modern Japanese era, a constitutional monarchy; he reigned 1867-1912. Posthumously he is known as the emperor Meiji.

‡ General Nogi was Count Nogi Maresuke (1849-1912). At the time of the audience here mentioned, he was near to retiring from his service, having been a prominent figure of the Russo-Japanese War. A strict moral traditionalist, he died by his own hand in an act of atonement for pereceived failings in his military service. He died a month and a half after the emperor Meiji.

†Admiral Togo was Marquis Tōgō Heihachirō (1848-1934). At the time of the audience here mentioned, he was Chief of the Naval Staff, highly accomplished and respected, and in 1913 was given the honorific title, Fleet Admiral. Later, he was in charge of the education of the prince, Hirohito, grandson of the emperor Meiji.

§The crown prince was Yoshihito, who was emperor 1912-1926 (posthumously the emperor Taishō); his son, in turn, was Hirohito (posthumously the emperor Shōwa), who reigned 1926-1989.

Details of Carl Ober and Frieda Spamer's itinerary during their honeymoon trip still are largely unknown, but did include a visit during June 1911 to the Spamer ancestral hometowns in Germany. (Regarding his visit to the German homeland, see pp. I-29–33 in the Spamer Family genealogy.) An article that appeared in the Baltimore American announced the forthcoming return of the Spamers to Baltimore, which also provided at least a country list of some of the places through which the Spamers had passed (Baltimore American, 26 August 1911, p. 12):

> Mr. Spamer Returning
> Son of Union Veteran Spent Six Years in Foreign Travel.
> Mr. Carl Ober Spamer, son of Mr. C. A. E. Spamer, one of the most prominent veterans of the Grand Army of the Republic in Maryland, is on his way home to Baltimore after an absence of six years, spent in foreign travel. With his wife, formerly Miss Frieda V. Lorenz, a missionary in Kuchen, China, Mr. Spamer sailed from Bremen on August 19.
> During his absence Mr. Spamer spent over a year on the Pacific Coast, and then embarked for Japan, traveling extensively throughout the Island Empire. He taught in the government schools of that country for three years. In 1909 he visited the Philippine Islands. A year ago Mr. Spamer married Miss Lorenz, who was then engaged in missionary work in Kuchen, China, having previously met her at Karuizawa, a summer resort in the mountains of Japan. The marriage took place in Yokohama and since then Mr. and Mrs. Spamer have been on their wedding trip, making a world-wide tour, visiting en route China, Ceylon, India, Egypt, Palestine, Italy, England, Germany and Switzerland, including within their range of travel Singapore, near the equator, and the North Cape, within the Arctic circle, spending a month in Sweden, Norway and Denmark.

We know from another newspaper article that Carl Ober and Frieda Spamer spent their honeymoon at least partly in visiting and working at missions around the globe. In 1913, Carl Ober Spamer attended the International Purity Congress in Minneapolis, when charges were made against missions and missionaries in India by Dr. Keshava Deva Shastri. These charges were defended by Spamer, who was quoted at length, basically summarizing that a sanitary, orderly home was not a luxury but a necessity despite being in stark contrast to the conditions, and beyond the means, under which millions live in India; and that the caste system in India prohibited people from participating in the very means that would improve the physical conditions of their lives and livelihoods. Spamer summarized , "And if Christianity is apparently making no headway in India—which I deny—is not that all the more reason why we should redouble our efforts to bring Christ's message to India, the saddest country on earth?" (>>"Defends Missionaries. Carl O. Spamer Says charges of Dr. Shastri Are Unfounded.", The Sun (Baltimore), 9 Nov 1913.)

Addition

A church camp meeting at Summit Grove, Maryland, was noted for 1912, at which Carl Ober and Frieda Spamer spoke of their work overseas (Mrs. E. D. Huntley, "Baltimore Branch Quarterly", Woman's Missionary Friend, October 1912, p. 372):

> The services were exceedingly interesting. There were addresses by Mr. Carl Spamer, representative of the Young Men's Christian Association in Japan and by Mrs. Frieda Lorenz Spamer, our returned missionary from China . . . .

Addition

Carl Ober Spamer received an LL.B. (bachelor's) degree from George Washington University in 1914, and he received his Master of Arts degree "with distinction" at the midwinter convocation excercises of George Washington University (George Washington University Catalogue, 1916; "26 Degrees Bestowed", The Washington Post, 23 Feb 1916) Frieda Spamer received her Bachelor of Arts degree at the 1916 commencement (George Washington University Bulletin, Catalog Number, March 1917, p. 336).

Addition

Pertaining to the departure of Carl Ober and Frieda Spamer from Switzerland, Frieda Spamer's emigration record from that country is dated June. She was to depart for New York from Bordeaux. In this record her birth year is given as 1881.

Page I-152

Addition

The Baltimore Sun reported Carl Ober Spamer's appointment to the U.S. Consular Service post at Basel, Switzerland, noting that he would depart on 6 September. "He is a native of this city and was graduated from the Maryland Law School. He also holds two degrees from George Washington University. Mr. Spamer has spent several years in travel, devoting much time to the study of Oriental cities and governments. He is a nephew of Arthur L. Spamer, chief clerk of the United States District Court in this city." The article was accompanied by a photograph of C. O. Spamer. (>>"Gets U.S. Consular Post in Switzerland", The Sun (Baltimore), 25 August 1916, p. 12.)

He soon went to the Far East, where from December 1919 to May 1920 he served temporarily a U.S. Consul in Yokohama, Japan, before going to a more permanent assignment in Sumatra. His arrival with his wife in Yokohama in January 1920 was after an eventful ocean crossing from San Francisco aboard the S.S. Nanking. The following items appeared in The Japan Advertiser (Tokyo):

The Japan Advertiser (6 Jan 1920):

> With 55 passengers for Yokohama and 17 nationalities in her list, the China Mail liner Nanking, Capt. T. H. Dobson, commanding, arrived Friday [2 Jan] from San Francisco a veritable treasure ship. She carried $18,000,000 in gold and silver coin and bullion, consigned to Shangai and Hongkong, also a belated Christmas mail totaling 4,176 sacks, and the heaviest cargo she has ever brought.
> The passengers and officers both agree that the voyage was one of the roughest in their experience. At San Francisco the ship was held over night in the Bay by a 60-mile gale, and for most of the voyage, stormy weather was encountered. It was especially severe 600 miles off Yokomama, when heavy seas and waves of almost typhoonic proportions, whipped by an 85-mile gale, dropped the ship into slow speed for over 36 hours, causing a delay of two days in her regular schedule.

> [The full passenger list included "Mr. and Mrs. Carl Spamer".]

[Elsewhere in the same issue is noted]:

> Mr. and Mrs. C. O. Spamer came to Yokohama on the Nanking December 31. Mr. Spamer is to become the American Consul Attached [sic] in Yakohoma. During the first two years of the war, Mr. Spamer was in the consular service in Switzerland, and later was associated with Herbert Hoover, the American national food administrator in Washington. During the past year he was connected with the United States shipping board. Mr. and Mrs. Spamer will make their home in one of the consular houses.

The Japan Advertiser (1 Feb 1920):

> Mr. and Mrs. Carl Spamer, moved yesterday into the consular quarters in the Consulate General, which have been repainted and redecorated. Mr. Spamer is the new American consul who arrived in Yokohama, a few weeks ago.

The Japan Advertiser (27 May 1920):

> CHANGE OF AMERICAN CONSULS IN YOKOHAMA.
> Mr. Carl O. Spamer Goes to Sumatra, His Place Being by Mr. L. L. Schnare. [sic]
> Mr. Carl Ober Spamer, who has been United States Consul in Yokohama since last December, has received orders to proceed immediately to Medan, Sumatra, to take over the Consulate there. Mr. Spamer came to Yokohama in December as consul, with the understanding that this post was to be a temporary one. His place in Yokohama will be taken by Mr. Lester L. Schnare, who arrived from America on May 19.
> The post to which Mr. Spamer goes had been assigned to Mr. Thomas Murray Wilson, the Consul at Tientsin, but Mr. Wilson's orders to go to Sumatra have been countermanded owing to representations to Washington from Consul-General S. T. Fuller. Medan is a town with about 14,000 inhabitants, including 6,000 Chinese, 7,000 natives and a thousand foreigners, mostly Dutch. Mr. and Mrs. Spamer will probably leave tomorrow for the new post.

Addition

During Carl Ober Spamer's tenure at the American Consulate in Amsterdam (1924–1929), the following miscellaneous note is made ("About Us", in "Consulate General of the United States. Amsterdam, The Netherlands" webpage, http://amsterdam.usconsulate.gov/history.html; accessed 4 Aug 2009):

> In March 1927, a lease, starting May 1, was signed by Consul Carl O. Spamer for the American Consulate General to be established at the "Bel-Etage" (first floor) of the premises Keizersgracht 473-479, Amsterdam.

Page I-155

Addition

It is interesting to surmise that had Carl Ober Spamer not retired at the age of 51 he may have remained in Japan until the outbreak of World War II.

[C. O. Spamer's successor to the Nagasaki post was Edward S. Maney, of Texas, assigned in December 1936 but who did not arrive until February 1937. He departed the following September, reassigned as a Secretary in the U.S. Diplomatic Service, and was replaced in October 1937 by Arthur F. Tower, of New York. It was Tower who was at this post during the worsening relations between Japan and the United States, and who was in charge of closing consulate posts at the start of war. He was directed to close the Nagasaki consulate on 23 June 1941, leaving Nagasaki on 4 August to assume charge of the Kobe consulate. He was at that post when Pearl Harbor was attacked on 8 December [Japanese date], and he remained in Japan until mid-1942. Tower returned to the U.S. aboard the S.S. Gripsholm, arriving in New York on 12 August 1942. (>>"The People of the Nagasaki Foreign Settlement", website http://www.nfs.nias.ac.jp/page027.html#UScons; accessed May 2009.)]

- - - -

The consulate was heavily damaged in the atomic bombing of Nagasaki in 1945. It was mentioned briefly by George Weller, who was the first foreign reporter to enter the city, in September, after the conclusion of World War II. He noted in his censored report, "Look at the pushed-in facade of the American consulate, three miles from the blast's center . . . and you can tell that the liberated atom spares nothing in the way." (>>George Weller, "A Nagasaki Report", 8 September 1945; widely reprinted, including transcriptions on numerous websites.)

The hypocenter ("ground zero") of the atomic bomb blast was about three miles north-northwest of this location. The relatively heavy damage to the consulate reported by George Weller was due to the fact there was little intervening topography to deflect the blast effects. (Japanese translations courtesy of Paul Callomon, 2009.)

Addition

The early-retirement voyage overseas noted in this genealogy is here emended with the following additional comment:

Carl Ober and Frieda Spamer departed New York aboard the S.S. American Farmer [the same ship as on which they returned to the U.S., as noted, but see also below], which arrived in Plymouth 17 Oct 1938 and in London on 18 Oct. The ship was under the United States Lines flag. Carl Ober was listed on the passenger list as "retired consul", with Japan as his country of last permanent residence. Their proposed address in the United Kingdom was simply, "c/o U.S. Lines", and the "country of intended future permanent residence" indicated only the category, "foreign countries". They debarked in London. Contrarily, the United Kingdom incoming passenger lists record this vessel as the S.S. American Traveler, arriving in Plymouth and London; other data are the same.

A large photograph of men assembled outdoors appeared in the Baltimore American for 9 August 1908, displayed on a page devoted to the news of fraternal organizations (but which heading was illegible in the microfilm copy seen); it relates to a committee for some purpose. In the photo legend, "Adolph Spamer" is identified in the 3rd (back) row, 3rd person from the right. This is very likely Adolf Spamer (I:99), not Adolph Noble Spamer (I:85), because A. N. On 18 January 1907, Arthur L. Spamer was appointed Clerk of the U.S. Circuit and District Courts in Baltimore, succeeding a man who had held the office for 57 years. As reported in The Sun (19 Jan 1907):

> Mr. Arthur L. Spamer Named
> Succeeds Mr. Chew As Clerk Of the United States Court.
> Mr. Arthur L. Spamer, deputy clerk of the United States Circuit and District Courts in Baltimore, was yesterday appointed clerk of those courts in place of the late James W. Chew, who was in the office 57 years. Mr. Spamer was appointed by district Judge Morris Clerk of the District Court. His appointment as Clerk of the Circuit Court was signed by United States Circuit Judges Nathan Goff and J. C. Pritchard and District Judge Morris.
> He was appointed a deputy clerk in the office on July 1, 1891. At that time, and for a long time previously he was a clerk in the law office of Hinkley & Morris, of which firm Judge Morris was a member before his elevation to the bench.
> The knowledge acquired by Mr. Spamer as a law clerk and as deputy clerk of the court well fits him for the duties of his new position. His promotion will be regarded as a fitting reward for a painstaking, obliging and courteous official. The duties of clerk are not new to him, as he performed them during the illness of Mr. Chew.

A corresponding, lengthier item in the Baltimore American (19 Jan 1907) provides a few extra details of Arthur L. Spamer's professional life:

Arthur L. Spamer Appointed Clerk

Named as Successor to Late J. W. Chew in U.S. District and Circuit Courts.

Mr. Arthur L. Spamer, who for the last 16 years has been a deputy clerk in the offices of the United States District and Circuit Courts, was appointed clerk of these courts yesterday, as the successor of the late James W. Chew.

Mr. Spamer was notified early yesterday morning of his appointment, and proceeded immediately to qualify, which took place before the opening of the regular court proceedings. The oath of office was administered by Judge Morris, in the presence of United States District Attorney John C. Rose, United States Marshal Langhammer and others.

The official appointment to the position was made by Judge Thomas J. Morris, for the United States District Court, and by United States Circuit Judges Nathan Goff, J. C. Pritchard and Morris for the United States Circuit Court. Mr. Spamer at once entered upon his duties.

Mr. Spamer was born in this city on September 12, 1861. He was educated in the public schools, and while yet a very young man entered the law office of Hinkley & Morris, where he served as clerk and studied law. This was the same law firm of which Judge Morris was a member, and when, in 1891,the position of deputy clerk in the office of the United States District Court became vacant, Mr. Spamer received the appointment. He assumed the duties of that position on July 1.

Mr. Spamer never became a member of the bar, but his knowledge of the law is unquestioned. This, with his long and varied experience, especially qualify him for the duties of the new office. It may be safely said, perhaps, that Mr. Spamer is a man without a single enemy. There is no service or favor too intricate for him to perform to oblige the many with whom he comes in contact as a court clerk. He is a man of strong domestic habits, and the most of his life not taken up by his professional affairs is spent with his family at their home, on Linden avenue.

Correction

The comments pertaining to Arthur L. Spamer's possible ownership in the Beverage House in Kingston, Baltimore Co., Maryland, do not pertain to his personal life. He was appointed Special Master by the U.S. District Court for Maryland and the U.S. District Court for the Middle District of Alabama in the dissolution at public sale of the Mount Vernon-Woodberry Cotton Duck Company. A lengthy public notice was seen in the State, a South Carolina newspaper, for 1 July 1915, and as well in The Sun (Baltimore), 2 July 1915. Thus, the remarks made in this genealogy do not pertain to a personal interest by A. L. Spamer in this property. Those remarks may be retained, if desired, as informational notes about a property for which Arthur Spamer was responsible in dissolving on behalf of the court, although the remarks have nothing to do with his own life or this family.

James Henry Blakeman was stricken with a "slight paralytic shock" on 15 September 1918, from which he succumbed on 21 September. ("J. H. Blakeman, Veteran of 1861, Stricken at Home", Bridgeport Telegram, 16 Sep 1918, p. 2; "G. A. R. Leader Dead after Brief Seige of Illness", Bridgeport Telegram, 23 Sep 1918, p. 1). The initial notice of his illness provides some information about his career:

> [He] is a clerk of the Board of Trustees of the Soldiers' home at Noroton, [who had] paid a visit to that institution Saturday and on his way back to his home in Stratford stopped for a business conference with Henry J. Seeley. * * *
> Commandant Blakeman enlisted at the beginning of the Civil war in Company D, 17th Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, at Stratford, and served all through the four years of the war. Returning to his home town he took up farming which he followed until a few years ago. He is one of the few men remaining in Elias Howe, Jr. post physically capable of taking care of the affairs of the organization. There have been very few Grand Army affairs that he has missed during the past few years and his comrades of the post hope for his speedy recovery so that his good offices may not be long missed.
> The sick man was in the midst of a political campaign when he was stricken as he aspires for the nomination as [state] senator from the 25th senatorial district of which Stratford is a part. He has done considerable work during the past few weeks in the interest of his candidacy and the strain of the work must have been too much for him although he has been able to go through many others successfully without any apparent injury to his physical well being.
> J. Henry Blakeman has represented the town of Stratford in the legislative halls at Hartford for a number of terms. He is at the present time and has been for over 20 years past an assessor of the town in which he lives. His term as assessor runs out this year and he has refused to be a candidate for the office again.
> Five years ago his wife died and he has lived since that time with his grandson, Lawrence Spamer at the Blakeman homestead in Oronoque.

The prominent obituary notice in the Bridgeport Telegram on 23 September reads in part:

> Commander J. Henry Blakeman of Elias Howe, Jr. post, G. A. R. [Grand Army of the Republic], died at his home in Oronoque, Stratford, at 3 o'clock Saturday afternoon after an illness of a little less than one week. The funeral, which is expected to be one of the largest ever held in Stratford, will be attended by all the membes of the G. A. R.in this city who are able to be present. Adjutant William M. Barnum desires that members of the Elias Howe post who are to attend this funeral take the Derby car leaving Fairfield avenue and Main street at 12:30 and to appear in uniform as far as possible. The burial of the veteran will be held in the family plot in Putney.
> * * * In addition to his work with the G. A. R., he was a worker in the Grange and has held a number of state offices. * * *

* * * He was to be a candidate for state senator at the convention to be held next month and his many friends in the 25th district had hoped that he might round out his useful career by holding that office for at least one term.

Up until a few years [ago] the veteran was a market gardener but lately he has devoted most of his time to this town and to the business of the G. A. R.

He was a member of the Stratford Congregational church, of the Cupheag club, Oronoque lodge of the Odd Fellows and of the Sons of the American Revolution. For over 30 years he was a member of the State Grange and was vice-president of the State Board of Agriculture, as well as secretary of the Soldier's Aid Fund. During his life long residence in Stratford he gained considerable property holdings and tracts in many parts of the town stand in his name.

The funeral services were conducted by Rev. J. Howard Hoyt of New Canaan, chaplain of the State Grange.

The parents of the baby, Robert Lee Robinson (1922–1922) have been identified. The baby's death certificate (Maryland State Archives) provides the following information: born 11 February 1922 to Ralph L[ouis]. Robinson [Sr.] and Mary A. Charity Robinson; died 21 August 1922 at the Robinson residence, 625 E. 30th St., Baltimore.

The name of Robert Lee Robinson in the list of interments at Rocky Rest should now not be in italics.

Emend note no. 489 as follows:

Robert Lee Robinson is thus far not included in the present genealogy. Although he clearly was a member of the family, who his parents were has not been determined as of the date when this text was prepared.

93. William Spamer (1847–1912)

Pages I-207–210

Corrections
Numerous, significant corrections are required.

In the genealogy, issues relating to William Spamer's marriage to Virginia Shackleford, presumption of a possible marriage to, and divorce of, another Virginia Spamer, and the circumstances of the birth of son Joseph all were based upon a single, erroneous cemetery record for the burial of one Virginia Spamer, said to have been aged 28 years and presumed by A. M. Spamer and the present compiler (Earle Spamer) to have been Mrs. William Spamer. An official death record for a Virginia Spamer, aged 28 days, has now been located, which indicates that the Virginia Spamer buried in Baltimore Cemetery is an infant daughter of William and Virginia, hitherto not recorded in the family history.

The coincidence of the names, Virginia Spamer, the error in the infant Virginia's burial record, and the discovery (here) that there were two younger siblings of Joseph (Harriet and Norah), contributed to extensive, mistaken discussions in this genealogy about the birth date and parents of Joseph Spamer, as well as a confused discussion of the divorce proceedings William Spamer filed against one Virginia Spamer in 1887. The birth circumstances of son, Joseph, while now known to have been born to William and Virginia Shackleford Spamer, are still shrouded by ambiguous statements and still lack the data supported by an official birth record.

The following boxed entry supersedes the corresponding data in the genealogy:

93. William[5] Spamer (Christian[4], Johann Conrad[3], Johann Conrad[2], Johannes[1]) was born 21 March 1847 in Maryland, and died 21 January 1912. He married (1) Caroline E. Krumm 15 November 1868, daughter of Frederick Krumm and Christina Engle. She was born 03 February 1848 in Maryland, and died 07 December 1871 in Baltimore, Maryland. He married (2) Virginia Ellen Shackleford 26 February 1874 or 2 March 1874 in Stafford Co., Virginia. She was born September 1861 in Virginia and died after June 1900.

Child of William Spamer and Caroline Krumm is:

168 i. Willard Andrew[6] Spamer, born 28 August 1869; died 18 July 1870.

Children of William Spamer and Virginia Shackleford are:

Correction
The record of divorce proceedings between William Spamer and Virginia E. Spamer do relate to the parties under discussion here; she is listed in the 1900 U.S. census as a divorcée. Comments previously made in this genealogy, pertaining to a second Virginia Spamer, a possible third wife of William Spamer, are not correct. See more comments with Virginia (Shackleford) Spamer.

Addition
A notice in the Baltimore Sun for 25 January 1912 indicates: "Mr. William Spamer, one of the best-known marine engineers of this port, was yesterday reported dangerously ill at his home, 1511 Rutland Ave." This notice provides a residential address for this time. The family history, however, indicates that his date of death was 21 January, which may be a typographical error.

Correction
Emend the first paragraph to read:

Virginia Shackleford Spamer's given name must indeed be "Virginia Ellen", as originally reported by A. M. Spamer in the "Spamer Families of Baltimore".[518] Her surname, as discussed in the genealogy and as corroborated here, is Shackleford, not Shakeford as A. M. Spamer had reported.

- -

Addition

Virginia Shackleford's birth date is uncertain. Although U.S. census records indicate that she was born in 1861, the information may not be correct. A marriage record for Viirginia Ellen Shackleford to William Spamer is dated 2 March 1874.

All references to Virginia Shackleford Spamer's death are incorrect. Her date of death has not been determined; she was still alive 9 June 1900 at the time of the U.S. census in Fredericksburg, Virginia.

References to the burial of Mrs. Virginia Spamer in Baltimore Cemetery are in error; those references pertain to an infant daughter, also named Virginia. The error had been introduced first in A.M. Spamer's "Spamer Families of Baltimore". This was subsequently repeated—and seemingly corroborated—when I took information from a photocopy of the Baltimore Cemetery Company's file card for the burial of Virginia Spamer, which indicated that the deceased was 28 years of age, thus was assumed to be the age of William Spamer's wife, Virginia (Baltimore Cemetery Co. to Earle Spamer, photocopy of lot record card, Nov 2007).

As known now, the burial in question was that of an infant, Virginia Spamer, aged 28 days, not to a 28-year-old adult as mistakenly indicated on the card. This error also led A. M. Spamer to suppose that this record was for Mrs. Virginia Spamer, whose death date was otherwise unknown.

In 1975, Baltimore Cemetery had indicated in a letter to Frances D. Spamer, sister of A. M. Spamer (8 Jul 1975, reproduced in facsimile in "Spamer Families of Baltimore", appendix pp. A-41–A-42): "As our office was downtown at the time of the Baltimore Fire [in 1904] our detailed records were destroyed." Thus, the only official cemetery record now available of the Virginia Spamer burial is the cemetery card file of interments and minor business affairs. Other information in that letter was transcribed by a cemetery employee, and thus one may suppose that an error may have been made therein. My own corroboration of the supposed burial of Mrs. Virginia Spamer was, however, based on the inferentially reliable photocopy of both sides of the Baltimore Cemetery's own file card, as sent to me by the cemetery office when I inquired anew for information about Virginia Spamer. Both sides of the card note Virginia Spamer's interment date of 3 May 1881. Her age, written on one side card as "28 yr" is written clearly—but we know now that "yr" is obviously a clerical error.

A copy of the Certificate of Death from the City of Baltimore Board of Health clearly indicates that the burial in Baltimore Cemetery—on 2 May 1881—was of an infant, Virginia Spamer, aged 28 days. The cause of death is indicated as "Spasms—a few hours". Her date of death is given as 1 May 1881, at 22 N. Caroline St., Baltimore. It is not clear whose residence this was at the time. Several families of Spamers and relations resided on Caroline St. (although none known at 22 N.), although 18 N. Caroline St. was the family residence of Virginia's grandfather, Christian Spamer (d. 1880; he was the father of William Spamer, Virginia's father)

Mrs. Virginia (Shackleton) Spamer was indeed divorced from her husband. At the time of the 1900 U.S. census, she is listed as a divorcée. She, with two of her children, Harriet and Norah Spamer, at that time resided with Virginia's widowed mother, Elizabeth Shackleford, at 417 Dixon St., Fredericksburg, Virginia. Note that in this census she still retains her married name and is designated as divorced. This census further indicated the presence of two children hitherto unknown to the family history, who are reintroduced in the present genealogy.

Delete the entire following section [and see Addition that follows]:

I have attempted to locate Virginia in the U.S. census records. There is but one pertinent record, from the 1870 census, which lists a "Virginia C. Shackleford", aged 18 (thus born about 1853), born in Virginia. She is listed as the eldest child residing with her parents and siblings in Bland Township, Prince George's Co., Maryland; the daughter of W. S. and Sarah J. Shackleford, farmer and teacher, respectively, who both were born in Virginia.

This could be the Virginia who within a couple of years married William Spamer. I have not located any other pertinent Virginia or Jennie of similar age under any variant spellings of Shackleford. In the 1870 census record just mentioned, Virginia Shackleford's siblings and their ages are listed as follows: Anna E., 15; Lula L., 14; Lottie B., 11; William T., 12; Edward F., 10; John, 6; all born in Virginia, as were their parents. (Note, however, that in the 1880 census, Virginia Spamer, wife of William, is listed with the notations that her father was born in Maryland, her mother in Virginia.)

Also of note is a record in the family genealogy of one Pleasant Alice (Shackleford) Anderson (born about 1885), daughter-in-law of Emma S. (Bopst) Anderson (1850-1937), wife of Thomas A. Anderson (1844–1933). Emma Bopst was the aunt (by marriage) of George Edward Bopst (1875–after April 1930), who married Cecelia E. Spamer (1880-1927) [No. 189]. Thus there is likely to be a genealogical connection between Virginia Shackleford and Pleasant Shackleford, but which is as yet undetermined.

The 1880 U.S. census lists Virginia Spamer's age as 21, which yields for her a calculated date of birth about 1859; but her age as given there is likely in error. Thus far we have only the authority of the lot record card from the Baltimore Cemetery Co., which notes the interment of "Virginia Spamer May 3, 1881 [aged] 28 yr".[519] Accordingly, her calculated birth date is about 1853. Note that the 1853 date agrees with the information recorded for "Virginia C. Shackleford" in the 1870 census of Bland Twp., Virginia, mentioned above.

Virginia Shackleford Spamer was buried at Baltimore Cemetery in Lot 298, Area I, a lot originally purchased by Ludwig Spamer [No. 37].[520]

Delete footnotes 519 and 520.

Addition

The 1880 census record for a Shackleford family, as reported in the original text of this genealogy as being possibly the family of Virginia Shackleford, is not correctly attributed. Even with the new information here reported, no pertinent Shackleford family has been located in the 1880 census.

At the time of the 1900 U.S. census in Fredericksburg, Virginia, Virginia Spamer is a divorcée residing with her widowed mother, next door to other, unspecified Shackleford relations. The data for the households are as follows:

	Relation	Date of birth	Age	Marital status	Born in	Occupation
Residing at 417 Dixon St.
Shackleford, Elizabeth	Head	Mar 1830	70	Widowed	Virginia
Spamer, Virginia	Daughter	Sep 1861	38	Divorced	Virginia	Seamstress
Spamer, Harriet A.	Granddaughter	Oct 1885	14		Maryland
Spamer, Norah	Granddaughter	Oct 1888	11		Virginia
Walters, Henry	Boarder	May 1872	28	Married	Virginia	Laborer
Residing at 415 Dixon St.
Shackleford, Margaret	Head	Jun 1860	39	Widowed	Virginia	Washer
Shackleford, William	Son	Jan 1878	21	Single	Virginia	Stationary engineer
Shackleford, Ida J.	Daughter	Oct 1889	10		Virginia
Shackleford, Anna A.	Daughter	Aug 1890	9		North Carolina

The 1900 census asked women how many children they had had, and how many of those children were then still alive. Virginia Spamer answered "6" to both questions, thus not reporting the loss of the baby, Virginia Spamer, in 1881.

Here is a discovery of two additional children, not recorded in A. M. Spamer's "Spamer Families of Baltimore"—Harriet and Norah (spellings as given on the census sheet). Note that William Spamer had entered into divorce proceedings in 1887. Although it is not known when the divorce was decreed by the courts, notice also that Norah Spamer was born in October 1888 in Virginia, very probably after the couple had separated.

Also of note is a record in the family genealogy of one Pleasant Alice (Shackleford) Anderson (born about 1885), daughter-in-law of Emma S. (Bopst) Anderson (1850–1937), wife of Thomas A. Anderson (1844–

1933). Emma Bopst was the aunt (by marriage) of George Edward Bopst (1875–after April 1930), who married Cecelia E. Spamer (1880–1927) [No. 189]. The genealogical connection between Virginia Shackleford and Pleasant Shackleford, if any, is as yet undetermined. However, the family of Pleasant Shackleton may have been located in the 1900 U.S. census of Springhill Twp., Fayette Co., Pennsylvania, as follows:

	Relation	Date of birth	Age	Born in	Occupation
Shackleford, John	Head	Jan 1846	54	West Virginia	Day laborer
Shackleford, Emelene	Wife	Aug 1850	49	West Virginia
Shackleford, Plezzie	Daughter	Aug 1884	15	Pennsylvania
Shackleford, Henry	Son	Nov 1886	13	Pennsylvania
Shackleford, Robert L.	Son	May 1890	10	Pennsylvania

Addition

Walter Benjamin Spamer married Julia Hoch 18 December 1902 at the rectory of St. Katharine Catholic church; the wedding was officiated by Rev. C. P. Elbert. She was born about 1878. Walter and Julia Spamer at first resided on East North Ave., Baltimore.

Addition

171a. Virginia Spamer (1881–1881)

Virginia Spamer died aged 28 days, as testified by her Certificate of Death (Maryland State Archives). She was buried in Baltimore Cemetery on either 2 May 1881 (death certificate) or 3 May (cemetery record). The burial record card in the cemetery's files has erreoneously written "28 yr" for her age [see comments with information about her mother, above]. This error originally led both A. M. Spamer and Earle Spamer to assume that the deceased was Mrs. Virginia Spamer, wife of William, whose date of death is not now known.

(20 descendants)

The genealogy of the Pausch Family, as it relates to our Spamer lineage and as currently understood, is as follows. It is limited more to the lineage to great-great grandson Randolph Frederick Pausch, for specific reasons as noted in his sketch.

Descendants of George Pausch

1. George[1] Pausch was born about 1813 in Prussia. He married Louisa. She was born about 1824 in Wurtemburg, Germany.

Children of George Pausch and Louisa are:

+	2	i.	John H.[2] Pausch, born about 1838 in Maryland; died 19 March 1898 in Baltimore, Maryland.
	3	ii.	Margaret Pausch, born about 1843 in Maryland.
+	4	iii.	George August Pausch, born about 1849 in Maryland.
	5	iv.	Louisa Pausch, born June 1856 in Maryland.
+	6	v.	Frederick R. Pausch, born December 1859 in Maryland.
	7	vi.	Sophia Pausch, born about 1862.

NOTES

1. George Pausch (ca. 1813–)

At the time of the 1860 and 1870 U.S. censuses, George Pausch was a tobacconist.

Residences of George Pausch (from U.S. censuses):
1860: 8th Ward, Baltimore city, Maryland
1870: 5th Ward, Baltimore city, Maryland
1880: Henry St., Savannah, Chatham Co., Georgia

An obituary in the Baltimore Sun for 11 December 1884 notices the death of "George Pausch" on 10 December, "in the 73d year of his age". The funeral was to depart from "his late residence, No. 125 North Gay street".[524 [original footnote number]] This may refer to the George Pausch the present subject; and if so, it seems that he had returned to Baltimore since the 1880 census was taken in Savannah, Georgia.

[[524] Original footnote from main genealogy reads: The Sun (Baltimore), 11 Dec 1884.]

5. Louisa Pausch (ca. 1856–)

At the time of the 1900–1920 U.S. censuses she resided with her brother, Frederick R. Pausch [No. 6]. She never married.

Generation 2

2. John H.[2] Pausch (George[1]) was born about 1838 in Maryland, died 19 March 1898 in Baltimore, Maryland. He married Caroline F.

Child of John Pausch and Caroline is:

8 i. Caroline[3] Pausch, born about May 1871; died 09 November 1886 in Baltimore, Maryland.

[There are other children, as yet undetermined.]

NOTES

At the time of the 1860 census, John H. Pausch [No. 2] was a cigar maker. At the time of his decease he resided at 1628[?] W. Baltimore St., Baltimore, Maryland.

At the time of the decease of Caroline Pausch [No. 8], she was the youngest daughter of John H. and Caroline F. Pausch (obituary notice in The Sun, 10 Nov 1886).

---

4. George August[2] Pausch (George[1]) was born about 1849 in Maryland. He married Mary Elisabeth Spamer. She was born February 1849 in Maryland, and died 02 August 1906 aat 1723 E. Lanvale St., Baltimore, Maryland.

See main Spamer Family genealogy for information about George August Pausch, Mary Spamer, and their descendants.

---

6. Frederick R.[2] Pausch (George[1]) was born December 1859 in Maryland. He married Ernestine M. She was born July 1863 in Maryland.

Children of Frederick Pausch and Ernestine are:

9 i. Charlotte L.[3] Pausch, born September 1892 in Maryland.

\+ 10 ii. Frederick E. Pausch, born April 1895 in Maryland.

11 iii. Richard Pausch, born November 1899 in Maryland.

12 iv. Mary M. Pausch, born about 1908 in Maryland.

NOTES

Residences of Frederick R. Pausch (from U.S. censuses and Baltimore city directories):

1899 city directory: 442 N. Gay St.
1900 census: 442 Gay St., Baltimore, Maryland
1910–1930 censuses: 1719 N. Broadway, Baltimore, Maryland

Occupations of Frederick R. Pausch (from U.S. censuses and Baltimore city directories):

1899 city directory: cigar maker
1900 census: cigar manufacturer
1910 census: “merchant, cigars & tob[acco]”
1920, 1930 censuses: proprietor of tobacco store

Generation 3

10. Frederick E.[3] Pausch (Frederick R.[2], George[1]) was born April 1895 in Maryland. He married Marjorie. She was born about 1897 in Maryland.

Children of Frederick Pausch and Marjorie are:
13 i. Marjorie[4] Pausch, born about 1919 in Maryland.
+ 14 ii. Frederick Pausch, born 07 November 1922; died 26 June 2006.

NOTES

Frederick E. Pausch (1895–) was a lawyer. At the time of the 1930 U.S. census he resided at 3606 Rosedale Rd., Baltimore, Maryland.

Generation 4

14. Frederick[4] Pausch (Frederick[3], Frederick R.[2], George[1]) was born 07 November 1922 in Maryland; died 26 June 2006 in Maryland. He married Virginia. She was born about 1926.

Children of Frederick Pausch and Virginia are:
15 i. Tamara[5] Pausch. She married Mason.
+ 16 ii. Randolph Frederick Pausch, born 23 October 1960 in Baltimore, Maryland; died 25 July 2008 in Chesapeake, Virginia.

NOTES

Frederick Pausch (1922–2006) enlisted in the U.S. Army 24 August 1942 when he had had two years of college education. He was known as "Fred".

Generation 5

16. Randolph Frederick[5] Pausch (Frederick[4], Frederick[3], Frederick R.[2], George[1]) was born 23 October 1960 in Baltimore, Maryland; died 25 July 2008 in Chesapeake, Virginia. He married Jai.

Children of Randolph Pausch and Jai are:
17 i. Dylan[6] Pausch, born about 2001.
18 ii. Logan Pausch, born about 2004.
19 iii. Chloe Pausch, born about 2006.

(photo from Wikipedia)

Randy Pausch was raised in Columbia, Maryland, and graduated there from Oakland Mills High School. He earned a Bachelor's degree in computer science from Brown University, 1982, and Ph.D. in computer science from Carnegie Mellon University, 1988. From 1988 to 1997 he was an Assistant and Associate Professor of Engineering and Applied Science at the University of Virginia, School of Engineering and Applied Science. He then became Associate Professor of Computer Science, Human-Computer Interaction, and Design in Carnegie Mellon University, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. He worked with the Disney Imagineers in virtual reality research and was a proflific author in his field.

His most engaging source of recognition came after he was diagnosed with pancreatic cancer in 2006, and he underwent various procedures and therapies in an unsuccessful attempt to halt the disease. He became widely known as an advocate for increased federal funding for research on pancreatic cancer, testifying before U.S. Senate hearings on the matter. Having a broad international audience for his campaign, on 18 September 2007 he delivered his "Last Lecture" at Carnegie Mellon University before an audience of hundreds. The lecture was given in a venue of lectures where noted scholars present talks in which they impart their thoughts were they, hypothetically, to have a last chance to do so in life. Pausch noted with humor the irony that the “Last Lecture” series had recently been renamed the “Journeys” series. The lecture was widely publicized and made available on Randy Pausch’s website at the university, almost immediately receiving a million “hits” on the Internet. Hyperion, the publisher owned by the Disney corporations, paid $6.7 million dollars for the rights to a book about Randy Pausch, The Last Lecture, coauthored by Pausch and Wall Street Journal reporter Jeffrey Zaslow. Expanding on Pausch’s Last Lecture, the book became a New York Times best seller three months before Pausch’s death and has been translated into more than 30 languages. He continued to deliver inspirational speeches based on the book.

Raised a Presbyterian, Randy Pausch became a member of the Unitarian Universalist Church, first at the First Unitarian Church of Pittsburgh, in Pennsylvania.

A large photograph of men assembled outdoors appeared in the Baltimore American for 9 August 1908 on a page devoted to the news of fraternal organizations (but which heading was illegible in the microfilm copy seen); it relates to a committee for some purpose. In the photo legend, "Adolph Spamer" is identified in the 3rd (back) row, 3rd person from the right. This is very likely Adolf Spamer (I:99) because Adolph Noble Spamer (I:85) was then residing in Washington, D.C. Thus far no photographs of either of these men have been found in family records.

Addition

Other notices of Adolph Spamer's civic activities have been located in articles published in the Baltimore Sun. He was a member of the Aztec Tribe, No. 137, of the Improved Order of Red Men ("Tribe of Red Men At Banquet", 18 Feb. 1905); an organizer of the Hillside Club in Grogan Heights ("Hillside Club Celebrates", 5 Jul 1905); member of the Grand Court of Maryland, Foresters of America ("In Suburbs and County", 16 May 1906), of which in 1900 at least he was deputy supreme chief ranger for Maryland ("Foresters' Day, 16 Aug 1900); and an incorporator of the Home Builder Permanent Savings and Loan Association ("Loan Association Incorporated", 10 Nov 1907). In addition, as president of the Citizens' Improvement Association of Northeast Baltimore, he supported placing "the proposed monument to Edgar Allan Poe" on Broadway, at North Ave.; presumably this is the sculpture by the American, Sir Moses Jacob Ezekiel, commissioned in 1907 by the Women's Literary Club of Baltimore, placed originally in Wyman Park but subsequently removed to the University of Baltimore ("Broadway For Poe Statue", 11 Nov 1911). He was also a member of the committee of the National Star Spangled Banner Centennial Commission, who called for local support in more widely advertising "the fact that Baltimore is the logical and economic port on the Atlantic for distribution of shipments to the Middle West coming via the Panama Canal from south America, California, etc., and vice versa," and "Then call attention to the value and wealth of the fish, crabs, terrapin and oysters under the surface of Maryland waters . . ." She married (1) Aristello Gable 14 December 1872. He was born 04 June 1844 in Pennsylvania, and died 13 December 1891 in Murray's lodging house, 708[?] E. Baltimore St., Baltimore, Maryland.

Addition
Sarah E. Gable is also listed in the 1892 Baltimore city directory operating a dry goods store at 702 N. Calhoun St.; in the 1893 and 1895 directories she is listed as selling notions at that address.

Her obituary notice appeared in The Sun (Baltimore), 19 November 1911:

> HOLMES.—Suddenly, on November 17, 1911. SARAH E., beloved wife of Andrew E. Holmes.
> Funeral from her late residence, No. 1908[?] North Washington street, on Monday November 20, at 2 P. M.

This also provides a residential address in 1911.

Emendation
Regarding the surname of Sarah Spamer's first husband, on the authority of the substantial grave monument erected for Sarah in Western Cemetery, Baltimore, the name is "Holm", whereas in various public records seen it is "Holmes", which is perhaps an Americanization.

The cemetery lot (Area C, lot 189) was first visited by a Spamer family historian (Earle Spamer, with his wife, Jane Anderson) on 23 July 2009. The lot hosts a principal four-sided columnar marker inscribed on the north side, "Sarah E. beloved wife of A. E. Holm. Died Nov 17, 1911, aged 59 yrs. At rest." At the top on all four sides of the monument the letter "H" is carved. The east side of the monument is additionally inscribed "Holm". Two small monuments appear at the foot of the graves of Sarah Holm and Andrew Holm; they read, respectively, "S. E. H." and "A. E. H." Although Louisa Bruckner Holm is also shown in cemetery records to be buried in the same grave with her husband, Andrew, there is no marker for her. At least on the authority of the monument, presumably erected by Andrew Holm upon the death of his first wife, the surname is correctly "Holm". (The lot originally was purchased by Henry Spamer upon the death of his father, Johann Conrad Spamer, and here also Henry's mother, Johanetta, was buried; but their graves have no monument.)

THE Spamers have been intimately identified with the growth of The Sunpapers for over 33 years.

¶For the past 13 years George Spamer has been an authorized Sun Carrier having succeeded his uncle, E. O. H. Spamer, who retired after 20 years' service to the subscribers on Route No. 37, which is located in North Baltimore.

¶In 1888, when E. O. H. Spamer started as a Sun Carrier there were only 590 subscribers to THE SUN on this route which then included the entire territory bounded by North avenue (known as Boundary avenue in those days), Merryman lane, the York road and the Falls road. That was before the days of THE EVENING SUN and the big SUNDAY SUN.

¶From time to time, with the steadily increasing number of homes in this territory, the Spamers have disposed of parts of this route until today it covers only a small fraction of the original territory.

¶Of course, there has been a steady increase in the number of subscribers to The Sunpapers on Route No. 37. Some idea of this growth is obtained from the following figures covering a period of two years.

¶In that time, the number of subscribers to THE MORNING SUN on this route has increased from 1695 to 2085, or over 23 per cent.—the number of subscribers to THE EVENING SUN has increased from 1310 to 1605, or over 22 per cent.—and the number of subscribers to THE SUNDAY SUN has increased from 1990 to 2540, or over 27 per cent.

¶Are The Sunpapers delivered to your home by an authorized Sun Carrier? It's the sure, economical way to get your Sunpaper—Morning, Evening and Sunday. Send in the coupon and the Sun Carrier will do the rest.

Eck Family Collateral Genealogy

Rosa Eck (1881–)

Page I-250

Addition

The wedding announcement of Rose E. Eck [note spelling, which may note be the correct spelling] appeared in The Sun (Baltimore), 3 November 1907:

Denhardt–Eck

A quiet but pretty wedding took place last Sunday evening [27 Oct 1907], when Miss Rose E. Eck, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Eck, was married to Mr. John W. Denhardt, son of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Denhardt, at the home of the bride, 15 West Frederick street. The bride wore a brown traveling suit, with hat and gloves to match, and had as bridesmaid Miss Emma Eck, her sister. Mr. George P. Spamer was groomsman. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Peregrine Wroth, pastor of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the messiah. A collation followed the ceremony, after which Mr. and Mrs. Denhardt started on a Northern trip. On their return they will make their home at 1716 North Wolfe street.

(Emma Eck would, after April 1910, marry George Peabody Spamer (younger) [No. 190 in the Spamer Family genealogy].)

Addition

In September 2009 a concerted effort was made to search in U.S. census and other records in an attempt to locate the enigmatic Spamers—William J., his wife, Frances Lee, and J. Jane, who may or may not be a relation to them. Searching for individuals with approximate birth and death years of those indicated, by first names variously spelled, and last names similarly in numerous combinations and roots, failed to locate even suggestible individuals.

Only one posed an even remote possibility—in the 1930 census for Canton, Bradford Co., in northeastern Pennsylvania, a "Frances L. Palmer" [suggested as a potential census registration error, based on some pronunciations of "Spamer"], born ca. 1866, widow, laundry worker, born in Pennsylvania and parents in Vermont and New York. She resided on Lycoming St. as head of household with Nathaniel, an adopted son, aged 19, born in Pennsylvania. Interestingly, no other Frances Palmer or Spamer (or other constructs) with similar data has been identified in censuses other than 1930.

None of the individuals of interest here have been located in any census, nor do they seem to appear in other public records available through Internet sources.

The enigmatic Spamers first mentioned by the earlier family historians and reintroduced in the present genealogy, and researched again with more modern and accessible resources, continue to elude us. This is especially distressing regarding William and Frances, who are buried in the same lot as in which some of our Baltimore Spamers are buried.

John Ward Spamer was named for Rev. John Ward Hunt, and by whom he was baptized. [and accompanying footnote 587]

Read
John Ward Spamer was named for Rev. John Ward Hunt, and by whom he was baptized.

Hunt was a Baltimore advocate of Swedenborgian tenets, who, after the retirement of Rev. John Hargrove in 1834, continued at his own home the Baltimore services of the local New Church society. In 1867, Hunt was ordained into the Church of the New Jerusalem and preached on alternate Sundays to the First Society in Baltimoreas well as at neighboring locales. In 1868, Rev. Hunt removed to Anne Arundel County where he built a house and "fitted up a room for public worship." (>>Willard H. Hinkley, "The Maryland Association", in Annual Reports of the Associations, The New Jerusalem Magazine, Vol. 41 (for 1868-69), pp. 185-186; Carl Theophilus Odhner, Annals of the New Church, Vol. 1, 1688-1850 (Academy of the New Church, Bryn Athyn, PA, 1904), p. 395.)

Addition
The Baltimore Sun for 19 December 1898 records a real estate transfer from John W. Spamer to Edward O. H. Spamer; a property on the south side of North Ave. near McCulloh St. This is the 1201 W. North Ave. address herein given for the Spamer Bros. ice cream business, and where also their father, Henry Spamer, resided. The reasons for the transfer, or how J. W. Spamer had come into the property (presumed to have been his father's), are not clear at this time. Perhaps the transfers were as a result of Henry Spamer's financial problems, which had been caused by the fraudulent activities of an in-law to the Spamer family. (See more discussions about this with 41. Peter Heinrich Christian Spamer [Henry Spamer].)

Addition
Regarding the 5842 Whitby Ave. address cited for John W. Spamer from the 1907 Philadelphia city directory, a real estate transfer notice in The Philadelphia Inquirer (13 Oct 1906) identifies the time of the sale, although the buyer is listed there only as "J. Spamer". As yet this address is not confirmed as one held by John Ward Spamer, although it is only about 1.8 miles from the 3930 Pine St. address that is known for him at this time, and where he is known to still have resided in December 1907. If the Whitby Ave. address was an investment property, that fact had not been reported in the family.

Frederick "Fred" and Susan Mae Karner, with their daughter, Rosalie, are listed as having arrived in New York from Bremen, Germany, aboard the S.S. Grosser Kurfürst on 3 August 1904. Inexplicably, Susan appears to be listed as possibly "Lori", aged 26, and Rosalie is listed as aged 11 months. One may imagine that this was a trip that included visits to family with the first-born Rosalie.

Fred Karner is listed as having arrived in New York from Cherbourg, France, aboard the S.S. Saint Louis on 9 July 1905. His occupation is listed as "Manuf[acturer]", and one may suppose that this was a business trip.

The 1900 U.S. census gives his date of birth as June 1896. Birth and death dates here are obtained from the Pennsylvania Department of Military Affairs, veterans' burial records. He was the only one of seven children to survive beyond young childhood.

He was a veteran of World War I, serving in the U.S. Army 13 July 1918–25 July 1919; discharged from Unit 2 at the rank of Sergeant.

He is buried in Allegheny County Memorial Park, 1600 Duncan Ave., Allison Park, Pennsylvania, Section 849, Range J, Grave 2. There is a bronze marker on the grave.

Children of Florence Spamer and Ada are:

205b i. ‡ Edith F.[6] Spamer, born about 1908 in Pennsylvania.

205c ii. ‡ Charles D. Spamer, born about January 1916 in Pennsylvania.

NOTES

123. Florence Spamer (1874–)

Despite having a traditionally female name, Florence is this man's given name. He previously was listed in this genealogy as Lawrence Spamer, based on the record of the 1900 U.S. census, other records having not yet been seen.

Residences of Florence Spamer (from U.S. censuses and Pittsburgh city directories):

1893, 1896, 1897 city directories: 5 Lawrence Ave., Allegheny City (father's residence)
1900 census: 5 Lawrence Ave., Allegheny City (father's residence); mis-listed as "Lawrence" Spamer
1910 census: Ridge Ave., Ross Twp., Allegheny Co., Pennsylvania
1918 draft: Bellvue, Allegheny Co., Pennsylvania
1920 census: 713 Ridgeview Ave., Ross Twp., Allegheny Co., Pennsylvania

Occupations of Florence Spamer (from U.S. censuses and Pittsburgh city directories):

1893, 1896, 1897 city directories: clerk
1900 census: dry goods salesman
1910 census: salesman, National Biscuit Co.
1918 draft: salesman, National Biscuit Co., Liberty Ave., Pittsburgh
1920 census: salesman, bakery

Neither Florence, Ada, Edith, nor Charles D. Spamer have been located in the 1930 U.S. census.

Ada G. (Yost) Spamer (1872–)
(wife of Florence Spamer)

The following information about her parents and immediate family household is obtained from the 1900 U.S. census (residence on Chestnut Ave., Allegheny City, Allegheny Co., Pennsylvania):

Name	Relation	Birth	Birthplace	Occupation
Yost, Jacob	head	Apr 1837	Germany	"Machinist Bolts"
Yost, Vira J.	wife	Mar 1840	Ohio
Yost, Harry M.	son	Nov 1874	Pennsylvania	Newspaper dealer
Yost, Ada G.	daughter	Apr 1872	Pennsylvania
Yost, George T.	son	Nov 1878	Pennsylvania	Apprentice steamfitter
Caldwell, Charles R.	nephew	Feb 1882	Pennsylvania	Elevator boy

At the time of the 1910 and 1920 censuses, Jacob Yost, then a widower, resided with his daughter and son-in-law; also with them was Charles Caldwell. At the time of the 1910 census, George Yost also resided in the Florence Spamer household; at that time George's occupation was as a pipefitter in the Fort Wayne shops[873], at which time also Charles Caldwell was a clerk there. At the time of the 1920 census, Caldwell was a stock clerk for a railroad.

Thomas and Mary Dickinson, at least with the youngest children, have not been located in the 1900 U.S. census.

What became of Clara Spamer and Joseph Dickson has not been determined; they have not been located in census records after 1910, nor in city directories. At the time of the 1920 U.S. census for Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, the Dickinson children, Margaret and Ruth, were residing in the household of Carl R. Crawford (see below). By the time of the 1930 census, Ruth Dickinson had married, and her unmarried sister resided with her.

194a. Margaret Dickinson (ca. 1906–)
194b. Ruth (Dickinson) Herrmann (ca. 1908–)

At the time of the 1920 U.S. census for Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, teen-aged children Margaret and Ruth Dickinson resided in the household of Carl R. Crawford, to whom they were identified as cousins. Carl Crawford is a hitherto unidentified son of William J. and Lorenda (Spamer) Crawford [see Lorenda Spamer, No. 117 in main genealogy]; his siblings, Wilbert and Lorenda [Nos. 202, 203] were already known in the genealogy. The Carl R. Crawford household is listed as follows (residence at 119 Dunlap St.):

Name	Relation	Age	Marital Status	Born in	Occupation
Crawford, Carl R.	Head	26	Single	Pennsylvania	Motorman, street car
Crawford, Wilburt S.	Brother	22	Single	Pennsylvania	Fireman, railroad
Crawford, Lorenda	Sister	19	Single	Pennsylvania	Clerk, office
Dickinson, Margaret	Cousin	14	Single	Pennsylvania
Dickinson, Ruth	Cousin	12	Single	Pennsylvania
Spamer, Charles C.	Uncle	56	Widower	Maryland	Machinist
Spamer, Charles W.	Nephew	23	Single	Pennsylvania	Clerk, office

Charles C. Spamer is No. 118 in this genealogy.

At the time of the 1930 U.S. census, Ruth Dickinson was the wife of Rudolph Herrmann; her unmarried sister, Margaret, resided with them. No others are listed for this household at that time (34 Nicholson St., Crafton, Allegheny Co., Pennsylvania). Rudolph Hermann was at that time aged 34, a clerk for a steel and [illegible] company. Margaret Dickinson was at that time a clerk in a grocery store.

NOTES

147. Rosalie Adelaide Spamer (1896–1986)

Rosalie Spamer's name appears in the Washington, D.C., city directories for 1916 and 1922 as "Rosalee". The spelling "Rosalie" is taken from A. M. Spamer's "Spamer Families of Baltimore", and which is retained here until corroborative evidence of another spelling is obtained. The city directory entries are as follows:

1916: Rosalee Spamer, binder, National Publishing Co.; residence 527 Tennessee Ave. N.E.
1922: Rosalee Spamer, operator, Bureau of Engraving and Printing; home 420 Canal St. S.E. #4

Charles Benkert (ca. 1901–after August 1973)
(husband of Rosalie Spamer)

A. M. Spamer's "Spamer Families of Baltimore" provided the information given in the present genealogy pertaining to Rosalie Spamer's marriage to Charles Benkert, although no further details are recorded. The spelling of the name "Benkert" is as given by A. M. Spamer. Evidence presented below gives different spellings, as well as different middle initials. Thus far the inconsistencies have not been resolved. Accordingly, A. M. Spamer's spelling is retained here until corroborative evidence is found for a different spelling.

Charles Benkert was an employee of the Washington Terminal Company (according to a 1973 newspaper article). The timing of his employment there is not known.

An examination of the Washington, D.C., city directories for 1921 and 1923 shows the following entries (taking note of the spelling of the surname):

1921: Charles G. "Benker", binder, Government Printing Office; home 32 New York Ave. N.W.
1923: Charles G. "Benker", operator, Government Printing Office; home 32 New York Ave. N.W.
No later directories have thus far been seen.

(The 1921 directory also lists one George F. "Benkert", draftsman, 2010 35th Ave. N.W., and Melitta V. Benkert, widow of George F. Benkert, at the same address.)

The 1930 U.S. census lists Charles and Rosalie "Benckert", and their first three children (Raymond, Carl, and George), residing at 519 Frazier Ave., Virginia Highlands, Arlington Co., Virginia, which is a suburb of both Arlington, Virginia, and Washington, D.C., south of the present site of the Pentagon. However, Frazier Ave. and other streets noted on this census sheet and adjacent sheets have not been located today. Also residing with the family at this time was Rosalie's widowed mother, Nannie Spamer.

A photograph of Charles and Rosalie Benkert celebrating their 50th wedding anniversary in Lakewood Park, Florida, 25 August 1973, was published in The News Tribune of Fort Pierce, Florida (28 Aug 1973, p. 5). There his name is given as Charles F. Benckert [sic].

Children of Rosalie Spamer and Charles Benkert

A newspaper photo taken at the 50th wedding anniversary of Rosalie and Charles Benkert provided the following residential information relating to the Benkert children (as of August 1973) [surnames spelled as adopted for this genealogy (see note above)]:

Raymond Benkert: Oveida, Florida
Carl Benkert: Springfield, Virginia
George Benkert: Burke, Virginia
Audrey (Benkert) Dean: Arlington, Virginia

The 50th wedding anniversary notice also mentioned that Rosalie and Charles Benkert then had eight grandchildren.

[N.B.*: The format of this genealogy differs from the genealogical report style previously used in this genealogy. The Family Tree Maker software used to generate all previous reports was upgraded without realizing that the manufacturer had redesigned its report structures, offering no means by which to revert to that earlier version. The new report structure cannot be imported into a word processor without also bringing with it unsatisfactory and faulty formatting. The format presented here includes adept and repetitive editing to remove some of the unappealing features of the automatically generated file. Also take note that the new format does not separately enumerate every descendant; rather, only those individuals who themselves have children are given a continuing number, which is in discord with the format of the main part of this genealogy. The manufacturer gives no reasons for the changes nor offers a resolution that restores the breadth of previously available functions. —Earle Spamer]

Additions

The following item appeared in The Bridgeport Telegram (Connecticut) for 27 January 1922 (p. 3):

> Milkmen Make Plea.
> Local milk dealers have made an appeal to residents of the town for continued patronage in the face of the three-cent reduction recently announced by a New York firm, with delivery routes in Stratford. Lawrence Spamer, Harry Wilcoxson, George H. Tomlinson, Henry Rossell and Sons, and N. B. Perry are the Stratford dealers who have joined in the appeal.
> "We are local producers and dealers of milk, owning property and paying taxes in Stratford," they say in their appeal to the townspeople. "Our nearness to you enables us to deliver milk fresher than that coming from a distance. Also in the past we have had some severe storms and still have been able to make our deliveries, where others coming from a distance have not been able to."

The following item appeared in The Bridgeport Telegram (Connecticut) for 1 October 1926 (p. 6), which provides a piece of evidence for the kind of property owned by Lawrence B. Spamer:

> S.F.D. Outing
> The annual outing of the Stratford Volunteer Fire Company, No. 1, will be held at Hickory lodge, on Lawrence Spamer's place in the north end Sunday, October 3, beginning at 12 o'clock noon.

His rural location apparently held unintended consequences for the community. In 1959, Lawrence Spamer seems to have applied for a plumbing permit for his house on Oronoque lane, with the following notice in The Bridgeport Telegram (22 Dec 1959, p. 4):

> What's New About Town And Townspeople
> The court decision last week requiring the town to issue a plumbing permit to Lawrence Spamer for ahouse on Oronoque lane may affect some 95 streets in the town, according to town oficials. The town had contended that Oronoque lane was not a public highway. The court after listening to testimony decided that it is a public highway and because of use and repairs and plowing of snow and other town services must so be considered.

Also in 1959, Lawrence Spamer was still in the milk business, when he was given a contract to furnish milk to the Stratford schools.

His obituary notice in the Bridgeport Sunday Post (13 Sep 1970, p. 7) reads in part:

> Born in Stratford, Mr. Spamer was a resident in the area all his life. He was the 12th direct descendant of the Rev. Adam Blakeman who brought early settlers to Stratford in 1639.
> Mr. Spamer was a former Town Councilman of Stratford and a member of the city Planning Board. He was the past master of Housatonic Grange 79 of Stratford and a member of St. John's Lodge 8, AF and AM [Free and Accepted Masons], and president of the Putney and Oronoque cemetery association.

He was buried in Putney Cemetery; the funeral conducted by Rev. Arthur Monk, rector of Christ Episcopal Church, Stratford.

> A beautiful home wedding took place Wednesday afternoon, November 8, when Miss Elizabeth Ferguson, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Patterson, of Darnalls Sylvania, Baltimore county, became the bride of Mr. Jasper N. Spamer, the only son of Mr. and Mrs. Elmer J. Spamer, of Rockland, Baltimore county. The bride, who was attired in a handsome gown of blue taffeta, with hat and gloves to match, and carried white chrysanthemums, was attended by her only sister, Mrs. E. M. Whiteford, as matron of honor, who was gowned in blue brocade velvet with hat and gloves to mach [sic] and carried an armful of pink chrysanthemums. The bride's home was beautifully decorated with autumn leaves and palms. Immediately after the ceremony the bride and groom left for a Southern trip in their new touring car, the groom's gift to the bride. The bride's traveling costume was of midnight blue broadcloth. The Rev. L.S. Reachard performed the ceremony.

Addition

The "Ferguson Family History", published in 1905, includes Chapter 16, "Baltimore Branch—III", which comprises the genealogy of Levi Ferguson [Ferguson Family collateral genealogy, No. 4]. This material is quoted here in its entirety (>>M. L Ferguson, The Ferguson Family in Scotland and America, The Times Presses, Canandaigua, New York, 1905 [cover title, Ferguson Family History], pp. 141-142):

Levi Ferguson and his Descendants.

Levi Ferguson, the youngest son of William and Elizabeth Ferguson, was born in Bladensburg, Maryland, in the year 1787. He received his early education in Maryland, and at the age of sixteen he was taken to New York State by his parents, when they moved to the Genesee country.

After his father's tragic death he returned to Maryland with his mother, where he lived until his death. He became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, at Clifton Springs, N. Y. He took a great interest in the affairs of the church, and was soon appointed a Methodist exhorter. After his return to Maryland, he became a local preacher in the Methodist Episcopal Church, but was never made a regularly ordained minister. He is said to have been a very pleasing and forceful speaker, his discourses abounding in witticisms. He married Eliza Barton, whose family at one time owned the property where now stands the Navy yard at Annapolis, Md.

Asa Barton, the grandfather of Eliza Barton, was a son of Captain Barton, who took an active part in the Revolutionary war, and who made a prisoner of war of General Prescott of the British army. The Barton family trace their lineage through the General George Washington family. Levi Ferguson and his wife made their home about fourteen miles from the city of Baltimore, on the road from Baltimore to Trinity Church, which road passes through the manor. They died and were buried in Dullaney's Valley on the William Peerce farm. They had three children, David, Levi, and Elizabeth Ann.

THE CHILDREN OF LEVI AND ELIZA BARTON FERGUSON AND THEIR DESCENDANTS.

David and Levi Ferguson, the sons of Levi and Eliza Barton Ferguson, became farmers and settled on the heights above Chesapeake Bay. They possessed valuable farms, and, in accordance with the good Southern custom, everything about them was of the most durable and substantial kind. Their homes were among the most beautiful in the locality. David Ferguson is living in Baltimore, Maryland, a venerable and much respected man of four score years and three. He never married.

Levi Ferguson is living about ten miles from Baltimore, Maryland. He has retired from active business life, in which he was considered most capable. He married Keziah B. Jessop, the daughter of Charles Jessop. She died in September, 1892, leaving no descendants. Mr. Ferguson has always been a radical Democrat in politics. His life has ever been such as to win the confidence and respect of the entire communithy where he resided.

The following extract was taken from the history of Baltimore county, Maryland:

"Levi Ferguson, a well known and successful farmer and fruit grower of the Eleventh district, began his earthly career in 1824 at Unionville, in the same district, and is a son of Levi and Eliza Barton Ferguson. On both sides he is descended from good old Revolutionary stock. His parental great-grandfather served in the Continental army under General Wayne and General Smallwood, while the maternal Asa Barton was a son of Captain Barton, who also took an active part in that struggle and captured General Prescott of the British army. The Ferguson family is one of the oldest in Maryland."

Elizabeth Ann Ferguson, the only daughter of Levi and Eliza Barton Fergon, was born in Maryland and educated in the schools in that State. In 1855 she married Milton Dance, of Donnell's Camp, near Chesapeake Bay. Mr. and Mrs. Dance settled in Dullaney's Valley, where they have always lived. Mrs. Dance died in March, 1893, in her 65th year, and was buried in Hosford Baptist Church cemetery. There were three children in this family, but one of whom lived.

Mary E. Dance, the daughter of Milton and Elizabeth Ann Ferguson Dance, was born and educated in Maryland. She married Harry W. Patterson, of Phoenix, Baltimore county, Maryland, November, 1883. They have a beautiful home at the head of Dullaney's Valley, commanding an extensive view of the country around. They have three children, Catherine M., Elizabeth E., and William Patterson.

243. Ralph Louis Robinson, Jr. (1920–2004)
"Robbie"

He was born and raised in the Govans section of Baltimore and last resided in Wells, York Co., Maine. He and Mary McCardell Robinson had no children. Ralph Robinson, Jr., died by his own hand.

His obituary appeared in The Sun (Baltimore). There it is indicated that he was a photographer for The Sun from 1955 until retirement in 1982. He married Mary I. McCardell, the sister of another Sun photographer, Walter M. McCardell, Jr. Mr. McCardell recollected that Robinson had applied to become a Sun photographer and was told that if he graduated from a photography school in New York City he would be hired. After his graduation, no jobs were then available, and for a while he worked as a portrait photographer for Udel Brothers and for Blakeslee-Lane, photographers on North Charles Street, Baltimore. During World War II, Robinson attempted to enlist in the U.S. Marines, but was rejected for poor eyesight. He memorized the eye chart, and "passed" the next day. He served during the war in the Pacific theater. Robinson resided in the Tuscany-Canterbury section of Baltimore until moving to Wells, Maine, in 1982.

In Baltimore he had been a communicant of SS. Philip and James Roman Catholic Church. (>>"Ralph L. Robinson, Jr., 83, Sun photographer", The Sun, 30 May 2004)

Additions and Emendations

Records of Sailors' Snug Harbor note that Joseph A. Spamer was buried in the Sailors' Snug Harbor Cemetery, grave 6092; that grave is in plot 2, row 3, grave 17. He date of death is there given as 12 May 1958 (which differs from the 12 March date given in A. M. Spamer's "Spamer Families of Baltimore"). He was aged 75, thus born in 1882. (>>Beverly Mulligan, compiler, "Sailors Snug Harbor Burials", www.rootsweb.ancestry.com/~nyrichmo/ cemeteries/SailorsSnugHarborMulligan.html; accessed 3 August 2009.) The cemetery is located on Prospect and Clinton Aves., adjacent to Allison Park; a block south of today's Snug Harbor Cultural Center Park, Staten Island.

The Sailors' Snug Harbor Social Service Report noters that he first contacted Sailors' Snug Harbor through a newspaper help column 18 December 1956. He was admitted to the institution on 20 May 1957, after first having left his luggage there on 18 May and spending the weekend in New Jersey (no further information regarding this). The report adds, for 20 May:

"Mr. Spamer admitted to the Harbor on marginal date. He had with him his son-in-law who apparently had driven hm to the Harbor. Mr. Spamer is a slender, quiet man who speaks softly but to the point.

Some pertinent statistics from the Social Service Report include:

"Envelope received from Mr. Spamer containing statements [of employment] from companies, Master's License issue 2,6 dated 1931 [sic]."
Form letter of acceptance sent to Spamer 30 April 1957.

Specific notes by Elizabeth M. Smith, Director, Social Service, dated 3 April 1957, are as follows (in total):

"Mr. Joseph A. Spamer, age 74, was born in Baltimore, Maryland on Oct. 12, 1882. He is at present a resident of Norma, N. J. and all the data for this report [appended thereto] therefore has been compiled from the application report, statement of sea service, proofs of service and medical report. The statements submitted indicate that Mr. Spamer first went to sea in 1910, sailed for 25 years in the American Merchant Marine and retired in 1935 because of the illness of his wife. The proofs submitted consist of a Master's License, issue 2,6 dated 1934 [sic] and statements from companies for which he sailed. the documents were sufficient to meet the requirements for admission.

"The interim employment indicates that after Mr. Spamer's retirement from the sea he became self employed as a printer [sic] but this work was not continuous. More recently it was carried on on a part-time basis and was not sufficiently remunerative to build reserves to take care of himself and his wife after retirement from full employment. He had been under medical care for hypertension and after the death of his wife he was unable to continue caring for the apartment, gave it up and moved into his step daughter's home. Recently, however, she and her husband sold the house and since they are moving to a very small apartment there is no room for Mr. Spamer. The only other relatives, a cousin and a niece, are apparently not in a position to assist in living arrangements for him and he is therefore in need of a permanent home such as the Harbor.

"According to the information received Mr. Spamer has no pension, no annuities or source of income and for the past few years he has been completely dependent on relatives for maintenance. the social, financial and medical situations are such that he apparently cannot remain in the community without assistance and has therefore applied for admission to the Harbor. The data submitted indicates that he has complied with the rules governing admission; he is aged, no longer employable and physically disabled. He has a hypertensive, cardiovascular disease, coronary insufficiency and a genralized arteriosclerosis. In view of the situation as outlined Mr. Spamer appears to need the services available here and I would therefore recommend approval of his application."

Of particular note for this genealogy are the confirmation of Joseph Spamer's birth date and mother's name; and that the "Margaret" Spamer noted in this genealogy with Joseph in Jersey City, New Jersey, in 1942, without other information, was in fact another wife, the former Margaret Wilse, whose children by previous marriage(s) were in 1957 Mrs. Albert W. Volk and Mrs. James Troiano. However, his application form listed under "other relatives" only his cousin, George Pausch, of 13 South St., Baltimore; step-daughter Mrs. Volk; and a niece, "Mrs. Clem Dietwell" of Sykesville, Maryland; of whom the last was not among those informed of his death a year later. Mrs. "Dietwell" is most probably Mary L. H. Hobbs (1905–1998), Mrs. Clement L. Dietrich.

- "With 40,500 sacks of coffee for New York, the steamer Shannock, commanded by Captain Spamer, of Baltimore, sailed from Santos, Brazil, on November 19." (24 Nov 1920)

These items convey a number of supporting facts. First, of course, it further confirms the family information that Joseph A. Spamer was a ship's master. Circumstantial evidence already reported in this genealogy is further corroborated by these items, including the fact that he had a family in the Govans section of Baltimore, and that he worked for the U.S. Shipping Board, based in Philadelphia.

Incidental information that relates to these newspaper items is as follows:

1. The S.S. Margaret was built in 1916 by the Maryland Steel Co., Sparrow's Point, Maryland; 3,352 tons. The Margaret met her end 15 April 1942 when she was torpedoed off the East Coast by the German submarine U-571; sunk with all hands. (>>Bull Line informational website, http://www.theshipslist.com/ ships/lines/bull.htm; accessed 24 Feb 2009.)

2. There was an S.S. Iaqua that operated on the West Coast during the first part of the 20th century. Whether this was the same vessel as that which was reported in Norfolk, Virginia, in 1918, is not determined here. John Dodge was presumably John M. Dodge, who is listed in the 1920 U.S. census for Baltimore as being a mariner; he was a native of New York and was about 46 years of age in 1918. At the time of the 1920 census, Joseph A. Spamer and John M. Dodge were both residents of the 27th Ward, and were listed two sheets apart in that census.

3. The S.S. City of Fairbury was a ship constructed at the Hog Island emergency shipyard, in Philadelphia, during World War I, consigned to the U.S. Shipping Board. Although specifics for this vessel are not known at this time, standard "Hog Islanders" were vessels 380 feet long, 54-foot beam, 24-foot draft, with 2,500 horsepower steam turbines; although some were 58 feet longer, with 6,000 horsepower turbines. (>>U.S. Merchant Marine website, http://www.usmm.org/hogislanders.html; accessed 21 Feb 2009.)

Addition

A few additional notes relating to Joseph A. Spamer's seafaring career have been found in ships' manifests posted to online resources:

The ship's manifest ofr the S.S. Adonis, arriving in Boston on 29 November 1918 from Caibarien, Cuba, lists Joseph A. Spamer a Chief Officer (second in command), who had been engaged on 28 March in New Orleans. Personal information for him given there notes that he was 36 years of age, height 5 ft 6 in., weight 135 pounds.

The ship's manifest for the S.S. Rijswijk, arriving in Boston on 1 May 1919 from Cienfuegos, Cuba, lists Joseph A. Spamer as Captain, who had been engaged on 22 January in Baltimore. Personal information for him given there notes that he was 37 years of age, height 5 ft 8 in., weight 145 pounds.

[N.B.: The 1923 Baltimore city directory also lists one Dena Spamer, clerk, residing at 10 S. Hare St. The identity of this person has not been ascertained.]

David Adolph Spamer was mentioned in an unflattering manner in the Baltimore Sun in 1920, an item that was picked up in many other newspapers across the country (for its sensational subject). "Mike" Doolan, a baseball umpire, was "mobbed" by fans at Oriole Park, after one individual threw a bottle at him. The policemen who came to his aid were, in turn, accosted by fans, including one David A. Sparmer [sic]. The perpetrators were brought before a justice, who declared that the men were "mildy insane", an opinion substantiated by a Dr. Charles G. Hill, "alienist in many legal cases involving insanity and head of the sanitarium at Mount Hope." Dr. Hill further opined that "most of the rest of the world is crazy, too." (>>"Dr. Hill Thinks Most Of World, Like Ball Fans, 'Mildly Insane'. Says That Moral Restraint That Held People In Check Before War Is Slipping—Cites Riots As Proof Of Truth Of His Conclusion", The Sun (Baltimore), 11 Aug 1920, p. 18.)

Lillian (Smelz) Spamer (1902–)
wife of David Adolph Spamer

Addition

The death certificate of David Admiral Spamer, dated 5 May 1958, gives her maiden name as Lillian Ruth Anstine. She survived her son.

A Lillian Anstine is listed in the Social Security Death Index has having died in October 1985, last residing in Everett, Pennsylvania. Note that Everett is where were born the children of David Adolph Spamer and his second wife, Marjorie McGraw (and where or nearby presumably they resided). Everett is about 70 miles west of Stewartstown, where David Adolph Spamer's son, David Admiral Spamer, was born to him and his first wife, Lillian, and where David Admiral was buried.

Addition

264. David Admiral Spamer (1937–1958)

David Admiral Spamer enlisted in the U.S. Marine Corps around January 1955. He had been in the service for 3 years, 7 months, when he was struck and killed by an automobile while riding a motorcycle in Jacksonville, Onslow Co., North Carolina, 5 May 1958. He was dead on arrival at Onslow Memorial Hospital. He was stationed then at the Cherry Point Marine Corps Air Station, New River, Jacksonville, North Carolina. His remains were removed to Stewartstown, Pennsylvania, 8 May 1958.

When David A. Spamer had reported for duty at Cherry Point MCAS in late October he had the rank of Private First Class. (>>"In Marine Air Corps", Bedford Gazette [Pennsylvania], 8 Dec 1955, p. 3.)

186. Harry Spamer

Addition

Although at this time nothing more is known of Harry Spamer other than the names of his wife and children, an item in the Baltimore Sun in 1904 may relate to him. The individual referred to in the newspaper item is one "Harry I. Spamer", an engineer in the bay maritime business (as, notably, were a number of men in the Spamer family). The newspaper article was about the steamer Alabama, built in 1840 by the Maryland Steel Company, at Sparrows Point, which was known as the "Greyhound of the Chesapeake". The article announced that a refit had been completed and was again under the operation of the Baltimore Steam Packet Company (the "Old Bay Line"), concluding,

> Last night the Alabama took her place on the line to Norfolk. Captain Bohannon, who has spent over 30 years in the service of the line has as his staff R. H. Smullen, chief officer; Harry Williams, second officer; Wallace Hooper, chief engineer; Harry I. Spamer, first assistant; and Samuel Hampton, second assistant . . . . (>>"Alabama Bright and New. Old Bay Line Steamer Resumes Her Place in The Service", The Sun (Baltimore), 30 Apr 1904, p. 8.)

(There is only one other Harry Spamer known in the family. Born in 1876, son of Charles Spamer, he was raised in the area around Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and who at the time of the 1900 census was still in that area, working as an electrical mechanic. It is not likely that it is he who is the subject of the item above.)

Given the close spacing of many of the children of Adolph Spamer, it is difficult to place Harry Spamer [No. 186] amongst the first-born among them. If the Harry I. Spamer of the newspaper article is he, he would have had to be of responsible working age. Harry Spamer [No. 186], if aged 18 and thus working, would fit neatly between his siblings, Henry Edward Spamer (born March 1884) and Elizabeth Louise Spamer (born November 1885); that is, his birth could be between about September 1885–February 1886. Of course, if he had been born at any time later, he would have been too young to work as an engineer's assistant aboard a steamship, and the record of Harry I. Spamer in the newspaper would be another Harry Spamer, one whose identity is otherwise unknown to our family.

Arshag Keropa Yacoubian (1868–)

When Arshag Yacoubian filed a Petition for Naturalization in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, 1 September 1922, and at the time of the 1930 U.S. census, he gave his address as 5938 Irving St., Philadelphia, and his occupation as a tailor. In the 1930 census he is misindexed as "Yacnebian". The 1930 census further indicates that Arshag and Dora Yacoubian and their three children all were naturalized citizens.

Arshag Yacoubian's Petition for Naturalization also lists as witnesses Hrano Yacoubian, 418 S. 56th St., Philadelphia, tailor; and Pusant Salukjian, 6443 Lebanon Ave., Philadelphia, tailor.

Eunice B. Yacoubian (1912–2008)

Eunice Yacoubian was born about 1912, died 1 November 2008 at Harlee Manor, Springfield, Delaware Co., Pennsylvania. She never married. She was buried in Arlington Cemetery, Drexel Hill, Pennsylvania.

An obituary for Eunice B. Yacoubian (The Philadelphia Inquirer, 6 Nov 2008), in addition to providing personal information, provided historical information part of which must also relate to her brother, Vaughn P. Cobian. The obituary was repeated in slightly edited form in The News Bulletin (Dec 2008, p. 10) of the Armenian Martyrs' Congregational Church of Philadelphia (Havertown, Pennsylvania), of which she was a member:

> Eunice B. Yacoubian, 96, former executive secretary to the commander of the Philadelphia Navy Yard, died of heart failer Saturday at Harlee Manor in Springfield, Delaware County, where she had lived for five years. She was a longtime resident of Drexel Hill.
> Miss Yacoubian fled her homeland during the persecution of Armenians in 1915 and settled in West Philadelphia with her family. After graduating from Overbrook High School, she was a cashier at Kresge's five-and-dime department store during the Depression.
> When World War II broke out, Miss Yacoubian took a job at the Philadelphia Navy Yard, where she worked for 34 years. As executive personal secretary to the commander, she donned elegant ball gowns, long gloves, fur stoles, and hats and escorted dignitaries to social events.
> "My aunt loved to dress up and go ballroom dancing," said her great-niece Holly Lawson. She had many suitors, but her mother did not approve of any of them, so she never married." After Miss Yacoubian retired in 1975, she volunteered her time to teach English to Japanese students and cared for shut-ins in Drexel Hill.
> Miss Yacoubian never forgot her Armenian roots. She kept copious notes and memorabilia of her family's history and filled her home with the smell of traditional dishes such as beef wrapped in grape leaves, pilaf, homemade yogurt, and cabbage and apples.
> She also collected friends. "She had friendships that lasted more than 90 years," her great niece said.
>
> Miss Yacoubian was a skilled artist who painted in oils and traveled the world to visit her family members who had scattered after the Armenian persecution.
> Besides her great-niece, Miss Yacoubian is survived by three nephews and several great-nieces and great-nephews.

At church I was a member of the Triangle Class for many years. Was officers of that groop, too. Belonged to the Aid Society (Christian Women's Fellowship) and have held various offices there also. Today I get to church on a regular basis and on Mondays I am attending the First Place Weight management group. I am gra dually reducing my superflous amount of weight and am (at this late stage) learning that oveeating is not the cure-all I had assumed it was.

Over the years, I engaged in sewing, crochet and platic canvas stitchery. Gardening, and canning took a fair amount of my time. Give me a book and I can get immersed in it and enjoy a wide variety of subjects. My most recent endeavor has been to offere free seeds of the citron melon to anyone who would want them and send a self addressed stamped envelope for them. Well over 700 persons have responded and I have heard form 47 states and several in Canada. I have formed some pen-pals and even located a distant relative.

My knees gave out on me, legacy I am told of my time spent in the car delivering mail, with curculltion restricted. I only shop at stores that have the motorized carts provided. Last week, I went to a store, to be told that the cart ws in use, but We have a wheelchair. I replied that I could only use it if the young man pushed me. Lo and behold, he got permission, and was Queen For a Day while I was royally chauffered through the store . . . . [ellipsis hers] I attended a reception for the contestants of an Essay writing contest. Some 86 of us wrote 1500 words on the Attributes and Values of Being an Older Adult. I took me a month to acquire 1500 words.

One of the very many reasons,
To thank You, Lord is for the changing seasons-------

I must mention my two constant companions, with which I am never frar away from. Ben and Bertie, I have named my two wooden canes. At times they are magically transformed into hobby horses or weapons, whatever a three and a five year old can imagine.

———————

[Letter to "Cousin", 3 October 1998, typewritten, 2 pp. (from Nancy Spamer MicKey, May 2009), which includes family information and information about the family homestead, "Rockland"; spellings and punctuation thus:]

The Citron-Melon Adventure is really getting interesting now! Imagine bringing to light another branch of the family!

Just a citron update. I have ready to send out some 365 responses, requests; no ding [sic] on so that I can get a picture taken of the 3 already boxes full of them. The Old quart jar is winding down, and have to wait to fill the 13 requests that came in yesterday's mail until I can get to the copy shop to get more letters run off.

Elmer Jasper Spamer bought the farm here in the 1860s [sic]. He had a number of brothers and sisters, some of which are buried in the family graveyard he established here.

Jasper Noble [Spamer] and his wife Elizabeth took in her 12 year old neighbor sister's child, Katherine had died and Elmer (Whiteford) was about to put the child in an orphanage. They took her in and she grew up here with the other three. Sara married a George Giles of Jackson, Tenn (who had come up to Martin's Aircraft Factory in Baltimiore to work. He was drafted, she went to Texas to marry him (1944, I think) and settled in Jackson where they raised 6 children. They will be here (in Maryland) to visit early in next week (6th or 7th, probably.

Note on Nancy Elaine: we named her after 2 of the girls Will had admired . After all, I had him and they did not. (He was working so hard at the time he had no opportunity to date, and was too shy to make many overtures.

We live in the house Elmer Jasper bought; Elmer built onto it it was a very modest place then. He built a 4 storey structure, Jasper Noble built a very large extension on the opposite and, 3 storeys. House is finished in stone, and everyone has followed suit and finished their portion in stone. Our old kitchen was rottening on its underpinnings, and 6 years ago our son and son-in-law tore the kitchen off and built us a nice 2 storey addition, with a full basement. The laundry room/bath is just behind the wall that houses the sink, so it is very convenient.

Just an update on William and Hazel: William is 81, we have been married 55 years. Farm went into a housing development after the deaths of Jasper and Elizabeth (half the heirs wanted cash). Will had worked faithfully for the parents on the farm (nearly 200 acres) all his life, the place was to be handed down - Father to Son, but it only managed one "Hand Down". We live in the house Will was born in. Our two children were born here.

I, Hazel, am 74, my one claim to fame is my Field Editorship of Birds/Blooms, a sister magazine to Country. Also I am editor of the A.A.R.P. Perry Hall chapter 2719 newsletter which comes out every two months. Been a member of the Fork Christian Church some 50 years, a Homemaker's Club member, president of our local club and worked at the County (Baltimore) in variouis capacities, once secretary, once treasurer, and for several years as Environmental Chair. When my knees went on me, I began curtailing my activities; walking with two canes and being over-weight, I gave up several of my activities especially those that meant my driving at night.

Well, I couldn't sleep and decided to answer your letter rather than turn on the TV,

It was so good to hear from you, write again and I'll give you another installment of life on the old Rockland Farm . . . . [ellipsis hers] And to think I almost put the seeds in the bird feeder. I think the Lord nudged me to put the notice in the Country magazine. It has brought out some who have been searching for Citron, it is old timey and entails WORK, first to grow it and then to work it up and make the preserves, etc. The vast majority - tho - are very interested in "growing something new". I have rationed out the seeds through-out, 5 to a request and 10 if they were actively interested. Of course, there were some, to whom I sent varying amounts according to the letters contents. I have given two sources of supply, if you just send for the catalogs, they make interesting reading.

Shanklin Family
Collateral Genealogy
(245 descendants)

The Shanklin Family collateral genealogy is principally from Thomas Stanley Shanklin and Family, "Lineage of Robert Shanklin of Maryland" (2006), as received from Nancy Spamer MicKey; with editorial adjustments reflecting the Spamer descendants therein based on the present main genealogy; and with some additional information from the Baltimore County Genealogical Society. Users should refer to copies of the "Lineage of Robert Shanklin of Maryland" for exhaustive notes and commentary on individuals.

[878] The format of this report differs from the genealogical report style previously used in this genealogy. The Family Tree Maker software used to generate all previous reports was upgraded without realizing that the manufacturer had redesigned its report structures, offering no means by which to revert to that earlier version. The new report structure cannot be imported into a word processor without also bringing with it unsatisfactory and faulty formatting. The format presented here includes adept and repetitive editing to remove some of the unappealing features of the automatically generated file. Also take note that the new format does not separately enumerate every descendant; rather, only those individuals who themselves have children are given a continuing number, which is in discord with the format of the main part of this genealogy. The manufacturer gives no reasons for the changes nor offers a resolution that restores the breadth of previously available functions. —Earle Spamer.

NEW EDITION

Containing Additions & Corrections to June 2011
and with* Illustrations

2008 / 2011

Note

The "New Edition" includes hyperlinks embedded in boxes throughout the main genealogy. They will, when clicked in the computer's web-browser environment, automatically redirect the user to the pertinent additions, emendations and corrections that are compiled in the separate "Additions and Corrections" section.

Boxed alerts look like this: Also see Additions & Corrections [In the event that the PDF hyperlink has become inoperative or misdirects, refer to the appropriate page number as listed in the Additions and Corrections section.]

The "Additions and Corrections" document is appended to the end of the main text herein and is separately paginated using Roman numerals. With a web browser on the user's computer the hyperlinks are "live"; the user may switch back and forth between the main text and pertinent additions, corrections, or emendations. Each part of the genealogy (Parts I and II, and Appendices 1 and 2) has its own "Additions and Corrections" section.

The main text of the New Edition is exactly identical to the original edition of 2008; content and pagination are not changed. The difference is the presence of the boxed "Additions and Corrections" alerts, which are superimposed on the page and do not affect text layout or pagination. The reason why the text itself was not updated is because the Comprehensive Index, more than 300 pages, is keyed to the original edition.

The alert notices will print if you print from the main genealogy, which you may then use with a printed copy of the "Additions and Corrections".

The CD (or DVD) containing digital copies of this genealogy also includes documents that were not originally available when the genealogy was prepared in 2008. See the Disk Content Guide.

Special Note Regarding Pagination*: The boxed "Also see Additions & Corrections" alerts are placed where they are needed in the main text. Upon reading the "Additions and Corrections", however, the page number indicated for the emendation may (very infrequently) be off by one page as compared to where the boxed alert is placed. For example, a text comment in the "Additions & Corrections" may refer to page II-308, but the corresponding alert box, in its proper place in the text, may be on page II-309.

The cause of these minor offsets, when they do occur, is due to the fact that different versions of one word processing programs were used to create some of the new additions and corrections. These different versions occasionally altered page breaks and footnote placements that affected the page layout. The effect is not cumulative through the document; occurrences of offset page notations are very infrequent.

In similar fashion, the "Comprehensive Index" that was created from the original edition of 2008, for use principally with the printed versions of this document, likewise may experience infrequent one-page offsets between page numbers cited and actual page numbers.

Introduction to Part II

Our SMITH FAMILY is known to have been residents of Queen Anne's County, Maryland, since at least the mid-18th century. Further evidence points to the family's establishment in this county by 1683, in what then was a larger Talbot County. The relationship to us of these 17th century Smiths is ambiguous, but not disproved. The family is not related to Capt. John Smith (1580-1631), the English colonialist leader from Jamestown, Virginia, who first explored the Chesapeake Bay in 1608.

As might be expected, correctly tracing a surname so common as "Smith" in vital records and legal documents is fraught with pitfalls. The repetition of common given names (John, James, and so on) adds additional complications to our searches. The end result is this current genealogy of the Smith family, which depends partly upon the inferential reliability of previously researched data. The earlier family genealogists who documented the individuals of the family known to them produced an admirable body of work. Their work forms the core of the present genealogy. One should be mindful, however, that these earlier workers had undertaken their tasks before the advent of widely available electronic databases and similar research resources. They resorted to daunting rolls of microfilm; ponderous, handwritten ledgers; sparsely available published genealogies; the mercies of public hours in libraries and public records offices; per-copy charges for the most modest of photostatic copies; and the eccentric good will of family members who may recall treasures or trash. The pace of genealogy then was leisurely, with far fewer conveniently accessible resources, which often confined the bounds set to be investigated.

Thanks to broader and more accessible resources—not to overlook the one saving grace of modern methodologies, the electronically searchable database—the present genealogy has turned into a document that would probably be a marvel to our earlier family historians. Be this as it may, the work may be made more expedient and pleasurable, but the end result is just as reliable as would be produced the longer, "old-fashioned" way; perhaps less so. The result is a guide, not gospel. Disappointing as this may sound, the present genealogy should still be treated as a working document, which future users may use as a baseline for further scrutiny. Much of the information here is reliable, but inasmuch as portions of it also rely upon data provided by family sources (that may not necessarily have been correct), or perhaps adopted from an unwitting misstep in the research of public records, the user should be alert to the possibility of error.

At the other end of genealogical research—the tips of the branches—there is a profusion of living individuals about whom only names and dates (and sometimes only names) are given here. The modern generations are the most troublesome for a current genealogy; they constantly grow, and the tree is forever outdated. The children, grandchildren, even great-grandchildren of living individuals are so numerous and far-flung that the very existence of some of them are not known to a genealogy's compiler. The task of making the genealogy "current" by ensuring that the present generations are complete, and by adding the next generations, will have to be another person's work. The current genealogy is more useful for understanding the individuals and structure of the family tree about through the mid-20th century.

What I have done here is to take what the earlier family genealogists have determined and check what I could of it or add to it in some measure. To this I greatly expanded the numerous branches of the family tree by tracing each branch and twig in a variety of resources, most notably the public records available on Internet websites, particularly U.S. census data. My additions are based on records searches made in some publications but take also substantially from Internet websites, which include public records as well as personal data provided by independent genealogical researchers. I discuss my sources more fully in the General Introduction.

Genealogical research, especially in the years prior to the development of the Internet that made available tremendous resources of the World Wide Web, was a painstaking process. It required exhaustive correspondence with relations and descendants, in addition to public records searches with the benefit only of published and card file indices. In the acknowledgements to the typescript "Smith Genealogy", Edward S. Smith noted:

> J. Lathrop Mack and Roberta Smith, his wife, thought that at some time their children would be interested in their ancestors, and it was thus that this hunt started. There was an appeal to the family for search and cooperation, and it seems that there was quite general support and cooperation. Our cousin, Emerson Bryan Roberts, in addition to family Bibles and other family sources, did much searching of Land Records and Wills, which resulted in the establishment of our Progenitor to be James Smith and Margaret, his wife . . . .[1]

---

[1] Edward S. Smith, "Smith Genealogy and Some Reminiscences" (typescript, 1963), p. 2. The E. S. Smith typescript is hereafter referred to as the "Smith Genealogy".

Apparently Smith considered the work to be complete–or rather as complete as he could make it–because a letter from John McKenney to Smith, 27 Feb 1963, says that he is "glad to learn that you have finished the Smith genealogy." And yet, information contained in that letter from McKenney appears in the text of the "Smith Genealogy". Further, it is evident that the manuscript, as "completed", is an uncorrected draft, one also in need of further editing. Given that Smith was in declining health at the time, he may have considered the project in hiatus or effectively ended. Smith distributed carbon copies of the typescript, but how many were produced is unknown; pragmatically, we must assume not many. Earle Spamer (the present compiler) owns the carbon copy that Edward Smith presented to his brother and niece, Earle and Elisabeth Smith. Over the years, additional, xerographic copies were made from one or more of the carbon copies; how many were made, or by whom they are held, is unknown. I have one such xerographic reproduction, which was given to me in the 1970s by Helen (Montgomery) Mummert (later McCarraher), of Delaware; to it a few handwritten emendations had been made prior to being copied. One must assume that various other copies may have their own handwritten emendations.

The "Smith Genealogy" is also supplemented by a large paper scroll prepared by Edward S. Smith. On the scroll, which unrolled measures about 3 × 6 feet, he drew the family tree by hand. The arrangement of individuals on the scroll is, regretfully, chaotic because Smith sometimes ran out of room on one part of the chart or another. The scroll is laced with long, wavering connection lines that overlap and criss-cross in confusing fashion; and he wrote

The Macks began their genealogical work during the early 1920s. By the mid-1930s it was in full swing, when Lathrop distributed numerous typewritten fragments with appeals to scattered family members for assistance. A draft typescript created by Lathrop in 1934, also containing handwritten emendations, comprised a series of disjointed genealogical sketches about specific individuals and branches of the family. It serves further as an introduction to the kinds of sources and the reliability of data that relate to James Smith's descendants. The series of sketches also serve as a draft introduction and acknowledgements for a Smith family genealogy, which never was completed. It is apparent, however, that the Smith family genealogy that was produced later by Edward Seville Smith, based substantially upon the Macks' earlier research and added to by him, has been the principal source of information about the family. It has been drawn upon heavily for the present genealogy, and to which I have added numerous explanatory notes and some corrections.

Early Work by Lathrop and Roberta Mack

In 1934, after Lathrop and Roberta Mack had worked on the Smith family genealogy for about ten years, Lathrop wrote an open letter to his wife's siblings. The letter provides additional information about the early phases of his genealogical research, and his credits. Some of his concerns apply equally well today as they did three-quarters of a century ago.[2]

> For about twelve years Roberta, Emerson and I have been collecting data about descendants of James Smith, our earliest known Smith ancestor, and so far, our chief object has been to get as much information as possible about the earlier generations, or as much as could be gotten from living descendants before it was too late to get it. In fact, we have made a very late start. This information must be obtained from living persons because we cannot find that any of the descendants are in the Genealogies, whether printed or manuscript.
> We have now obtained about all the information we can hope to get from persons we can locate who are willing to co-operate, about the earlier generations, and it is time to try to make as complete as possible the facts about the later generations. I am sending, or will send as copies become available, to you "RECORD OF THE DESCENDANTS OF JAMES SMITH AND SOME OF THEIR COUSINS etc" with the thought that You will like to see it, and with a fountain pen in an elderly hand, sometimes too hastily or too small for the pen nib – all of which makes the scroll difficult to use. In the earliest preparations of the current genealogy, my wife (Jane Anderson) and I entered all of the genealogical data from the typescript into a computerized database. As part of that task the entire Edward Smith scroll then was systematically followed and checked against the facts presented in the typescript; a task that sometimes was difficult and frustrating, but in the end successfully completed. My copy of the scroll was reproduced from the original sometime in the 1970s; the original at that time being in the possession of Helen Mummert. She is a niece of Edward Smith who worked with him, collecting information during trips to cemeteries and other locales in Maryland and Delaware. A similar scroll, smaller and more tidy, was prepared by Edward Smith for the Sevil family, the original of which Helen McCarraher gave to me around 2000.

in the hope that each of you will send us your comments, advice, corrections, criticisms and all possible additions to it that you can.

Since this RECORD was written, we have had wonderful co-operation from Mrs. Hiram Goodhand Tarbutton who met Rev. John Edward Smith shortly after he entered the Methodist ministry. She married a cousin of Sam Tarbutton Cousin of your father[']s upon whom he was calling. Her interest has been chiefly in furthering the desires of their descendants. She well remembered him and his visit over fifty years ago. I did not find her until this summer, and largely thru her efforts we have a fairly complete list of the descendants of Rachel Smith Tarbutton, daughter of James Smith. She has been a real help, and is really interested. I have been able to supply her information she did not have, and she is still working to complete the list and get as many dates as possible.

Also the Grahams who know that Rev. Jack Smith was a cousin of thier [sic] father have given us much data on their family, which is, at present in a separate report.[3] This information, as to the later Graham generations is in the Appendix t[o] the RECORD. We are still working with them and their relatives to very definitely make the proper connections between the Grahams and the Smiths, Tarbuttons, Watsons, Prices, Sprys etc.

For the present, we will be glad if each of you will make any notes you wish of items that interest you in the RECORD, and we hope that you will fill in all possible information and dates regarding your own families and children. We hope to make this into a small Genealogy that will be more than a mere list of names and dates. We are hoping to receive family traditions, and sketches, appreci[a]tions, and anecdotes about ancestors and relatives of the Smith etc descendants for inclusion in the RECORD and preservation.[4] Some of these people are deserving of more notice than I am able to give them, who have to depend for my information upon those who personally knew them. Family traditions are a very real help in this search. One tradition which came to us quickly led to the location of the parents of the first wife of our first Known ancestor, namely to Samuel and Margaret Moore[5], thus pushing the RECORD one generation farther back on that side. Traditions and stories that are now scattered among descendants can be very useful in the search, and their bearing upon it is not easily recognized by the persons who can tell them, but assembled at one point, with us, can give very useful hints as to obscure points and sources of information. As Stated, a certain casual remark quickly led us to Samuel Moore, and with that start, we can probably carry the Moores back to the original Moore immigrant, and probably the Moore co-lateral line also.[6]

[3] This separate Graham essay is unfortunately not now located.

[4] The planned genealogy was never completed by Mack. Edward Seville Smith took the basic research, expanded upon it, and prepared the draft typescript, "Smith Genealogy", which he finished off in that form in 1963. He also had a manuscript family tree, drawn onto a large scroll.

[5] Susanna, daughter of Samuel and Margaret Moore, married James Smith [No. 24 in the present genealogy].

[6] This was never accomplished by Mack or by later workers; no earlier generations of our Moore family have been determined.

Edwina and Emerson[7] have been working assiduously with us all these years. He, in his travels has access to libraries and original sources, documents etc. They are as enthusiastic as we are about doing a complete job in all possible lines.

Please tell us what you can remember hearing about Susan Ratcliffe, "who lived at the Baynards", and her sister and brother. And all possible stories and facts about Captain John Smith, and about his wife Mary, and his aunt Sallie who lived with him, and ided [died] at his house. I have some of these stories from Roberta[8], and am holding them until the time comes to re-write the RECORD. Also we have some stories from Cousin Mina, cousin Julia and others, which we could never have had if we had not gotten them when we did before they passed to their higher usefulness. Roberta is encouraging me, but I cannot write about many of these people from my own knowledge, but only from what descendants will tell us. There is much that can be added about them of interest, and in justice to them which we do not know, and from these stories we get hints as to things to hunt for and sources of information.

We cannot get a start on the ancestry of your grandmother's mother Rebecca (Price) Pratt Smith.[9] Certain Prices know your fathers an[d] cousins of their fathers, and they can tell us something of the father of Rebecca. One link probably would be sufficient to enable us to carry her line bach [sic] four or five generations to the immigrant. Emerson has lots of Price data, but we cannot connect with it.[10] What can you remember hearing about Price relatives, aunt Sallie Price, and Pratt relatives. Mordecai Price had a cousin Tom Pratt, and Sam Tarbutton had a cousin Sam Pratt. The U.S. Census of 1790 is full of Queen Annes [County, Maryland] Pratts.

Please try to remember things hidden your sub-concious [sic] memory they may not immediately come to mind, but may come out in time. Reading the RECORD caused cousin Mina to recall things she had not thought of for years, which we needed for the RECORD, and which were very useful. Likewise it caused another to recall an item which she omitted years ago, and we immediately found Samuel Moore, as the direct result. There is no telling how important something may prove to be which may not seem important to you because you cannot know its bearing on other things. Roberta and I are saturated with what we have learned, and can often get useful hints from casual items, and gossip about those gone on before. We are hoping that Lulu[11] will have some traditions about ancestors that Rev. John Smith was too young to absorb and transmit. Some little hint may come which will enable us to get by the present impassable barriers.

Aside from the attempt at completeness in the RECORD for the benefit of members of the present and future generations, another reason for trying to connect into it the Ratcliffes, Tarbuttons, Grahams, Prices, Moores, Richardsons etc., is to try to get a start on the first James Smith about whom we know only the names of his wives and the > children of the first wife. The Moore data leads us to look for him in Delaware, after we have been for twelve years looking all over Pennsylvania and Maryland for him.

Regarding James Smith [No. 29], Lathrop Mack continued,

> Did you ever hear anything about . . . where James has [sic] been before he went to Centreville the first Time? or the second time? after which he built the brich [brick] house at Lently? And did Ann [his wife, Nancy] return there with him? and anything you ever heard about Lently, and about grave yards or burial places of Smiths and their relatives in Maryland. We hope to receive all possible memories and traditions of the past.

Mack raised questions, some of which remain unanswered even now, but others of which were answered by Edward S. Smith in the "Smith Genealogy"; and still more are answered in the present genealogy:

> Has Lulu any traditions about Robert Smith who went to Ohio? was he married at the time? any children? * * * About what year did he go? There is conflict on the year. Does any one know the location of the "Reed burying ground"? And where Captain John Smith's family worshipped? at Spaniard Neck Church?, and has anyone heard of "Old Dudleys Church?"[12] * * * We would like to have the military record of James Smith, or James S. Smith [sic], and all dates of his family and descendants.

Quotations from the Edward S. Smith typescript (the "Smith Genealogy") and from notes left by Lathrop and Roberta Mack, are made occasionally throughout the present Smith Family genealogy. The original passages are scattered as copies in files or appear in the "Smith Genealogy" in somewhat disjointed, even arbitrary, fashion. I have rearranged these passages, grouping together those that relate to a person, family, or place. I quote these passages, with additional notes and explanations based on my own research. They appear, for the first time, consolidated with the people to whom the notes and writings pertain.

Disclaimers by Earlier Workers

Inasmuch as the foundation of the present genealogy is based on the work of earlier family genealogists, their disclaimers bear repeating. (My own disclaimer, relating to the entire set of family genealogies presented here, is in the General Introduction.)

[12] Probably Dudley's Chapel, on Benton Corners Road, Sudlersville, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland. It was built in 1783 and has a small cemetery associated with it. Dudley's Chapel has a prominent place in the early history of the Methodist Church in Maryland, one of the earliest surviving Methodist churches in Maryland and the first in Queen Anne's Co. (and just one of two surviving 18th century county churches). The first bishops of the Methodist Church in America preached here at one time or another. (>>Maryland Historical Trust, National Register Listings in Maryland, website http://marylandhistoricaltrust.net; accessed 12 Dec 2005.) Dudley's Chapel does not otherwise appear in the known history of the family, and what had brought Lathrop Mack's attention to it in this regard is not certain, other than the fact that many, if not most, of the early family members were of the Methodist faith.

A disclaimer found in the papers of Lathrop and Roberta Mack was incorporated into the cover sheet of Edward S. Smith's "Smith Genealogy". It reads:

> First draft - incomplete, unsatisfactory, and subject to comments, corrections, additions, deletions, omissions, suggestions, rewriting, rearrangement, etc., etc., and in no sense adequate, satisfactory, or final in the present form.

Lathrop Mack wrote an additional, longer disclaimer with explanations, admitting to incomplete and perhaps incorrect data. His statement, also incorporating acknowledgments, serves well also for the present genealogy: [13]

> Concerning our ancestor James Smith [patentee of Smith's Delight] very little came to be known. What has been learned of him and his descendants and their nearest kin will be set down in as connected a form as may be in order (1) that the information may be collected in one account, and (2) so that it may be available to others who may be interested, and, it is hoped, willing to offer additional facts, corrections and criticisms. A third reason is because apparently, to date, no one has done this, and each year it becomes more difficult to do, not being available from printed sources, so far as has been learned, and due to the fact that the descendants are constantly becoming more scattered, and losing contact with each other.
> While making this search all available facts as to relatives of his descendants have been recorded as received in order to aid an serve as clues in the search for his ancestors. It is hoped to carry the ancestry back in all collateral lines to the original immigrants to America. It is earnestly hoped that every person who sees this record will offer any criticisms[,] corrections, additions and suggestions that he can make to anything contained herein. More facts might have been included, in the later generations, but it has been preferred, as far as possible, to let descendants contribute what they wish preserved about themselves and their ancestors, and relatives.
> If living descendants manifest sufficient interest by responding with information as to their ancestors, relatives and descendants, such as births, marriages, deaths, residences, character sketches, war records, civil and military service, and honors, anecdotes, photographs, pictures etc., it is the present intention to put these rough notes in final form at the end of the search and make the result available to all who are interested and contribute information.
> This rough draft of notes cannot be put into final form until all possible comments and data have been received, and many missing dates obtained. It has been attempted to arrange the facts at present known in a form to be easily examined by others in the hope that missing items, facts and dates may be secured. Continued Updates

As described in the General Introduction, all descendants in a family lineage are enumerated consecutively, as generated by Family Treemaker Software. A few additional individuals have been added since this numerical sequence was generated, and these individuals have been added here. They have been inserted in genealogical order and enumerated using alphabetical suffixes. The additions are as follows:

Genealogy of the Smith Family of the Eastern Shore

Note Concerning Generation Nos. 1–3

Nearly all of the information about the first three generations of this Smith lineage is obtained from the genealogy compiled by Edward Seville Smith (1880-1963) [No. 212] [14]. The data are outlined in his typescript, "Smith Genealogy and Some Reminiscences", and graphically arranged on its accompanying handwritten paper scroll that delineates the family tree [see footnote 1]. He had worked with a substantial amount of genealogical information previously gathered by his sister, Roberta (1877-1945) [No. 211], and her husband, J. Lathrop Mack (1877-1952). To this information Ed Smith added data from other family members and genealogical correspondents, which included records obtained from State of Maryland archives and historical organizations. After Ed Smith's death, the Macks' daughter, Elizabeth Munger (1906-1990) [No. 335], continued some of the work. Portions of the work of all of these individuals are included in the present genealogy.

The Smith family genealogy, as arranged by Edward Smith and based upon the research by the Macks' and their acknowledged sources, begins with the assumed progenitor, James Smith [No. 1]. In 1683 he was the patentee of land called "Smith's Delight" in old Talbot County, Maryland (in Queen Anne's County today). He died before 27 July 1709.[15] The original research that led to this James Smith was done by genealogical historian and family member Emerson Bryan Roberts [No. 326]. Much later, Elizabeth Munger discovered information that casts doubt on Roberts' findings. The first three generations (as listed here) may not relate to our Smith family, at least not in the fashion as outlined by the genealogy.

[14] Throughtout this genealogy, all individuals have a unique number, based on generations and as calculated by Family Tree Maker software.

[15] The will of his son, Matthew Smith [No. 3] is dated 27 July 1709; it provides for Matthew's mother, but not his father; thus presumably the father was deceased.

When J. Lathrop Mack began his research on the extended Smith family genealogy, the ancestry of the family line was known only as far back as to James Smith [No. 24, in Generation No. 4], who died in 1838; and, on the side of his second wife, Susanna Moore, ancestry was known back to her parents. However, James Smith [No. 24] has problematical data associated with him; specifically, his age, his parents, and whether he was born in America or in Ireland. He may be attached to the wrong parents; and if so, Generations 1-3 are not correctly associated in the Smith family genealogy. Still this may not disassociate these individuals, who could after all be family, as is discussed shortly.

Problems concerning the age of James Smith [No. 24] have long been recognized by the family historians. He is recorded as having died in 1838 at the age of 80, thus his date of birth was about 1758. However, the earliest known child attributed to him was born in 1762. Although the problem was often noted, no resolution was reached. Sometime after Edward Smith's death, Elizabeth Munger located the Bible record of this James Smith and his wife, Susannah Moore Smith, which contradicts some data that were originally outlined in the "Smith Genealogy". The information seems to indicate different parents and a different national heritage for James. The Bible record states that James came from Ireland. Elizabeth Mack Munger reported in correspondence, without further elaboration, the information that contradicts prevalent family information:[16]

> Maryland Hall of Records has the Bible Record of James Smith and his wife, Susannah Moore (#774209) which was submitted 22 Apr. 1977 by "a grand-daughter of John and Mary Smith" who possibly was my mother's cousin, Margaret Slaughter Smith[17] of Baltimore. * * * The Bible record says "James Smith with a brother or two came to America from Ireland. He married Susannah Moore who is thought to have been born in Delaware or in Maryland near the Delaware line."

Without the ability to reexamine the research files of the Macks and E. S. Smith together, or to interview the parties with whom they worked, a satisfactory resolution cannot be reached at this time.[18] The genealogy of the first generations is retained as originally presented in the "Smith Genealogy", so as to allow further research to continue with an unaltered set of data.

[16] Elizabeth M. Munger to Mrs. W. Marvin Barton, 31 Aug 1980. The disposition of the Bible was not indicated by Munger, nor is it known to me. Further information from the Bible is given in the entry for James Smith [No. 24].

[17] Margaret Slaughter (Smith) Spaulding [No. 122, see under No. 60] is listed in this genealogy as a granddaughter of Joseph Moore Smith [No. 34]. There were eight granddaughters of John and Mary Smith; the John Smith here mentioned by Mrs. Munger was Capt. John Smith [No. 46].

[18] Most of the original records that the Macks had held were those later held by the Macks' daughter, Elizabeth Munger, which were after her death sent to Nadine Synnestvedt. The disposition of Edward S. Smith's records is less certain, although I received some of these through both Helen McCarraher and Nadine Synnestvedt. I relied on photocopies of some of these records, which are at least second- or third-generation copies. My set of reference copies includes material from other family members, too, and was made over a period of time, from about the 1970s to early 2000s. Additional, ancillary materials have come from other sources; in one special case–that of the Potts family who are maternal ancestors of one of the Smith wives–a tremendous amount of useful information was obtained from Potts family papers now held in the Archives of the Academy of the New Church, in Bryn Athyn, Pennsylvania.

Even if James Smith [No. 24] of the fourth generation is in fact an immigrant to America, and has been attached to the wrong parents in this genealogy, James Smith [No. 1] of "Smith's Delight" may yet still be the progenitor of our family. This is possible if there is a son, for example, about whom we have no information

It is possible, too, that a child returned to England or Ireland, whose descendant may be James Smith [No. 24]. Allegiances to both family and Crown could have conducted our Smiths back and forth across the Atlantic at different times during the 17th and 18th centuries, records of which do not survive. Was it a coincidence that James Smith [No. 24] came to reside in the area of present-day Queen Anne's County where James Smith [No. 1] and his descendants resided? Had James Smith [No. 24] emigrated to join relations in Maryland who were descended from James [No. 1]? (A less likely scenario may suggest that James Smith [No. 24] himself had been born in the Maryland colony, gone to Ireland, and returned with his one or more brothers.)

These are only working hypotheses, to be sure; yet so little is known of these early Smiths that all possible contributions to the paucity of data must be considered.

Descendants of James Smith (– before 27 July 1709)

(739 descendants[19])

Generation No. 1

1. James[1] Smith died before 27 July 1709. He married Margaret. She died after 13 September 1709.

Children of James Smith and Margaret are:

	2	i.	Mary[2] Smith. She married Fisher.
+	3	ii.	Matthew Smith, died between 27 July-13 September 1709 in Queen Anne's Co., Maryland.
	4	iii.	William Smith, died 1722 in Queen Anne's Co., Maryland.
+	5	iv.	James Smith, born 1693 in Queen Anne's Co., Maryland; died between 1727-1728.

NOTES

1. James Smith (– before 27 July 1709)

In the "Smith Genealogy", James Smith [No. 1] was labelled "James Smith I".[20] In the credits to that typescript, Edward S. Smith notes, "Our cousin, Emerson Bryan Roberts, in addition to family Bibles and other family sources, did much searching of Land Records and Wills, which resulted in the establishment of our Progenitor to be James Smith and Margaret, his wife . . . ."[21]

James Smith was a planter. He may have come from England or Ireland, although it is also feasible that he was the son of an immigrant (now unknown) to the Chesapeake tidewater country. Regardless of our unsatisfactory understanding of his origins, he was in 1683 recipient of a land patent for "Smith's Delight" in (old) Talbot County, Maryland, which he received from the division of lands owned by one Richard Peacock.[22] (Also see the section below, "Smith's Delight".)

When he obtained "Smith's Delight", as noted in the patent, James Smith already owned an adjacent property, "Smith's Beginning". The properties are located today in Queen Anne's County, just southwest of Pondtown and south of the Chester River town of Crumpton.

The Proceedings and Acts of the General Assembly of Maryland for 1696 include mention of "Capt James Smith Sherriff of Talbott County", regarding a petition "relating to Surplusage Lands &c" and for making "their titles certain". Whether this James Smith is the same as the subject here, or a relation, is as yet undetermined.[23]

---

[20] In the "Smith Genealogy", Edward S. Smith enumerated James Smith I through VI, but these are not family usage, nor even are they a direct lineage. Rather, the numerals were used by E. S. Smith to distinguish between the several James Smiths. Because the James Smiths are not a direct lineage, Edward Smith's convention is not used in the present genealogy; instead, the sequential enumeration of individuals throughout the entire genealogy is used. Note, too, that there are other James Smiths who were not enumerated by E. S. Smith, including two grandsons of "James Smith VI", one of whom is uniquely distinguished by the title, "Captain" James Smith. The following is an accounting of the various James Smiths of the family:

[No. 1]	James Smith I (-before 27 July 1709)
[No. 5]	James Smith II (1693-1727/28) , son of James Smith, No. 1
[No. 13]	James Smith III (-1799) , son of James Smith, No. 5
[No. 17]	James Smith IV, son of James Smith, No. 13
[No. 24]	James Smith V (-1838), parentage confused; his attribution as son of Joseph Smith, No. 14, may not be correct (see introductory notes and further remarks with James Smith, No. 24)
[No. 29]	James Smith VI (1768-1839), son of James Smith, No. 24
[No. 56]	James Smith (1811-1844), son of Joseph Moore Smith, No. 34
[No. 89]	James Smith (Capt. James Smith, 1840-1929), son of Capt. John Smith, No. 46
[No. 199]	James Robert Lee Smith (1870-1950), son of James Smith, No. 89
[No. 450]	James Robert Lee Smith, 2nd (1950-), son of Wilbur Edward Smith, No. 323

[21] "Smith Genealogy", p. 3. Emerson B. Roberts (1890-after 1951) [No. 326] was a researcher of genealogy as an avocation; his papers included several in Maryland Historical Magazine, but he did not publish anything about the Smiths.

Margaret Smith (–after 13 September 1709)
(wife of James Smith [No. 1])

James Smith's wife is mentioned in the will written by their son, Matthew; there her name is spelled "Margrett". The omission of James Smith [No. 1] from Matthew's will of 13 September 1709, and the inclusion of his mother, testifies to the decease of James prior to this date, and Margaret's decease afterward.

"Smith's Beginning" and "Smith's Delight"

The original land patents, "Smith's Beginning" (date unknown) and the later "Smith's Delight" (1683) were south of today's Crumpton, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland, in the vicinity of the headwaters of today's Pearl Creek. Reassignments, subdivision, and (fortuitously in lesser measure) development in the area have all but made the boundaries of these properties unseen today. Two generations after the time of James Smith the original patentee (thus by the middle of the 18th century), all of Smith's Delight had been subdivided and sold to new owners. Regardless of whether James Smith [No. 1] and his descendants are correctly ascribed to our family, the following observations about "Smith's Delight" and "Smith's Beginning" still pertain to this James Smith, and thus serve as a contribution to the history of Queen Anne's County.

Nothing is known of Smith's Beginning other than it was adjacent to and southeast of Smith's Delight; and of the latter, all we have are the metes and bounds of the 300-acre property By examining the original patent, we can follow the boundaries with precision. Unfortunately, the starting point is at "a marked Oak standing by a Brook", and of course these are transient features. Nevertheless, vestiges of the original boundaries may be discernible today in the alignment of property lines or road alignments, as described below.

The "Smith Genealogy" provides the following commentary: [24]

> This grant named "Smith's Delight" is recorded in Annapolis Land Office, Liber S.D.#A. Folio 499. This grant is bounded on the southeast by other land belonging to said James Smith, named "Smith's Beginning". Date of his acquiring "Smith's Beginning" was not learned.
> The above mentioned deed to James Smith of "Smith's Delight", was given at the City of St. Maries, under the grant seal of Our Province of Maryland, on November 15, A.D. 1683, by the Commissions General of Our said Province of Maryland. The deed recites that James Smith of Talbott County of the Province of Maryland hath due him 300 acres of land within the Province, etc., but does not show the nature of the service by James Smith for which the grant was made. This could, no doubt, be ascertained from the Office of these Commissions General, or from the Land Office at Annapolis, together with information as to when and whence this early settler came to the Eastern Shore. We have a photostatic copy of this deed. [See shortly below for a partial transcription of the original patent.]

This location is nearer the Delaware State line and about 10 or 15 miles therefrom. This land is bounded partly, on the south-east, by other land of James Smith called "Smith's Beginning", so he was there before 1683.

As also noted in the patent, the annual rent (i.e., property tax) charged to James Smith was "twelve Shillings Sterling in Silver or Gold".

Other patents in Maryland were also called "Smith's Delight", but none of these have any relation to the James Smith who is the present subject. A "Smyths delight" on the Transquaking River, old Talbot Co. (now in Dorchester Co.), was noted in 1665 in the Maryland Proceedings of the Provincial Court, 1663-1666. A "Smith's Delight" was conveyed to Margaret Smith in the will of one Nathan Smith of Anne

The identity of Richard Peacock has not otherwise been determined; the name as it appears in some historical records is inconclusive: One Richard Peacock is cited as having arrived in Maryland in 1663 (Gust Skordas, ed., The Early Settlers of Maryland: An Index to Names of Immigrants, Compiled from Records of Land Patents, 1633-1680, in the Hall of Records, Annapolis, Maryland, Genealogical Publishing Co., Baltimore, 1968, p. 353; Carson Gibb, A Supplement to the Early Settlers of Maryland, Maryland State Archives, Annapolis, 1997, p. 51). Locating "Smith's Delight" Today: The Attempts by Edward S. Smith and Earle Spamer

Although the original survey for "Smith's Delight" survives in archival records (see below), locating its precise position in the modern-day community south of Crumpton, Maryland, is somewhat of a problem. However, there is circumstantial evidence that allows us to make some remarks about the placement of "Smith's Delight" and how the original property may be recognized today.

Both Edward S. Smith and I independently made attempts to locate "Smith's Delight"; Smith probably around 1960, and me between 2004-2007. My own attempts employ topographic maps and aerial photographs, which were not used by Edward Smith. Nonetheless, Ed Smith's work is admirably precise.

The following sections outline Edward Smith's methods and results, followed by my original attempt and a revised look at the evidence on maps, photographs, and ground examinations.

1 — Edward S. Smith's Information (ca. 1960)

The boundaries of Smith's Delight are measured in the patent record, thus:

> Beginning at a marked Oak standing by a Brook on & running thence North East by North fifty perches then South East by East three hundred & twenty perches then South West by South to a knoll of Land laid out for himself & called Smiths Begining [sic] & then by the said Land & the Land of John Breams called Domain[27] two hundred & twenty Perches then North North West two hundred & Sixty Perches & then with a straight Line to the aforesaid bounded tree . . . .[28]

Edward S. Smith drew a rough sketch that plots the cardinal directions and linear distances of each line of the original survey of Smith's Delight, as it is documented in the patent of 1683. The property is an irregular polygon of five sides, more roughly diamond-shaped, longer on its northerly-southerly axis and widest below its center. Edward Smith's sketch also very roughly places the property with respect to the course of Double Creek (now Pearl Creek), the town of Crumpton on the Chester River, and Double Creek Church, a historic church but much younger than Smith's Delight.

Smith's schematic sketch is to scale for the Smith's Delight polygon by itself, but the sketch of the polygon is neither to scale nor precisely arranged with respect to its proximity to Crumpton or Double Creek (now Pearl Creek). His sketch shows Double Creek departing the property to the northwest, which is correct insofar as the creek flows to the northwest when it leaves this area; but in the vicinity of Smith's Delight itself (on Smith's sketch) the creek flows to the north and east. His sketch also shows a road crossing the northern extremity of the property, which I had taken to be Pondtown Road, which traverses the area in a southwest–northeasterly direction, southwest of Pondtown. The sketch also shows the Double Creek Church on this road, to the west; in fact the church is on Burchard Sawmill Road a mile north of Pondtown Road, but given the imprecise scaling on the sketch outside of the polygon the [27] Edward Smith read this property name as "Jamaira", which it could be, but I believe it reads "Domain".

[28] Patent to James Smith, for Smith's Delight, 15 Nov 1683, Liber SD #A, folios 499-500 (Land Office, Annapolis, Maryland); photostatic copy seen. A perch is a linear unit also called a rod, which is 16.5 feet (5.029 m).

placement is reasonable. Edward Smith's sketch implies that Smith's Delight is almost entirely to the southeast of Double Creek Church and south of Pondtown Road, just barely crossing to the north of the road. It was upon Smith's sketch, and the approximate positioning of the church and road, that I based my first attempts to locate the property on modern maps and aerial photographs, as outlined next. This may be in error, as explained more fully farther below.

2 — Topographic Maps and Aerial Photographs (ca. 2004)

Even though Edward Smith plotted the dimensions of Smith's Delight and has correctly identified the approximate location of the property, it nonetheless is of interest to establish more certainly where it lies with respect to modern landmarks.

Comparing Edward Smith's rough sketch to modern maps and aerial photographs of the area, three miles south of Crumpton, produced a couple of likely scenarios. Inasmuch as the precise starting point of the boundaries as originally described is fairly unrecognized today (save that it is near the head of "Double Creek", or Pearl Creek today), all we have for evidence of the original boundaries are the lengths of the five sides of the property and the approximate cardinal directions these lines traversed. Of course, the property has been divided and redivided an undetermined number of times since it was first laid out, beginning with early divisions by James Smith himself, which cumulatively have probably obscured some of the boundary lines. Even so, today some of the angles and lengths of the original survey boundaries may exhibit themselves as small farm roads or obvious property boundaries.

On an aerial photograph of the area, I laid out to scale the polygon plotted by Edward Smith based on the original patent. As a check, on the aerial photograph as viewed on the "terraserver.com" Internet website, I electronically calculated the area of this irregular polygon using multi-point area measurements. The resulting area of the polygon covers an area of 300± acres, which is the size of the land patented to James Smith in 1683. Even though the placement of the polygon on modern maps may not be correct, the area of the polygon corroborates the description of the patent.

I positioned the polygon on the aerial photograph, first using Edward Smith's apparent northerly point as an "anchor". But when the polygon was rotated on this point some distance westward, some of the boundary lines seemed to approximate a few of the lanes or property boundaries that are visible on the photograph. The "fit" is circumstantial, of course, but a useful indication that relics of Smith's Delight may still be represented in properties as laid out today.

The area is still mostly woodland, interspersed with the open spaces of farms. To the east of the area that I identify as Smith's Delight was the original property called "Smith's Beginning". It was adjacent to Smith's Delight, but uncertainly positioned, extending an undetermined distance and of undetermined size. Nothing of special notice is observed in the aerial photographs of this area. However, see my reinterpretation, next.

3 — A Better Match? (2007)

In February 2007, I revisited my drawings of what I supposed to be the placement of Smith's Delight on modern maps. I noted a relationship that I had missed when I first drew these out in 2004. By transposing the five-sided polygon about 0.8 mile to the northwest, the southernmost (acute) angle in the boundary lines and the two bounding sides of this angle fit for all intents and purposes perfectly upon the modern-day intersection of Pondtown Road and Burchard Sawmill Road. This is a useful observation only if these two original boundary lines of Smith's Delight have been preserved to this day, reflected by Sketch map by Edward Seville Smith, roughly depicting the proximity of Smith family properties in the vicinity of Queen Anne's County, Maryland.

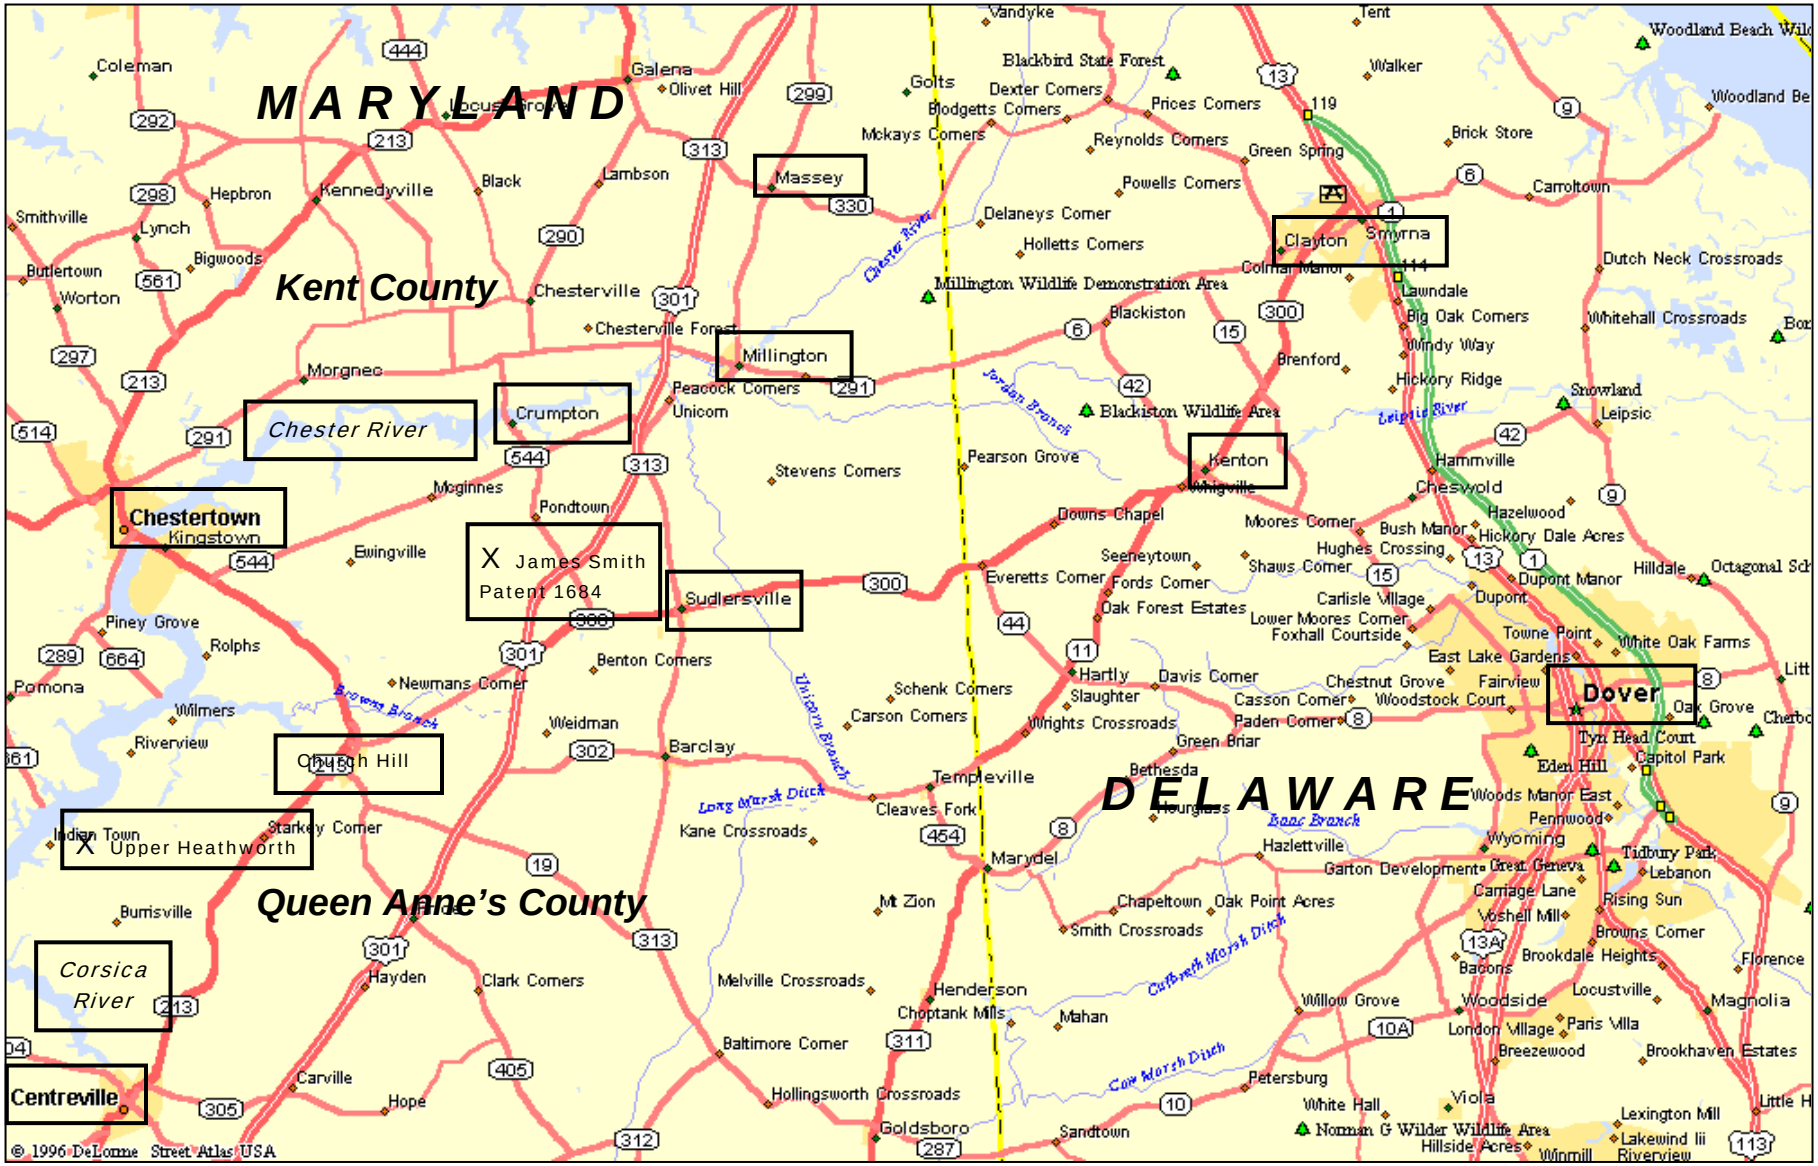
Several places of note here (and about which see discussions in the text) are as follows. Even taking into consideration the very generalized form of Edward Smith's map, note that some of his locations are ambiguous or contrary to other evidence.

(1) The placement of "James Smith Patent 1684", which is "Smith's Delight", is shown north of Sudlersville Road (Maryland Rt. 300). However, his indication of "Double Creek Church" also pointing to the same location, and the scale of his map, are unhelpful in better determining the placement of "Smith's Delight".

(2) The placement of "Lentley" in the northwest part of the "pocket" formed by the crossing of the highway (Maryland Rt. 213) leading north from Centreville and the Corsica River. The location of Lentley is ambiguous in all family records.

(3) The "Farm [of] Covington [and] Massey" is depicted west of the highway, southwest of Church Hill. The 1866 property map cited in the text clearly shows the Covington property on the east side of the highway. Smith's location of "Mother's Farm" (Ella Seville Smith's farm), has not otherwise been precisely located.

(4) The "2 farms of Joseph M. Smith" seem to be on the east side of Dudley Corners Road (Maryland Rt. 290).



Approximately the same area depicted by Edward S. Smith's sketch map of properties and places in the vicinity of Queen Anne's County, Maryland.

Intersection of Burchard Sawmill Rd. and Pondtown Rd., possibly the southern point of the original property of "Smith's Delight" (see text)

Edward S. Smith's reconstruction of the boundaries of Smith's Delight, as read from the dimensions laid out in the original patent to James Smith in 1684.

Only the relative dimensions and cardinal orientations of the sides of the "Smith's Delight" polygon are correctly proportioned. The rest of the map is generalized and not to scale.

Note the position of the polygon with relation to the alignment of "Road" and Double Creek. It is not clear whether the road represents Pondtown Road or McGinnes Road (Maryland Rt. 544). The location of Double Creek Church with respect to the property is misleading and should not be taken literally. Regardless, the generalities do not affect the "2007 reinterpretation" of the property's location, as discussed in the text.

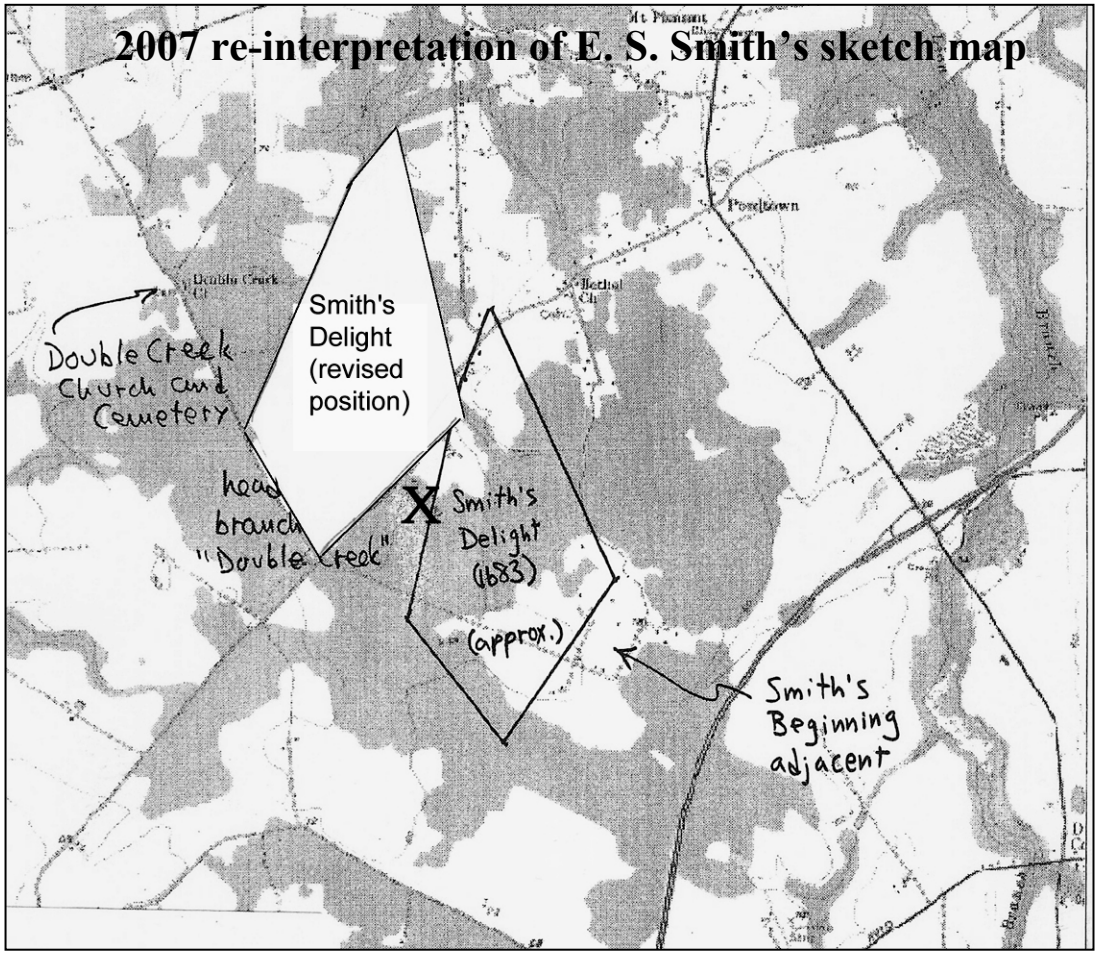
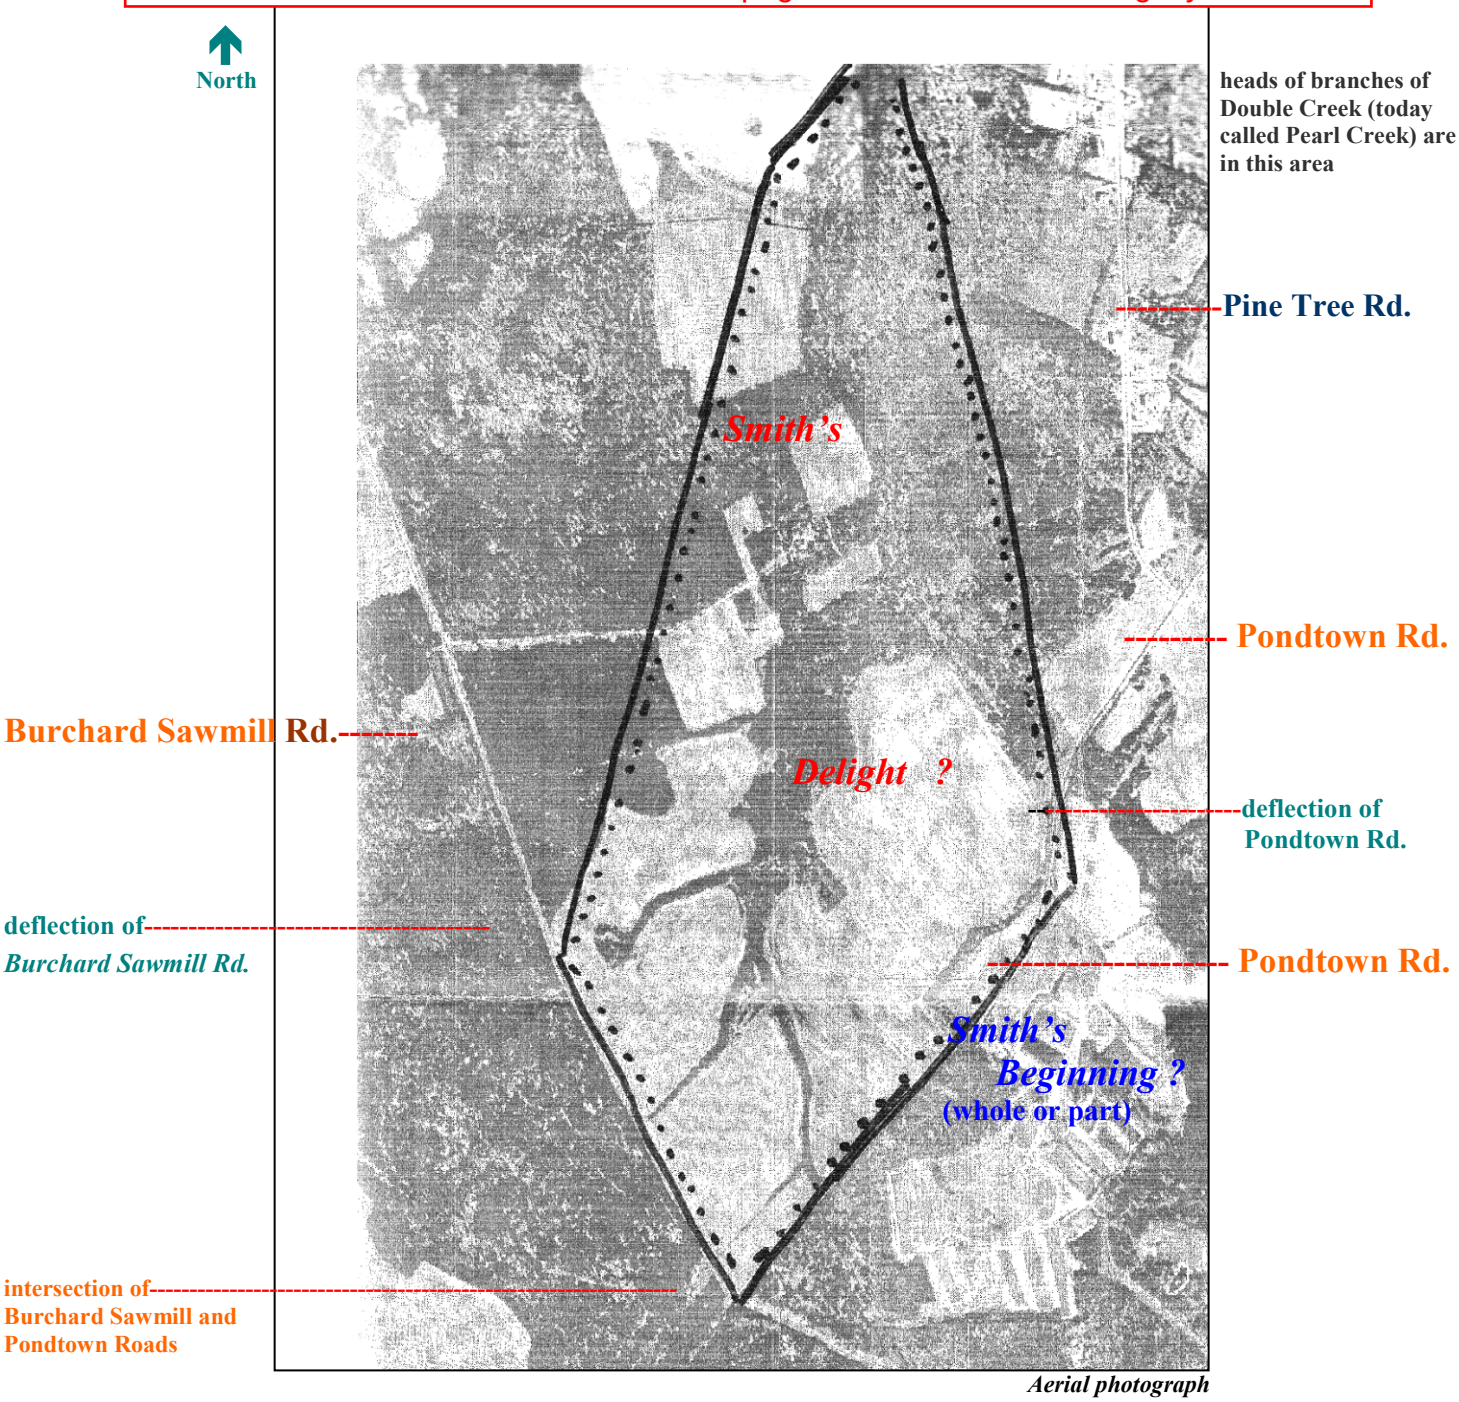
2004 interpretation of Edward S. Smith's sketch map (see text)



Note: In the automatic creation of this PDF page, labels were shifted slightly to the left.



Possible location of "Smith's Delight" and "Smith's Beginning"

"Smith's Delight", the 1684 patent to James Smith [No. 1], was situated south of today's Crumpton and west of Pondtown, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland. 2004 interpretation: Edward S. Smith's hand-drawn rough diagram seems to have positioned the polygon of Smith's Delight such that today's Pondtown Road crosses the upper tip of the property. However, other than the segment lengths and cardinal directions of the surveyed property boundaries, his map is generalized and not to scale. 2007 re-interpretation (see text): If the property outline is transposed such that its lower tip is positioned within the angle formed by the present-day intersection of Pondtown Road and Burchard Sawmill Road, the road alignments precisely match the coinciding boundary lines of "Smith's Delight"; they could be surviving relics of the original property boundary. Helping to corroborate this supposition, the roads deflect at the widest part of the polygon, which probably was the result of adjusting the road alignments to trace two boundary lines when the roads were laid out. Also observe that the northeastward-trending boundary line on the west side of the property (as drawn onto the aerial photograph) seems to demarcate a present-day boundary, as noticed by the alignment of lighter-colored cultivated areas. In this interpretation the property does not reach to McGinnes Road (Maryland Rt. 544) as intimated by Edward Smith's hand-drawn map, but given the sketchy presentation of that map this does not pose a problem in adopting this location as that of "Smith's Delight".

"Smith's Beginning", which was the property known to have already been owned by James Smith in 1684, was to the southeast of, and adjacent to, "Smith's Delight". The farm just southeast of the polygon (seen in aerial view, above, and the X on the map on page II-26E) may be the location of Smith's Beginning, in whole or in part.

the traces followed by these two roads in this area and their intersection. This is a reasonable assumption, given that highways and roads often delimit property lines and are thus preserved for long periods of time. If the assumption is wrong, the coincidence is striking.

The traces of Pondtown Road and Burchard Sawmill Road as they leave the intersection to the northeast and northwest, respectively, follow the supposed boundary of Smith's Delight for short distances. Pondtown Road and Burchard Sawmill Road both bend as they traverse away from the intersection; these bends approximately coincide with the eastern and western extremities of Smith's Delight as laid out in the original polygonal survey; that is, these bends coincide with either side of the widest point of the roughly "diamond" shape of the Smith's Delight polygon.

Furthermore, the point of beginning of the original survey (near the northernmost part of the property, where the "marked oak" had stood), and the 50-perch distance to the northeast "running thence" along a brook away from the oak, coincides with the course of a branch of Double Creek (now Pearl Creek) at this location. Again, if this is only a coincidence, it is a remarkable one.

If my reinterpretation is correct, then the "knoll" that was the property called "Smith's Beginning" should be southeast across Pondtown Road. Today this area is a farm accessed on Goose Valley Fish Lane. The farm is situated on an area that is topographically slightly higher than the area that surrounds it; thus the area may represent the "knoll". Also see Additions & Corrections

The area delineated by this revised interpretation of the Smith's Delight polygon is today mostly woodland, farmland, and pasture. It lies due east of the Double Creek Church on Burchard Sawmill Road. It seems that Edward Smith had the position correctly noted in the first place, although he did not have the advantage of aerial photographs, nor did he seem to have utilized topographic maps of the area. In the "Smith Genealogy" (as noted above) he indicated that the property was today near "a small frame church and several houses and a small graveyard", which seems to be the locale of Double Creek Church.

Unfortunately, these examples are suppositions, reasonable or unreasonable as they may be; all are working hypotheses. Surely, very detailed studies of all surviving land records, if that is still possible and practical, may resolve the ambiguous information that is outlined here.

3. Matthew[2] Smith (James[1]) died between 27 Jul–13 September 1709 in Queen Anne's Co., Maryland. He married Mary. She died after 13 September 1709.

Children of Matthew Smith and Mary are:

6	i.	Smith[3].
7	ii.	James Smith, died after 13 September 1709.
8	iii.	John Smith.
9	iv.	Mary Smith.
10	v.	Matthew Smith, of Wye River, Maryland; died after 05 May 1722.
11	vi.	Thomas Smith.

NOTES

The will of Matthew Smith (–1709) [No. 3] is dated 27 July 1709, in Queen Anne's Co.; probate was 13 September 1709.[29] The probate records include one "Rebecka Smith" as a witness, but who she is with respect to the Smith family is uncertain.

5. James[2] Smith (James[1]) was born 1693 in Talbot Co. (now Queen Anne's Co.), Maryland, and died between 1727-1728 in Queen Anne's Co., Maryland. He married Mabel.

Children of James Smith and Mabel are:

	12	i.	Henry[3] Smith.
+	13	ii.	James Smith, died 1799.
+	14	iii.	Joseph Smith, died after 1761.
	15	iv.	Richard Smith, died about 1801. He married Mary.

NOTES

5. James Smith (1693–1727/1728)

James Smith [No. 5] was labelled "James Smith II" in the "Smith Genealogy". He was a planter. His will is dated 9 January 1727; probate 7 May 1728[30] (thus he more probably died early in 1728 rather than sometime in 1727).

12. Henry Smith

Henry Smith never married. Upon his death he left his land to his brother, James.

15. Richard Smith (–ca. 1801)

Richard Smith lived in Murderkill Hundred, Delaware, and bought the land of his brothers, Henry and James. His left a will dated 1801.

Nothing is known about Richard Smith or his family, if he had one.

The will of landed Richard Bennett, dated 25 September 1749, includes a lengthy list of beneficiaries in families from Queen Anne's Co., Maryland, and elsewhere. Among them was a cousin, "Margarett Smith", daughter of Capt. Richard Smith who could be this Richard Smith based upon the associations and his age.[31]

[31] The entry in the will reads: "To cousin Margarett Smith, d. o. Capt. Richard Smith, Bodles Outlett, purchased of Andrew Price, now Bennetts Outlett of which I gave 200a to the sons of Charles Seth & now to Thomas Randall & his wife the plntn. he dw. on, & the negroes & livestock, & for want of heirs, to her sister Prisceilla Brown." (Carson Gibb, Abstracts of Wills, from Maryland Prerogative Court (Wills), Maryland State Archives, S538, Liber 28, 1751-1754, folio 466). However, because Richard Smith is not a beneficiary may indicate that this family association is not warranted, or that there is an assumption of self-sufficiency of Richard Smith.

Generation No. 3

13. James[3] Smith (James[2], James[1]) died 1799.

Children of James Smith are:

16 i. Elisabeth[4] Smith.
17 ii. James Smith.
18 iii. Joseph Smith.
19 iv. Mabel Smith.
20 v. Mary Smith died before 27 November 1799.
21 vi. Rebecca Smith.
22 vii. Susannah Smith.

NOTES

In the "Smith Genealogy", James Smith [No. 13] is labelled "James Smith III"; and James Smith [No. 17] is labelled "James Smith IV". Note that in this genealogy the descendency from James of "Smith's Delight" does not run through James III and IV but through James II [No. 5] and his son, Joseph [No. 14]. The Roman numerals were contrived by Edward S. Smith to distinguish between most of the James Smiths. Because the use of these Roman numerals can be mistaken as the Roman numerals of direct descendants, they are not used in the present genealogy; instead, the sequential numbers of descendants, running consecutively through the entire genealogy, are used.

13. James Smith (–1799)

James Smith lived first in Queen Anne's Co., Maryland, and later moved to Murtherkill (or Murderkill) Hundred, Delaware. He died intestate. The "Smith Genealogy" notes: [32]

> James Smith III, grandson of Patentee, having died intestate, his son, James Smith IV, on November 27, 1799, filed a Petition in Partition in the Orphans' Court on behalf of himself and his brothers and sisters, which Petition was approved and the Court ordered the sale and division of the lands of said Intestate.
> The Petition named the children and parties in interest as follows: Susanna, Joseph, Elizabeth, Mabel, James, Rachel and Mary Smith, deceased. The purchaser at this sale was Richard Smith, brother of the deceased intestate. A large tract of land in Murderkill Hundred, Orphans' Court Proceedings, May 9, 1800. Deed December 6, 1800. Land Record, Kent County, Delaware, G. Vol. 2. 19.
> James Smith III, grandson of Patentee, the Intestate, had in his lifetime sold all of the remainder and unsold portion of "Smith's Delight" to a James McCoy, of Queen Anne's County, Maryland, by deed recorded in Talbot County, June 11, 1762. Deed I.T. 45 & 99 V.

[32] "Smith Genealogy", pp. 16-17.

This would indicate that we have followed the correct line of descent of this family. While the Patent Deed described "Smith's Delight" as in Talbot County, this part of Talbot County later became Queen Anne's County.

Of the children of James Smith III and their issue, named in the Petition for Partition in 1800, we unfortunately have no further information, but it is certainly to be assumed that their descendants are extant in Delaware, Maryland, and elsewhere in our Country.

---

14. Joseph[3] Smith (James[2], James[1]) died after 1761. He married Mary.

Children of Joseph Smith and Mary are:

	23	i.	Henry[4] Smith.
+	24	ii.	James Smith, died 1838.
	25	iii.	Mary Smith, born 28 October 1762.

NOTES

Joseph Smith lived in Murderkill Hundred, Kent Co., Delaware.

This concludes the putative early generations of the Smith family of Queen Anne's Co., Maryland. The ambiguity is explained in the comments that precede this section. The genealogy continues below with James Smith [No. 24], who is said to have been an immigrant from Ireland. He is the unambiguous progenitor of the remainder of the Smith descendants listed in this genealogy.

Generation No. 4

Descendants of James Smith (–1838)

James Smith [No. 24] is the earliest unambiguous ancestor in this Smith genealogy; his marriages and descendants as listed here are correct. However, the ancestral lineage to whom he is attached here (e.g., Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) may be incorrect—refer to the "Note Concerning Generation Nos. 1–3" at the beginning of the Smith genealogy. This ancestry, as originally established by Lathrop and Roberta Mack and others, is nonetheless conserved here because the correct issue of these relations has not been resolved one way or the other.

24. James[4] Smith (Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) died 1838. He married (1) Susanna Moore, daughter of Samuel Moore and Margaret. She was born in Maryland or Delaware. He married (2) Nancy Richardson 1783 near Church Hill, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland.

Children of James Smith and Susanna Moore are:

	26	i.	John[5] Smith.
+	27	ii.	Mary Smith, born 25 October 1762. [First-born child.]
+	28	iii.	Rachel Smith, born 1763.
+	29	iv.	James Smith, born 18 March 1768; died 04 April 1839.
	30	v.	Samuel Smith, born 07 February 1771.
+	31	vi.	George Smith, born 30 March 1774; died 03 June 1826 in Baltimore, Maryland.
	32	vii.	Robert Smith, born 27 July 1776.
	33	viii.	Sarah Smith, born 22 March 1780; died 1856.
+	34	ix.	Joseph Moore Smith, born 22 January 1782; died 10 April 1863.

Children of James Smith and Nancy Richardson are:

	35	i.	Saul John[5] Smith.
+	36	ii.	William Smith, died before 1863.

NOTES

24. James Smith (–1838)

In the "Smith Genealogy", James Smith [No. 24] is labelled "James Smith V".

James Smith is a problematical member of the Smith family lineage because he may have been attributed the incorrect parents, and thus probably an incorrect birth year. Family information had traditionally held that he was born in 1758, but the derived source has not been determined. The "Smith Genealogy" reports only:

> James Smith V, son of Joseph Smith and great-grandson of James Smith, Patentee of "Smith's Delight", was born in 1758 and died in 1838 at 80 years of age. [33]

This figures arithmetically correct but is confused by information that his first child, Mary, is supposed to have been born in 1762—when James would have been four years of age.

This problem has been noticed by other historians, including the original historians Lathrop and Roberta Smith Mack, and Elizabeth Mack Munger. It is clear that some fact is mistaken, but the specific error has not been resolved. Accordingly, the information is retained in this genealogy, with an accounting made as full as possible in the hopes that the information will yield a conclusion to some future family historian.

Although it seems that James Smith [No. 24] was an immigrant from Ireland and has been attributed the incorrect parents in existing family records (as discussed more fully below), his own early American years are possibly confused as well. Edward S. Smith, in discussing the childhood and young adulthood years of James' son, James [James Smith, No. 29], included a couple of remarks in the "Smith Genealogy" that have bearing on James Smith [No. 24]: [34]

> We assume he [James Smith, No. 29] spent his boyhood with his parents in Delaware, and there as a young man acquired his education.
> There is a family tradition that he [James Smith, No. 29] and his wife, Nancy Young Smith, lived in Virginia or North Carolina and in 1804 we find them in Centreville, Maryland . . . .

This is the only statement thus far found that supposes that James Smith [No. 24] resided in Delaware. That James Smith [No. 29] is himself supposed to have lived during his young adult years in Virginia or North Carolina suggests a possible connection with one of those areas, although just as well it could have been a failed attempt to stake out a new life there. So far as we know at this time, James Smith [No. 24] came to live in Queen Anne's County.

Elizabeth Mack Munger reported in correspondence, without further elaboration, that she had found information that contradicted prevalent family information relating to the parentage of James Smith [No. 24]. Unfortunately, her further notes have not been located. She wrote: [35]

> Maryland Hall of Records has the Bible Record of James Smith and his wife, Susannah Moore (#774209) which was submitted 22 Apr. 1977 by "a grand-daughter of John and Mary Smith" who possibly was my mother's cousin, Margaret Slaughter Smith[36] of Baltimore. * * * The Bible record says "James Smith with a brother or two came to America from Ireland. He married Susannah Moore who is thought to have been born in Delaware or in Maryland near the Delaware line."

[35] Elizabeth M. Munger to Mrs. W. Marvin Barton, 31 Aug 1980. The disposition of the Bible was not indicated by Munger, nor is it known to me.

[36] Margaret Slaughter (Smith) Spaulding [No. 122, see under No. 60] is listed in this genealogy as a granddaughter of Joseph Moore Smith [No. 34]. There were eight granddaughters of John and Mary Smith; the John Smith here mentioned by Mrs. Munger was Capt. John Smith [No. 46].

The Bible record of James and Susanna Moore Smith lists the following children's birth dates, which corroborates the list as given above. The data are transcribed from a letter by Elizabeth Munger and are not exactly quoted from the James Smith Bible:[37]

Mary Smith	25 October 1762	married [space here] Ratcliffe
Rachel Smith	23 July 1765	married George Tarbutton
James Smith	18 March 1768	married Nancy Young
Samuel(?)	7 February 1771
George Smith	20 March 1774	married Rebecca (Price) Pratt widow of Thomas Pratt
Robert Smith	27 July 1776	went to Ohio
Sarah Smith	22 March 1780
Joseph Moore Smith	22 January 1782	married R. Spry, E. Levine, F. Rollinson, E. Wilkinson, J. (Sparks) Linsay

That James Smith [No. 24] is said to be an immigrant from Ireland indicates that this James Smith is attributed the wrong parents in the "Smith Genealogy", since Joseph Smith [No. 14] was a Maryland native. The miscorrelation of James' birth year and that of his first-born, Mary, further substantiates the misattribution of parents. Since the Bible record of the children's birth years is presumed to be correct, James' birth year as stated in family records must be incorrect.

It is yet possible—thus far uncorroborated—that James Smith [No. 24] may yet be related to James Smith [No. 1] of "Smith's Delight". He could be a descendant of a son of James [No. 1] who for reasons of family, duty, or distress returned to Ireland or England. In turn, James Smith [No. 24], as a descendant of that unidentified child or grandchild of James Smith [No. 1], may have emigrated to America to join his Smith relations in Maryland. As already noted, it may be a coincidence—yet an interesting one—that James Smith [No. 24] came to reside in the same area of Queen Anne's County, south of Crumpton, where also had resided James Smith [No. 1] and his known descendants.

Regarding the putative Irish ancestry of this Smith lineage, we have an additional, albeit tenuous, piece of information in the form of family tradition. Wilbur Edward (Ed) Smith [No. 323], 3rd great-grandson of James Smith [No. 24], related that "Dad use[d] to say we were Scotch-Irish."[38] We have no way of knowing how that information came to be known in these later generations, or who was the immigrant ancestor referred to in that comment.

The problem is not wholly resolved, so the records as compiled by the Macks and by E.S. Smith are retained for the time being, in order that research into this matter can continue with the same set of data.

The problem with James Smith's age—if indeed his age is correctly identified—may be due to a clerical error. I do not assert that one of these conjectural alternatives is the solution; rather, these are investigations that present working hypotheses that may explain the problem. More information must be found before a reasonable solution is accepted; and regretfully, that may take some time.

One possible reason for the error is that the 1758 date was a lapsus for 1738, and that James lived to 100. Such a notable life achievement should have been worth a comment in the "Smith Genealogy", but there is no such remark.

[37] Elizabeth M. Munger to Mrs. W. Marvin Barton, 31 Aug 1980. The marriage information was apparently added by Munger for its informational value.

[38] W. Ed Smith to Earle Spamer, 16 Mar 2006. His father was James Robert Lee Smith [No. 199].

One may consider that there is confusion involving the dates of death for James [No. 24] and his son, James [No. 29]. However, James [No. 29] died on 4 April 1839 according to the family Bible of his brother, George; and his will was entered to probate on 9 April 1839. The elder James Smith is not mentioned in the junior James' will. The "Smith Genealogy" gives the junior James' date of death only as 1838, which is clearly an error, perhaps conceptually merging the deaths of father and son.

We should be able to identify a land-holding James Smith in the early U.S. censuses, and thereby determine his approximate age. I have attempted to trace James Smith [No. 24] in the U.S. censuses for Queen Anne's Co., with the object of ascertaining his approximate age through these resources. The results are inconclusive, as follows.

The 1790 census for Queen Anne's Co., Maryland, lists but one "Smith", Basil; all others of this phononym are spelled "Smyth", of which two are James. Of course, spellings at this time were not standardized, and the spellings are largely phonetic. The first James Smyth has a household of one male 16 years or older (who would be James), two males under 16, and three females. The second James Smyth has a household of one male 16 or older (who would be James), three males younger than 16, and two females. Based on the ages of the children in the household as of 1790—and the fact that James Smith [No. 24] was twice married with children by both marriages who would still have been at home in 1790—either of these two James Smyths could be him.

The 1800 census for Queen Anne's Co. lists a James Smith whose household included five males between the ages of 0 and 26, thus if one of them was James Smith, the present subject, he would have been in the age range 27-45 (birth dates 1755-1773); other household members are three females in the age range 0-26, plus one freeperson and six slaves. Another household in the 1800 census of Queen Anne's Co. that is headed by a James Smith has one male 45 years or older, two males 10 or younger, and one female 45 or older and one female between 10-16 years; plus four freepersons and seven slaves; thus this James Smith had a birth date before 1755.

The 1810 census for Queen Anne's Co. lists a James Smith and a James L. Smith. The James Smith household includes one male 45 years of age or older, one male aged 26 to 44, one male 16 to 25, two males 10 to 15, one male under 10, one female 45 or older, one female 26 to 44, and two females 10 to 15; plus four others and 11 slaves. The James L. Smith household listed an eldest male between 16 and 25 years of age, thus eliminating this household from consideration as being that of James Smith [No. 24], the present subject.

The 1820 census for Queen Anne's Co. lists two James Smith households and another for James L. Smith. The first James Smith household includes an eldest male between 26 and 44 years of age, thus eliminating this household from contention as being that of James Smith, the present subject. The second James Smith household includes an eldest male at least 45 years of age, plus one male 26-44, one male 16-25, one female 26-44, and one female 16-25; there are also a number of slaves, but the census page is too faint to read from the microfilm copy. The James L. Smith household includes an eldest male between 26 and 44 years of age, thus is not pertinent in this search.

The 1830 census for Queen Anne's Co. does not survive. This is most unfortunate, as in this census household members were for the first time tallied by decadal ages, up to 100 and another group for those who were >100. This might have given an indication of a nongenerian Smith in one of the probable Smith households—if indeed James Smith [No. 24] lived to about 100. The lost records preclude finding out this important fact.

Elizabeth Mack Munger's research records include the following comment in correspondence:

> My Mother had a cousin, Caroline F. Smith, who went into DAR on the line of a Capt. James Moore who served with George Rogers Clark. His wife was Catharine Biggs. Their daughter was Susannah, (b. 1777 according to Caroline's papers) and she married a James Smith who had sons James, George, and other children. [39]

Note that this birth date is several years after the death date of the father of Susannah Moore as listed elsewhere in this genealogy. "Caroline" here refers to Caroline Frances Smith, born 1855, who never married. Also see Additions & Corrections

I am of the opinion that the Bible information for James Smith [No. 24] does in fact represent our common ancestor, who immigrated to Maryland from Ireland. As I have explained, he may yet be a descendant of James Smith [No. 1], who emigrated to Maryland perhaps to join his relations there. I am at a loss as how this can be proved or disproved, given the lack of information about his parents, and that tracing an otherwise anonymous "James Smith" in 18th and 19th century records is a daunting prospect.

Susanna (Moore) Smith
(wife of James Smith [No. 24])

Regarding Susanna Moore, Lathrop Mack's notes include:

> Susannah was a Presbyterian, took her girls with her to the Presbyterian Church once located on the north side of the "Wild-oat" road which enters Church Hill Md from the east and is buried in its graveyard.[40]

She is buried in the former Presbyterian church yard, Church Hill, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland.

Also see the Moore Family collateral genealogy, below.

Nancy (Richardson) Smith
(wife of James Smith [No. 24])

She was a Presbyterian.

26. John Smith

He moved to North or South Carolina. There is no further information.

[40] J. Lathrop Mack, "Descendants of Samuel Moore", typescript (no date), 2 pp.

30. Samuel Smith (1771–)

He may have been born in 1772. A family record (here unidentified) indicated that his mother was Nancy Richardson Smith, but as she did not marry James Smith until 1782 the record was likely to have been attributed to the incorrect wife.

32. Robert Smith (1776–)

His birthdate may have been 27 July 1777. He and his family moved West to Ohio in 1810. His niece, Nancy (a daughter of his brother, George Smith), accompanied them. No further record is had of them.

When during 1810 Robert Smith moved to Ohio is not known. It is not likely that they left Maryland during the winter, so they may have been present for the U.S. census in this state. They might have been enroute at the time of the census, too. In either case, a cross-check of 1810 census data for Ohio is not possible since those records (except for Washington Co.) have been lost. (In the 1820 census for Ohio there are 20 Robert Smiths listed, with no hope of discerning whether one of them is the Robert Smith of family.)

The 1810 census for Queen Anne's Co. includes two Robert Smiths (pp. 105, 114), each tallied in the appropriate age column (26-44) where Robert Smith (of family) would be recorded. Inasmuch as nothing is known of Robert Smith's wife and descendants, and that the official enumeration day for the 1810 census was 6 August, there is no certainty that either of the two Robert Smiths of Queen Anne's Co. is our subject, if indeed he was present there to be counted. In all likelihood, they were enroute to, or had arrived in, Ohio by then.

Notable in the 1810 census, however, is that on page 115 also appear George Smith (aged 16-25) and John Smith (aged >45), which indicates an area of Smith inholdings such as that in the area south of Crumpton, where the Smith homestead of Smith's Delight is located. (As noted with George Smith [No. 31], the George Smith on this census page may not be him because there is no male tallied in the correct age-range column, although circumstantial evidence supports the supposition that it may be him. The John Smith here noted is in the age range >45, thus born before 1765; and Robert and George Smith had a brother, John, whose dates are unknown, although since he moved to the Carolinas at an unknown time this may not be him, either. The oldest known birth year of the siblings born to James Smith and Susannah Moore was Mary, b. 1762.)

33. Sarah Smith (1780–1856)

She never married. As "Sally Smith", she is listed in the 1850 census residing with her nephew, Capt. John Smith [No. 46].

Moore Family
Collateral Genealogy
(8 descendants)

The genealogy of the Moore family, as it relates to our Smith lineage and as currently understood, is as follows:

Samuel[1] Moore was from Murderkill Hundred, Kent Co., Delaware, and died 1773 in Kent Co., Delaware. He married Margaret.

Children of Samuel Moore and Margaret are:

i. Ann[2] Moore.
ii. David Moore.
iii. Elizabeth Moore.
iv. Joseph Moore, died 06 November 1782 in Duck Creek Hundred [near Everett's Corner], Kent Co., Delaware. He married Christiana.
v. Mary Moore.
vi. Samuel Moore.
vii. Sarah Moore. She married Hales.
viii. Susanna Moore, born in Maryland or Delaware. She married James Smith; he died 1838.

NOTES

The Moores were Irish, but nothing more is known about their heritage. They homesteaded "Brown's Addition", 100 acres purchased from William Brown in 1737; the property was "situated on the north side of the most southerly Main Branch of the head of Dover River"[41].

Samuel Moore (senior) (–1773) was a farmer in Kent Co., Delaware. His will is dated 1 May 1773; probate 13 May 1773.[42]

Joseph Moore (–1782) was shot and killed on 6 November 1782 while serving on a militia detail sent to arrest Cheney Clow, a Tory (British sympathizer) Delaware Line soldier who had been accused of treason. The murder took place on 6 November 1782. (See "Cheney Clow", below.)

Cheney Clow

Cheney Clow was a husbandman from Little Creek, Delaware. As a loyalist, he had been required to surrender himself to the revolutionary authorities or face forfeiture of all of his real and personal property.[43] His name, pronounced "cluff", has also been spelled "Clough" and "Cloud".

In April 1778, during the time when the British Army enjoyed its occupation of the colonial seat of government in Philadelphia, Clow led a loyalist revolt near Kenton, Delaware. More than a hundred loyalists fortified a defensive position sometimes referred to as "Cheney Clow's Fort". A detachment of the Delaware militia under Lt. Col. Charles Pope responded, after several days forcing the loyalists from their stronghold. About half of the loyalists were forced into service with the Continental Army, and the "fort" was burned. This was the only skirmish of the Revolution fought in Kent Co., Delaware. Clow escaped, but was located in 1782 and charged with treason. A Kent County posse arrived at his home to arrest him, and in the ensuing battle Joseph Moore, one of the sheriff's posse, was killed.

In the "Smith Genealogy", Edward S. Smith quoted from Some Allied Families of Delaware: [44]

> "Isaac Griffin was a Captain (there is no evidence that he was an officer in the War of the Revolution) and he had a great deal of trouble with Tories, who were numerous in Delaware. He was mainly instrumental in capturing their leader, Chaney Clow. When Clow came home from the Tory Camp, Captain Griffin with his Company surrounded his house. He was accompanied by Major Moore. It was dark and in attempting to reach the door, Griffin stumbled and fell. Major Moore got ahead of him and was shot by Clow, who said he was sorry it was not Griffin. The adherents of Clow hated Griffin intensely and after the War his personal safety was endangered."

Clow was tried for treason in Dover, Delaware, in December 1782. He was acquitted but sentenced to pay £10,000 for wartime damages. He then was charged in the death of Moore, although Moore may have been accidentally killed by one of the posse. On 5 May 1783 Clow was convicted and sentenced to death. Nicholas Van Dyke (1783-1789), then President of Delaware, seems to have been convinced by others that Clow was innocent of the charge, and although he could not pardon Clow, he postponed the sentence indefinitely.[45] However, five years later, after Van Dyke left the Delaware presidency, Clow demanded liberty or death and the sentence was carried out. His wife had him buried in an unmarked grave, the location of which is not now known.

Although some remains of "Fort Clow" were described as late as 1839, no trace remains today. The site is near the confluence of the two branches of Gravelly Run, north of Delaware Route 300 near the community of Everett's Corner, just east of the Maryland boundary. When the area was visited by Earle Spamer on 3 September 2006, a historical marker noting the rebellion was found along the north side of Route 300, between the Gravelly Run bridge and County Road 143.

In 2002, new interest arose about the site of "Cheney Clow's Rebellion", at this time on the farmstead of Joseph G. Ford, whose grandmother had bought the land in 1929. Ford was interested in continuing the archaeological investigations of the area, which had started with informal investigations that led to more serious attempts by Clow descendants.[46]

Regarding the place where Cheney Clow was captured, and where Joseph Moore was killed, George Washington Smith (1833-1908), a grandson of Joseph Moore's sister, Susanna, is said to have "pointed out to his second wife[47] . . . the Clow homestead 'a Plain building not far from Sudlersville, Md. as the place where the murder was committed.'"[48]

In the "Smith Genealogy", Edward S. Smith, 2nd great-grandnephew of Joseph Moore, recalled from his younger years:

> "There was deep resentment against the Clows or Cloughs amongst the Moores and Smiths for generations. Cousin Julia Ann Baynard Martin gave us the tradition of the killing of Joseph

Nadia [Nadine] Smith Synnestvedt, 3rd great-grandniece of Joseph Moore, recalled from her younger years:

> "I remember hearing that our long dead relatives had a feud with the Clow family. Although I think I understood it to be spelled 'Clough' and pronounced Cluff. A fragment of memory is that a Miss Clow had a little shop, and 'we' wouldn't set foot in the place. A funny memory associated with that is, that it was being discussed around our dining room table, and one of the older ones who went to New Trier High School (in Winnetka, Ill.) said that one of their classmates had that name and that their grandmother had just died. Someone else piped up, 'Good!'" [50]

Nadine clarified that the comment was one made as a youngster's "smart remark", not one of glee.

Elsewhere in the family, ca. 1900, Anna Ethel Riggs married one Reynolds Clough, a Dover lawyer, but whether his is related to Cheney Clow has not been determined (see no. 44 in the Sevil and Wells collateral genealogy).

Although their family name is written as "Ratliff" on the markers, the name has appeared as "Ratcliffe" and sometimes "Ratcliff" in other records. After the death of Capt. John Smith [No. 46] in 1857, Susanna and Eliza Ratcliffe took care of the orphaned minor children for a short while, until the children were separated into other family homes. (Photo taken in 2007.)

Generation No. 5

27. Mary[5] Smith (James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born 25 October 1762. She married Samuel Ratcliffe, Sr.

Children of Mary Smith and Samuel Ratcliffe are:

NOTES

27. Mary (Smith) Ratcliffe (1762–)
and Samuel Ratcliffe (senior) (husband of Mary Smith)

Samuel and Mary Smith Ratcliffe both died when their children were young. The graves of Susannah and Eliza Ratcliffe are beside each other, near the northeastern corner of the Chesterfield Cemetery, Centreville, close to and facing South Liberty St. (Maryland Rt. 213 southbound).

38. Susannah Ratcliffe (1792–1872)
"Susan", "Susie"

Susannah Ratcliffe never married. She had charge of the children of Capt. John Smith [No. 46] after his death in 1857 left them orphans, until legal guardians were appointed by the courts.

In the 1850 and 1860 U.S. censuses, she is listed as "Susan Ratcliff", and in the 1870 census as "Susanna Ratcliff"; in all of these censuses she resided in the household of Robert St. John Hardcastle Baynard [No. 87], in Queen Anne's Co., Maryland. Baynard was married to Ann Watson, a first cousin once removed to Susannah Ratcliffe.

Susannah Ratcliffe is buried in Chesterfield Cemetery, Centreville, Queen Anne's Co. Her grave marker gives her surname as "Ratliff". Her dates as given above were read from the weathered grave marker (on 30 March 2007).

39. Eliza Ratcliffe (179- –1867)

Eliza Ratcliffe is buried in Chesterfield Cemetery, Centreville, Queen Anne's Co. Her grave marker gives her surname as "Ratliff"; she seems not to have married. Her dates as given above were read from the weathered, partly illegible grave marker (on 30 March 2007).

28. Rachel[5] Smith (James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born 1763. She married George Smith Tarbutton, son of Edward Tarbutton and Rachel Ratcliffe. He was born 23 July 1765, and died before November 1816.

Children of Rachel Smith and George Tarbutton are:

+	40	i.	Mary Elizabeth[6] Tarbutton, born in Queen Anne's Co., Maryland; died 28 August 1840 in Queen Anne's Co., Maryland.
	41	ii.	Sarah Tarbutton. She married Latinus.
	42	iii.	George Tarbutton, born about 1785. He married Susannah Nickstraw 04 December 1823 in Kent Co., Maryland.
+	43	iv.	Samuel Tarbutton, born 13 May 1792 in Maryland; died 05 January 1848.
+	44	v.	Anna Maria Tarbutton, born 06 November 1799.

NOTES

28. Rachel (Smith) Tarbutton (1763–)
and George Smith Tarbutton (husband of Rachel Smith)

Another possible date of birth for Rachel Smith is 1765. It is possible that the birth dates of Rachel Smith and her husband, George Tarbutton, are reversed. George Smith Tarbutton's surname also appears as Turburton and Tarbutt. He was a veteran of the War of 1812, having served as a Private in the 35th Regiment (Brown's Regiment) of the Maryland Militia.

Children of Mary Tarbutton and Timothy Cruse are:
12 i. Elizabeth[3] Cruse, born 19 February 1737/38.
13 ii. William Cruse, born 10 May 1741.
14 iii. Hannah Cruse, born 23 October 1743.

Child of Mary Tarbutton and John Mahoney is:
15 i. Mary[3] Mahoney, born 09 June 1752.

NOTES

The Cruse surname is also given as Crews.

5. Edward[2] Tarbutton (William[1] Tarbotin) was born about 1720 in Maryland, and died 13 June 1781 in Maryland. He married Rachel Ratcliffe 08 November 1744 in St. Luke's Episcopal Church, Maryland.

Children of Edward Tarbutton and Rachel Ratcliffe are:
16 i. Elizabeth[3] Tarbutton.
17 ii. Hannah Tarbutton.
18 iii. Sarah Tarbutton.
19 iv. Susannah Tarbutton.
20 v. William Tarbutton, born about 1746.
21 vi. Rebecca Tarbutton, born 23 July 1748.
22 vii. Edward Tarbutton, born 01 February 1749/50.
\+ 23 viii. George Smith Tarbutton, born 23 July 1765; died before November 1816.

---

6. William[2] Tarbutton (William[1] Tarbotin) was born about 1722 in Maryland. He married Rebecca Satterfield.

Children of William Tarbutton and Rebecca Satterfield are:
24 i. Rebecca[3] Tarbutton.
25 ii. Diane Tarbutton.

26 iii. James Tarbutton.
27 iv. William Tarbutton.
28 v. Solomon Tarbutton, died after 1789.

NOTES

Solomon Tarbutton (–after 1789) [No. 28] is apparently listed in the 1790 U.S. census for Queen Anne's Co., Maryland (p. 531), with a household of two males 16 years of age or older, two males younger than 16, three females, and five slaves.

Generation No. 3

7. Joseph[3] Tarbutton (Joseph[2], William[1] Tarbotin) was born 1748.

Children of Joseph Tarbutton are:
\+ 29 i. Margaret[4] Tarbutton, born about 1784; died 1848.
30 ii. William Tarbutton, born between 1775-1780.
31 iii. Elsberry Tarbutton, born about 1771.
32 iv. Joseph S. Tarbutton, born 1773.
\+ 33 v. Marchiel Tarbutton, born 1782; died 1860.
34 vi. Humphrey Tarbutton, born 1795.
35 vii. Henry Tarbutton, born 1798.

23. George Smith[3] Tarbutton (Edward[2], William[1] Tarbotin) was born 23 July 1765, and died before November 1816. He married (1) Rachel Smith, daughter of James Smith and Susanna Moore. She was born 1763. He married (2) Susan or Susannah Rodgers. She was born 19 January 1781, and died 12 September 1848 in Logan Co., Ohio.

Children of George Tarbutton and Rachel Smith are:
36 i. Mary Elizabeth[4] Tarbutton, born in Queen Anne's County, Maryland; died 28 August 1840 in Queen Anne's County, Maryland.
37 ii. Sarah Tarbutton. She married Latinus.
38 iii. George Tarbutton, born about 1785. He married Susannah Nickstraw 04 December 1823 in Kent County, Maryland.
39 iv. Samuel Tarbutton, born 13 May 1792 in Maryland; died 05 January 1848.
40 v. Anna Maria Tarbutton, born 06 November 1799.

Children of George Tarbutton and Susan Rodgers are:
41 i. William Edward[4] Tarbutton, born 1812. He married Rachel Workman.
42 ii. John Wesley Tarbutton, born about 1813; died 18 June 1873.
43 iii. Rachel Tarbutton, born 09 November 1816 in Queen Anne's Co., Maryland; died 09 February 1890 in Logan Co., Ohio.

See the main Smith genealogy for information relating to George and Rachel (Smith) Tarbutton and descendants.

NOTES

After the death of George Smith Tarbutton, Susan (Rodgers) Tarbutton married George Bramble in January 1818 in Queen Anne's Co., Maryland. Other than their removal to Ohio and her death there, nothing more is now known of them.

29. James[5] Smith (James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born 18 March 1768, and died 04 April 1839. He married Nancy Young.

Children of James Smith and Nancy Young are:

+ 45 i. Henrietta Young[6] Smith, died March 1821 at "Lentley", Spaniard Neck, near Centreville, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland.
+ 46 ii. John Smith, born 06 June 1795 in Spaniard Neck, near Centreville, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland; died 07 October 1857 at Upper Heathworth, Spaniard Neck, near Centreville, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland.
+ 47 iii. Katherine W. Smith, born about 1801; died 30 April 1881.

NOTES

James Smith (–1839) [No. 29] is listed as "James Smith VI" in the "Smith Genealogy". Some public records list him as James Smith, Jr.

It is not clear when our Smith family moved into the Spaniard Neck area of Queen Anne's County; earlier they had resided to the northeast, in the vicinity of Crumpton. At any rate, it is James Smith and his family who introduced our extended family to the Centreville area.[51] Spaniard Neck lies between the Chester River on its north and the Corsica River on its south, west of Centreville. Somewhere in this vicinity also is a property that was called "Lentley", which was acquired by James Smith in 1820. He also built a brick house sometime after this, which has likewise been called "Lentley" but might have been at a different locale. The identities of both the property and the location of the house are now very confused. This is discussed in much more detail farther below.

The derivation of "Spaniard Neck" dates at least to the late 18th century. The name, "Spaniards Pt.", appears on a map printed in Paris in 1786, prepared at the direction of Thomas Jefferson to accompany his privately distributed Notes on Virginia, first printed in Paris.[52] Most of the properties in Spaniard Neck had been in the hands of the Hollyday and Emory families, as is noted elsewhere in this genealogy.

As mentioned with James Smith [No. 24], father of this James Smith [No. 29], it is not obvious which of different James Smiths listed in the U.S. censuses represent either, or none of, the James Smiths of our family. The earlier U.S. censuses were taken only by election district and do not indicate precisely where people lived, so we cannot identify which of the James Smiths lived in the election district embracing [51] The county seat of Queen Anne's County was removed from Queenstown to a more centrally located part of the county in 1782, which was named on the tide of post-Revolutionary War enthusiasm for the French, thus "Centre Ville". However, work on the County Court House did not begin in 1792; the first recorded case was heard in 1794. Soon after 1800, the town was quickly becoming the central market location for the area, and later in the century Centreville Landing, on the head of the Corsica River, was a steamboat terminal for cargo and passenger service to Chesapeake Bay locales. Architecturally, the Court House features in the life of Capt. James Smith [No. 89].

J. Neele. A copy of this scarce map has been examined in the American Philosophical Society, Philadelphia. A note is added in the APS's record for this map: "The Society asked Thomas Jefferson in 1805 for a copy of his Notes on Virginia. Jefferson wrote 2 May 1805 and presented 'a single copy remaining of the original edition printed at Paris, the only one almost perfectly correct, & was never sold, a few copies only having been printed and given to my friends'" (Archives, American Philosophical Society). (Jefferson originally intended his Notes on Virginia to have a limited, private distribution, but it was soon republished without his permission and since then has been widely acclaimed and often reprinted, to this day.)

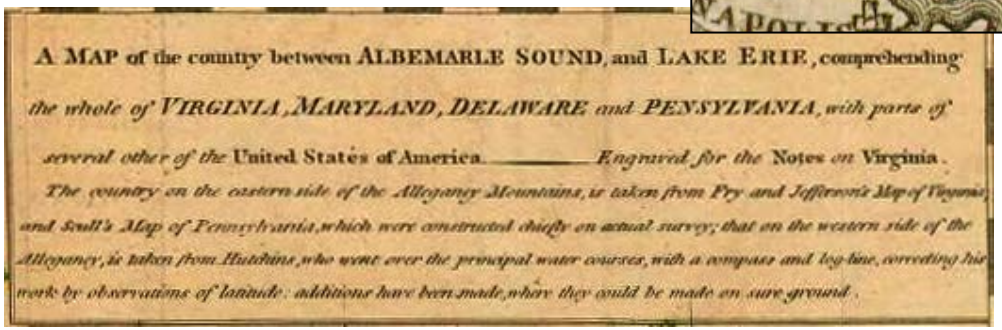
Map at right shows the relationship of "Spaniards Point" to the existing nearby towns of "Chester" to the north and "Queens Town" to the south. The town of Centreville had not yet been founded.



A MAP of the country between ALBEMARLE SOUND, and LAKE ERIE, comprehending the whole of VIRGINIA, MARYLAND, DELAWARE and PENSYLVANIA, with parts of several other of the United States of America. ——— Engraved for the Notes on Virginia.

The country on the eastern side of the Alleganey Mountains, is taken from Fry and Jefferson's Map of Virginia, and Scull's Map of Pennsylvania, which were constructed chiefly on actual survey; that on the western side of the Alleganey, is taken from Hutchins, who went over the principal water courses, with a compass and log-line, correcting his work by observations of latitude: additions have been made, where they could be made on sure ground.

In the late 18th century, "Spaniards Point" (see arrow above) was a name already in use for the projection of land between the Chester River and "Reedy Creek" (now the Corsica River). At the time this map was produced, the "Little white house", which would later be the home of Capt. John Smith, was still part of the Hollyday lands adjacent to Readbourne manor.

Spaniard Neck. If James Smith [No. 24] was not yet living in the Spaniard Neck area, then it is James Smith [No. 29] who is surely the first of our residents there.

In 1820, James Smith [No. 29] purchased from John C. Tillettson of Ulster Co., New York, the Queen Anne's Co. property called "Lentley", but this was when he was in his middle years and we know nothing of his younger adulthood. Edward Smith notes in the "Smith Genealogy":

> Those of the family who realized that James Smith was 52 years of age when he purchased "Lentley" and that he and Nancy and their family went there to live, have wondered where he had been before then. He and Nancy had raised a family of three children, Katherine, Henrietta and John. * * * We assume he spent his boyhood with his parents in Delaware, and there as a young man acquired his education.
> There is a family tradition that he and his wife, Nancy Young Smith, lived in Virginia or North Carolina and in 1804 we find them in Centreville, Maryland, when they purchased a town-lot. In 1806 they sold a one-eighth part of this lot for $716.00 to one John McFeely. On their remaining portion of this town-lot they built a small hotel, which they operated for a number of years. [53]

The "Smith Genealogy" also provides the following anecdote about James Smith: [54]

> Cousin Susie Ratcliffe told Julia Ann Baynard Martin, in March 1931, that her uncle James Smith of "Lentley", a member of the Centreville M.E. Church, as was customary held daily services in his home and, as part of these devotions, his wife Nancy would sing hymns. Upon her death he felt her loss so deeply that he discontinued these family services and as a result he was "read out" of the Church. It has been said that it was because of this action that his son, Captain John Smith, did not wish his sons to be ministers.

Capt. Smith's son, John Edward [No. 92], went to study for the ministry as soon as he was of age, and was a pastor first in the Methodist Episcopal Church, then in the Church of the New Jerusalem.

Although the Methodist Episcopal Church was customarily a circuit-based ministry in rural areas, this particular note about James Smith is an interesting one given that there was a Methodist Episcopal church building in Centreville at least since the late 1700s. The Smith convocations were surely just daily devotions rather than formal services. Also, the history of this church and the circuit of which it was a part is well documented. Frederic Emory's history of Queen Anne's Co. lists the ministers of the Queen Anne's (later Centreville) Circuit from 1802 and the presiding elders from 1803. The first M.E. church building in Centreville was put up following the receipt of a deed dated 21 June 1794. This church later burned and was replaced by a brick building that was used until 1857, when it was razed and replaced by a new structure.[55]

The "Smith Genealogy" indicates that James Smith [No. 29] died in 1838, which may be confused with the date of death for his father, James Smith [No. 24]. The Bible of James' [No. 29] brother, George

The WILL of James Smith Jr.

In the name of God Amen, I James Smith of Queen Annes County in the state of Maryland being of sound and disposing mind memory and understanding do make and publish this may last WILL and TESTAMENT in manner following that is to say—

First : I give and bequeath unto my niece Susan Ratciff (sic)[59] the sum of one hundred and fifty dollars—

Second : I given and bequeath unto my niece Eliza Ratcliff (sic) the sum of one hundred and fifty dollars—

Third : And after my just debts and funeral charges are paid I give and devise and bequeath all the residue and residue (Sic) of my estate both personal and real and mixed to my son John Smith, my daughter Catherine Covington, my Grand daughter Ann Watson, and my Grand son Joseph William Wesley Watson their heirs and assigns share and share alike, but in case either my said granddaughter or my said grandsons should die without lawful issue it is my will and desire that the share of the one so dying shall go to the survivors, and in case both my said granddaughters and my said grand son should die without lawful issue, then the whole of the estate devised to them is to go to and be equally divided between my said son John Smith and my daughter Catherine Covington their heirs and assigns share and share alike—

And Lastly, I do hereby constitute and appoint my son John Smith to be sole executor of this my last WILL and TESTAMENT, revoking and annulling all former wills by me heretofore made ratifying and confirming this and no other to be my last WILL and TESTAMENT—

The Problem of "Lentley": What and Where Was It?

The identity of Lentley has posed problems due to ambiguous and conflicting information in family traditions and notations. It is made further ambiguous by an unsatisfactory consensus by other area historians and authorities to respond with an identified locale that proves the placement of this property.

The information presented here is divergent and is still without resolution, but it is the first attempt to summarize what is known about what I call "the problem of Lentley". The property did exist, the brick house did exist, and even one still-living individual is (as a young child) in a photograph taken outside the house; but where the property and the house were seem to be points now hopelessly confused.

Lentley has been referred to as both a property and a specific house; and in turn, certain local historians and cultural resource authorities in Maryland have confused it with other, current properties near Centreville, Queen Anne's Co. These other properties carry the names "Lentley" and "Lently". (Since all family information refers to the property as "Lentley", this spelling is used here except where specific records are quoted that use the spelling "Lently". So far as is known at this time, the two spellings are interchangeable.)

This much is certain: Lentley of our Smith family was the name of a property first acquired in 1820 by James Smith [No. 29]. The property remained in the family for about a century, owned by different individuals not necessarily linearly descended; at times, several individuals owned shares of the property. Ownership eventually coalesced with Ann (Watson) Baynard [No. 87], the last of the family owners. Around 1825, a brick house was built on the property, of which we have a few photographs of it taken in 1924 and 1938. The house is said to have been built at Lentley, and it seems to have taken on the same name, in the fashion of a manor house if not otherwise simply as a conceptual error. It is also possible that the identity of "Lentley", as recalled by family members, has inadvertently been transposed to the brick house, that the house might actually have been on another family-owned property.

The house and its property have been variously identified. The following list of descriptors appears in different sources, all of which are cited in the present genealogy:

"Smith's Mistake"
"Old Baynard Place"
"Smith Homestead"
"Smith home on Chester River"
"Watson House . . . about a mile from Upper Heathworth"
"brick house at Lentl[e]y"
"Perhaps . . . the place called Lentley"

"Smith's Mistake" is in fact a known property name, as cited elsewhere in the present genealogy and which has been ascribed to our Smith family by those who cite it. The name is specifically mentioned in the will of landed Richard Bennett of Queen Anne's Co., 25 Sep 1749: "To cousin Wm. Tilghman, Smiths Mistake, made over to me by Wm. Bishop for 400 a[cres], in Spaniard Neck on Corsica Crk". [60] This is the same will aforementioned in the genealogical notes for Richard Smith [No. 15]. However, the identity of "Smith's Mistake" as also "Lentley" is an ambiguous connection given the amount of misinformed statements that have been made about this property and its house.

Searches for the house in 2004, 2006, and 2007, without knowing its precise location, failed to locate it. The last of the family still alive today who saw the brick house is Nadia (Smith) Synnestvedt; she was about 11 years of age when she visited the place, and she is shown in a photograph taken during that visit in 1938. In 2007, I revisited the area near Centreville purposely to unobtrusively re-examine the former property of William Watson, on the north side of the Corsica River, just west of Centreville, which I suspect is the (probably former) location of the brick house. This is the area that Edward S. Smith marked in a rough sketch map as "Lentley", and which coincides with the William Watson property denoted on the 1866 J. G. Strong map of Queen Anne's Co. More will be discussed of this, below.

As to where was Lentley is the problem. According to Edward S. Smith in the "Smith Genealogy", it was "on Spaniards Neck Road, between Centreville and the farm now known as Upper Heathworth, over the Corsica River from Centreville". (Upper Heathworth is on Spaniard Neck, along Lands End Road and fronting on the Chester River. This is discussed at more length with Capt. John Smith [No. 46].) Nadia (Smith) Synnestvedt recalls that the brick house was "near" Upper Heathworth, or "just down the road" from there, again placing the site well out in Spaniard Neck, not near Centreville.

According to mixed information from John McKenney, written at about the same time that Edward Smith was working on the family genealogy ca. 1960, Lentley is either south of Centreville, along the road to Starr, or north of Centreville (and across the Corsica River, but not toward Spaniard Neck).

My own research, taking into account the known but ambiguous information suggests that Lentley was northeastward from Centreville; in fact, somewhere on the north side of the north branch of the Corsica River (where it is a small stream), north of Three Bridges Branch. This contradicts family recollection other than that of Edward S. Smith, but I am unable to resolve the matter, other than the surety that the name of the property and the brick house seem to have been confused in the course of a century or so of family tradition. It seems that the brick house might not have been actually on the property traditionally called Lentley. I shall outline all of these positions below.

Since future workers are bound to revisit Smith's information about Lentley and may also recognize the name in other places near Centreville, I review all the known information, at least so far as it is known now. Bear in mind that this discussion regretfully does not solve the "problem" of Lentley and its brick house, but is the means by which all of the known evidence is presented for further consideration.

Historical and Genealogical Information About Lentley

Our principal source of information about Lentley, sketchy as it is, is the "Smith Genealogy":

> Research by Emerson B. Roberts shows that "Lentley" had at one time belonged to a John Chaires, Sr., Gentleman, of Queen Anne's County. By his will, September 16, 1717, Chaires bequeathed "Lentley" to his sons, John and Joseph Chaires, ("Baldwin, Col. American Wills")[.][61] Also, the will of George Smith, 1755, recites beneficiaries as his wife, Rebecca, sons George and Charles, daughter Rebecca Price, and daughter-in-law, Catherine Chaires. Will attested by John Price, Land Office, Annapolis, Liber 29 Folio 27. Tollettson [sic], who sold to James Smith, had purchased Lentley from the estate of a Chaires.

[60] Carson Gibb, Abstracts of Wills, from Maryland Prerogative Court (Wills), Maryland State Archives, S538, Liber 28, 1751-1754, folio 466.

From this information it was thought that our Smiths might have been formerly interested in "Lentley" but we do not at this time know of one of our Smiths by the name of George in 1755. There appears to be no connection.

There was a John Chaires on the Vestry of St. Pauls' Parish Church in its early days.[62]

[James Smith] purchased "Lentley", a farm near Centreville, Queen Anne's County, Maryland, on Spaniards Neck Road, between Centreville and the farm now known as Upper Heathworth, over the Corsica River from Centreville. "Lentley" was purchased from John C. Tillettson [sic][63] of Ulster County, New York, and his wife Marie, in 1820 for $6,525.00.

At that time there was a frame house on the farm where he lived until he built the large brick house. The frame house was at a different location and was near a spring. The brick house was built about 1825 from brick made on the farm. Somewhere in its wall is a brick with the imprint of the bare foot of Ann Baynard, made when she was a child. She was his grandchild. The house has been referred to as "Smith's Mistake".[64] Pictures show it to be three stories high, on the side of an incline, with the kitchen or basement below the main floor. It is square with a wide hall from front to back with rooms on one side of the hall. Aunt Sallie Taylor, my father's sister, said he planned to build rooms on the opposite side of the big hall also, to balance its proportions, which was never done. His wife, Nancy, had died before the brick house was built.[65]

[61] I have not found a publication with a title similar to this, but I do take note of the Maryland Calendar of Wills, edited by Jane Baldwin Cotton (W. J. C. Dulany Co. [etc.], Baltimore, 1901-1928).

[62] "Smith Genealogy", p. 20.

[63] The "Smith Genealogy" gives his name as both Tilletson and Tolletson.

[64] More likely, "Smith's Mistake" was the property name. Of additional note is an observation made by Frederic Emory in his history of Queen Anne's Co., which cites a "Smith's Neglect" at Centreville in 1724. Emory noted, "In Liber I. K., No. B., Queen Anne's Court Records, we find that on Aug. 14, 1724, George Smith conveyed to Anne Marshall part of a tract called 'Smith's Neglect,' lying in Queen Anne's county, on the north side of a branch of Corsica Creek, called Chester Mill Branch, beginning at a tree standing on the north side of Williams's Mill Pond." He continued, "The name Chester Mill applied not only to the mill but also to the village or settlement in the vicinity, and continued in use until 1789, when the name Centreville was substituted . . . ." (Frederick Emory, Queen Anne's County, Maryland; Its Early History and Development; a Series of Sketches Based Upon Original Research by Frederic Emory Originally Published in the Centreville Observer 1886-1887, Maryland Historical Society, Baltimore, 1950, p. 26). Further, "Smith's Mistake" is noted to have been a property in the Emory land holdings of Spaniard Neck, cited in the will of landed Richard Benett, 25 Sep 1749: "To cousin Wm. Tilghman, Smiths Mistake, made over to me by Wm. Bishop for 400 a[cres], inSpaniard Neck on Corsica Crk" (Carson Gibb, Abstracts of Wills, from Maryland Prerogative Court (Wills), Maryland State Archives, S538, Liber 28, 1751-1754, folio 466). The is the same will aforementioned in the genealogical notes for Richard Smith [No. 15].

Ambiguous locations of the property called "Lentley" where had stood the brick house built by James Smith [No. 29]; based on information from family sources various correspondents. Also shown are other referred sites. See text for complete discussion*.

As to the property—"Lentley":

> Henrietta Young Smith Watson and her husband, Joseph Taylor Watson had one child, Ann Watson, born June 14, 1820, died March 18, 1903. She [Ann] married Robert J. Hardcastle Baynard on October 2, 1843. She bought the shares of the other devisees and became the owner of "Lentley". She bought the share of "Capt." John Smith in 1846, and Katherine Covington's share and exchanged her share in her father's estate with J. W. W. Watson for his share in "Lentley".
> "Lentley" was later sold to General William McKenney and at last report is is [sic] still owned by one of his heirs or beneficiaries. William McKenney was of the same family as the present owner of "Upper Heathworth", John McKenney, whose uncle, Henry Deaver, married Frances May Watson (Fannie May).[66]

Edward S. Smith drew a very rough sketch map on a single piece of paper, written in blue and red ink, that relatively located the locations of various Smith family properties with respect to each other. He placed Lentley northwest of Centreville, in a pocket formed by the course of the Corsica River and what today is Maryland Rt. 213.[67] Of significance, too, is that modern-day Spaniard Neck Road departs from Rt. 213 north of Centreville; whereas at one time the road departed to Spaniard Neck from the west side of Centreville, crossed the Corsica River (at the locale where the farm of Joseph William Wesley Watson stood), then struck out toward Spaniard Neck from a point northwest of Centreville. Today, this road that departs from Centreville to cross the Corsica River is Watson Road.

A 1963 letter from Alfred C. Bryan [No. 206, see under Anna Virginia Smith, No. 90] to his cousin, Edward S. Smith, includes the following brief comment: "When I was at Lentley, the old brick house, the McKenney estate owned it too."[68] Regretfully, there is no further comment, as Bryan was responding to some "McKenney notes" that Ed Smith had sent to him; and there is no date on the letter.

Photographs of the Brick House at Lentley

Also see Additions & Corrections

There are three photographic views of Lentley that survive in our family, in multiple copies. Two views were taken by Gilbert Smith in 1924; they show the front and rear elevations and a bit of one side. The third photo, taken ca. 1938, shows the front elevation and a side elevation (fortuitously this is the side opposite from the partial side elevation that is shown in one of the 1924 photos). Unfortunately, very little is shown in these pictures that reveals the nature of the landscape around the house. All one can tell with certainty is that the house is built into a gradual slope. Some viewers have interpreted a very indistinct background as being "water", but I am not convinced of this.

[66] "Smith Genealogy", p. 22. The identity of General McKenney has not be determined; nor has the McKenney's genealogical relationship to the Smith family been determined.

[67] When I first wrote this, I had not yet noticed the correspondence between this general location and the W. W. Watson property noted on the 1866 J. G. Strong map of Queen Anne's Co., which plays prominently in this discussion. I keep the original discussion as a means to document the process I followed in the attempt to establish what, and where, was Lentley.

[68] Alfred C. Bryan to Laura and Ed [Laura and Edward S. Smith], 14 Feb 1963.

Annotations on the photos that I have seen are as follows:

1. 1924 photo with annotation by Gilbert Smith:

   "Old Baynard Place near Centreville, Md. Owned and built by your Great-great-grandfather, Grandfather of John Edw. Smith Photo 1924 Year built not known Bricks presumably from Europe To Earl [sic] C. Smith Merry Christmas from Nora and Gilbert". Someone else has added: "Perhaps this was the place called 'Lentley' built by my Great grandfather Or" —

   The remainder of the second annotation was eradicated, but from what can be read of it, the annotation seems to have referred to James Smith and Henrietta Smith, who are mentioned in a similar fashion on the annotation noted for photo no. 2 (below). Why the comment was eradicated seems to imply that the information was not considered to be correct.

2. 1924 photo in the possession of Nadia (Smith) Synnestvedt, with an annotation written by an unknown person:

   "Built about 1825 of bricks made & burned on the farm. One brick in the house has the print of Ann Watson's foot. She was about 5 yrs. of age at the time. Built by James Smith, father of John Smith and of Henrietta Smith & of Catherine Smith."

3. 1924 photo with an annotation by Katharine S. Spamer, probably written in the 1960s-1970s:

   "Smith Homestead—Eastern Shore—bricks brought from England"

4. 1924 photo with an annotation by an unknown person:

   "Smith home on Chester River"

5. Ca. 1938 photo with an annotation by one of the Gilbert Smith children (Nadia Smith Synnestvedt?):

   "Watson House Spaniards Neck Rd. about a mile from Upper Heathworth blt. about 1820"; and another annotation (by Nadia Synnestvedt?): "Father, Mother, Gloria & I were there circa 1938."

Additional prints of these photographs are likely to exist, held by other members of the family who have not been contacted. These prints may have additional or similar annotations.

Part of the family tradition about the brick house at Lentley notes that the house was built from bricks brought from England. The availability of bricks from England is not so far-fetched, because, at least in Baltimore, laws had been passed to prohibit shipmasters from indiscriminately discarding stone ballast in the harbor channel or other convenient place. This resulted in a reliance on a marketable but durable commodity as ballast; bricks were a good choice. Whether the brick house that is under discussion here was built from bricks bought from ships' ballast (not necessarily from England), or made on the site, has

If the indistinct, darker area above it depicts trees on the far shore, the water body is too narrow for it to be the Chester River, but more like the Corsica River near Centreville, which is one of the conjectural sites of "Lentley". See the text for discussions of this problem.

Note in this view that the house is positioned on a slope, which drops off to the back, as also indicated by the rear steps rising higher to the doorway than on the front of the house. There are no views of the left-side elevation that would include the chimney. not been reliably determined.[69] However, Edward Smith specifically stated that the bricks were made on site: [70]

> The brick house was built about 1825 from brick made on the farm. Somewhere in its wall is a brick with the imprint of the bare foot of Ann Baynard, made when she was a child.

If the child's footprint is in the brick, the bricks must have been fired (and thus manufactured) at the site. Inasmuch as the area is good farmland and immediately adjacent to Chesapeake Bay, the soil is not especially sandy; thus inferentially by understanding geology, deposits of clay for brickmaking are likely to have been located in the area, particularly near the rivers that are tidal extensions of the bay. While such deposits may not have been commercially viable due to limited extent, specific brick-making projects might have been accommodated by smaller deposits, which presumably were exhausted long ago.

Information from Other Sources

Following is an outline of the information about Lentley that was received from sources outside of the Smith family. After these are listed, I include my own comments.

1. A letter from John McKenney to Edward S. Smith states: [71]

> Mrs. Jacobs was Anne McKenney, daughter of the General, who inherited the Baynard Farm after his death. This property was known as "Lently", "Cork House", "Pleasant Springs", "Lently Addition" and "Neglect" and was bought by James Smith, June 22, 1846, from John Tilletson and his wife of the State of New York, who had it from Charles Servell previously. See JTS 5-97, 98, 99.
> My Grandfather had it from George W. Taylor, who held a mortgage on Lently from Robert J. H. Baynard and Ann (Watson), his wife. Ann Baynard acquirred [sic] Lently by deed from John Smith and Mary, his wife, and Joseph W. W. Watson. See SED 3-489, also WAGH #1-368.

> I am enclosing the early deed references to "Lently." I've learned from Judge Sause, president of the Queen Anne's Co. Historical Society where Lently is located. [sic] I've also learned that the actual house called Lently is frame and is surrounded by a modern development. Linda Nicholson owns Lently today. Baynard Farm is on Starr Rd. near Rte. 201. I'm uncertain how Baynard Farm relates to Lently. [Driving directions are here given to a site north of Centreville, to Taynard Rd. and Lently Rd.] * * *

Comments on the Information Received from Other Sources

The Manor Road, noted in McKenney's letter (above), is called Starr Road today; it is Maryland Rt. 309, connecting Maryland Rt. 213 with the town of Starr. Information obtained from Internet websites takes [74] The remark further confuses issue. As inidicated in the "Smith Genealogy", James Smith [No. 29] had resided in a frame house but built the brick house later, although not necessarily at the same location.

notice of a "Baynard Farm, Inc." somewhere on Starr Rd. A drive down Starr Rd. in 2005 failed to locate any notice of Baynard Farm at least by signage or mailbox.

The will of William H. Downes of Queen Anne's Co., dated 22 March 1867 (probate 4 June 1867), notes in part, ". . . the farm whereon, I now reside, commonly called and known by the name of the Baynard Farm, situate, lying and being on the South side of the main County road leading from Bridgetown to Ruthsburg . . . ."[76] This road is today Maryland Rt. 304, which passes east-west through Centreville; the locale mentioned is between the two towns indicated, about 5-10 miles east of Centreville. The Downes property was on the western side of the present-day junction of Rts. 304 and 405 (Ruthsburg-Bridgetown Rd. and Price Station Rd., respectively).[77]

John McKenney, however, indicated that "Lently, or the Baynard Farm" on the Manor Road was located near "Three Bridges Branch". However, Three Bridges Branch is not near there; it lies east of Centreville. It is a prominent tributary that flows westward, across the northern part of Centreville and into the Corsica River. Its eastward (headward) extension passes some five miles north of Starr.

East of Centreville by 2½ miles, and nestled next to Three Bridges Branch, is a place today called Lently Farm. This seems to be the same place mentioned in Mary Kate O'Donnell's letter, above. Lently Farm lies on the west side of Tanyard Rd., about ½ mile northwest of the modern intersection of Maryland Rts. 301 and 305. Aerial photographs of the area taken in 1992 show a respectable farm, with several isolated outlying buildings. When visited in 2005, the site was a development of new homes on small lots.

According to a U.S. Postal Service Zip Code map, there is a Pleasant Springs Drive about ½ mile north of Lently Farm, accessed from Claiborne Fields Drive. In between runs the northern branch of Three Bridges Branch, a small tributary to the north branch of the Corsica River.

Recall that Ann Watson [No. 87], daughter of Joseph Taylor Watson and Henrietta (Smith) Watson [No. 45] and granddaughter of James Smith [No. 29], seems to have been the last of the Smith family to own Lentley. I referred to the 1866 J. G. Strong map of Queen Anne's Co. [78] to identify where she might have lived. She married Robert St. John Hardcastle Baynard in 1843. Northeast of Centreville—approximately where "Lently Farm" was located along Three Bridges Branch—is a property of "R. J. Baynard".

The 1833 deed reference to Lentley (itemized above) notes a transfer of "Lentley" to William Y. Bourke, who must be William Young Bourke, grandfather of Mary Edwardine Bourke who married Blanchard Emory (born 1831) of "Poplar Grove" on Spaniard Neck. The deed transaction specifically notes that this property adjoined those of John Emory and James Smith, and further included part of "Pleasant Spring".

[78] J. G. Strong's Map of Queen Anne's County, Md., from actual surveys taken by the author and the U.S. Coast Survey (J. G. Strong, Centreville, Maryland, 1866). The map depicts in great detail the locations of properties and their owners.

In the 1866 J. G. Strong Map of Queen Anne's Co., adjacent to the "R. J. Baynard" property along Three Bridges Branch, is a property of "B. Emory". There is nothing on Spaniard Neck to imply that the Baynards had a property there; in fact, the entirety of Spaniard Neck southwest of Capt. Monteville Bowen's Upper Heathworth (acquired earlier from George M. Smith, who had purchased the property from the estate of Capt. John Smith) was owned by members of the Emory family at the very time when John and Ann Watson Baynard were raising their family at Lentley. Also see Additions & Corrections

The J. G. Strong map of 1866 shows some other interesting peculiarities; perhaps they are coincidences, but they cannot be overlooked given the state of confusion as to the identity of Lentley. First, almost precisely where Nadine Synnestvedt recalled the brick house having been, a mile or so southward from Upper Heathworth on today's Lands End Rd., was cluster of properties, labeled "J. W. Chambers" (not known to be related to family), "Sch. H." [School House], and "Wagon Shop". Robert St. John Hardcastle Baynard was a wheelwright. Second, about two miles or so northward along the road from Upper Heathworth was a property of J. G. Watson.

Interestingly, there are two other Watson properties noted on the 1866 J. G. Strong Map of Queen Anne's Co., both just north of Centreville and north of the Corsica River. First, there is a "W. Watson" property on the Corsica River (today Watson Rd. is nearby, which connects with Burrisville Rd. south of Spaniard Neck Rd.); and second, there is a "J. W. Watson" property between the converging lines of what today are Spaniard Neck Rd. and Burrisville Rd. Either of these properties could be the property assuredly referred to as the Watson place both by Edward S. Smith in the "Smith Genealogy" and by Gilbert Smith in an incomplete autobiography. Note, too, that Gilbert Smith annotated a 1924 photograph of the house as the "Old Baynard Place", suggesting even then some mixed recollections. A drive through this area in 2005 failed to sight any residence (or built-upon residence) that resembled the brick house of interest to us. The Corsica Rd. that dead-ends along the north side of the Corsica River is today lined with new houses. Also see comments with Joseph William Wesley Watson [No. 94], which describes a different, large house on the Watson property near the Corsica River.

One final note is in order. South of Centreville, at the northeastern part of the present-day intersection of U.S. Rt. 301 (a limited-access highway) and Maryland Rt. 213 (the road from Centreville) there is a farm on which stands a house that contains an original, old portion constructed of brick. The architectural similarity of the brick part of the house is remarkably like that of the brick house shown in the family photographs, the subject of the discussion here. The window and door placements, and a (reconstructed) chimney placement suggests the great similarity. Unfortunately, it seems that part of the home in the process of being covered with siding when it was first seen in May 2005; the site was again visited in September 2006. This house is directly south of the property that had been the from of George Moore Smith [No. 52] between about 1860 and the 1890—today it is a new housing development. Although the locale for this brick house is south of Centreville by a mile or two, I nevertheless have felt compelled to mention it for its striking physical similarity to the house that is sought here.

Comments on the Problem of Lentley and the Brick House

This is all perplexing, to be sure. The matters are not likely to be resolved easily, or soon. There are too many conflicting pieces of evidence even though many of the pieces are, taken by themselves, reliable information.

Family information seems confused. Recollections, and annotations on family photographs of the brick house, refer to it variously as "Smith's Mistake", the "Old Baynard Place", the "Smith Homestead", the "Smith home on Chester River", the "Watson House . . . about a mile from Upper Heathworth", "Lentley", and "Perhaps . . . the place called Lentley".

There seems to be too many ambiguous identifications of Lentley—albeit each seeming to be certain based upon legal documents and personal recollection. The greatest number of pieces of information that fit together seem to identify Lentley as what today is the "Lently Farm" locale off of Tanyard Rd., north of Three Bridges Branch, northeast of Centreville. On the other hand, the brick house in question here may not have been on that Lentley property.

Family tradition holds that Lentley had a brick house built by James Smith, not far from Upper Heathworth in Spaniard Neck along the Chester River that was later bought by Capt. John Smith. The location of the brick house—and inferentially the location of Lentley—was known to Gilbert Smith who photographed the house in 1924. His daughter, Nadia ("Nadine"), who had visited the brick house with her father around 1938—a photograph shows this, too—did so as a youngster about 11 years of age. Most people can identify with the illusion of distances seeming to have been very much farther in youth than they are in the reality of adulthood. Although the recollection is that the brick house was a mile or so from Upper Heathworth, the distance might have been much greater; but, many miles seems to be at odds even with a recollection from youth. If by chance the house was located at the property known as "Smith's Mistake", it seems that the locale would be close to the main part of Spaniard Neck; specifically near Spaniard Point and possibly near Poplar Grove. Still this is several miles from Upper Heathworth.

We should reconsider that the identity of the brick house belongs somehow with the William Watson property on the Corsica River, just west of Centreville along the former route of Spaniard Neck Rd. (the part now along Watson Road between Centreville and its junction with Spaniard Neck Rd.). Gilbert Smith knew exactly where it was; he photographed it in 1924. In his incomplete autobiography, he also fondly recalled the Watson property (with another, large house). Edward S. Smith likewise referred to the Watson place being near Centreville. And family members returned to visit the brick house again around 1938, of which there is a photograph of them there; but the present informant, Nadia Smith Synnestvedt, who recalls that the house was close to Upper Heathworth in Spaniard Neck, was at the time a youngster of about 11 years of age.

James Smith [No. 29] bought a property called Lentley in 1820, and later built a brick house. But we should further consider that the brick house was not built at Lentley—that is, if the property named Lentley is indeed the former farmsite northeast of Centreville near Three Bridges Branch. James Smith was also a landowner in Centreville, as is noted in his genealogical sketch. As an active member of the Centreville M.E. Church he held daily devotions at his house, which inferentially favors a site closer to town than the putative site of Lentley to the northeast of Centreville, or (even less likely) farther out to the west in Spaniard Neck.

After James' death, his children inherited Lentley; these were Henrietta (the first Mrs. Joseph Taylor Watson), Katherine (the second Mrs. Joseph Taylor Watson, later Mrs. John H. Covington), and Capt. John Smith. They likewise would have inherited the brick-house property across the Corsica River from Centreville. Henrietta's only child, Ann Watson (Mrs. Robert J. Hardcastle Baynard) later bought the family shares in Lentley from Capt. John Smith and Katherine Covington. The Baynard name remained on this property in the 1866 map of Queen Anne's County. Ann exchanged her own share in Lentley with her half-brother, Joseph William Wesley Watson (William Watson). So it is possible that somehow the Lentley name was transposed by later family members to the William Watson property near Centreville—the property with the brick house somewhere on it, built by his grandfather, James Smith. By some other family members his property would also have been called the "Watson place".

In any case, it seems more likely that the brick house would have been at the William Watson property west of Centreville, not out on Spaniard Neck as is supposed. There are few structures that ever existed on the Chester River area of Spaniard Neck; even today there are just a few. One would expect that, historically, the principal residences are all accounted for.

Similarly, few structures existed to the northeast of Centreville, in the area north of Three Bridges Branch; only recently have some housing developments been laid down in the area. That non-family correspondents during the 20th century had not pinpointed the location of the brick house seems to indicate that it either was no longer standing or that it was not recognized in the relative "bustle" of structures close to a growing Centreville (the Watson property, for example).

But even with suggestive evidence like this, Gilbert Smith and Edward S. Smith both present additional, contradictory information that indicates that the William Watson property had a different, larger house on the Corsica River. As noted in more detail in the genealogical sketch for Joseph William Wesley Watson (William Watson) [No. 94]:

Gilbert Smith wrote an in incomplete autobiography:[79]

> Do I not know the Corsica River, on whose bank my cousin William Watson feasted the gentlemen of Centerville on huge oysters, brought out steaming on the shell in peach baskets from a special fireplace under the porch? Fine view of the river and town.

Edward S. Smith, in the "Smith Genealogy", wrote of J. W. W. Watson and his home: [80]

> Leaving Centreville by Spaniard's Neck Road, just over the Corsica River on the left is the old Joseph W. Watson farm with its fine house. One of Gilbert's trips to Eastern Shore with Nora he was given a picture, a wood-cut probably from the local newspapers,[81] which shows the place I have visited twice, once as a small boy, when the family stopped there before moving to Florida, and again when with Aunt Sallie Taylor[82] and Ed Hart, of Townsend, Delaware, we attended the funeral of Cousin William Watson.

These recollections provide several pieces of information to us. E. S. Smith's reference to "Spaniard's Neck Road" locates the property exactly where the "W. Watson" property is noted on the 1866 J. G. Strong map (cited above). He indicates that the road traveled past the house, between it and the Corsica River. Interestingly, Smith refers to the Spaniard Neck Road leaving Centreville and crossing the Corsica River, which is a different alignment for the road than it is today. Today, Spaniard Neck Road reaches Rt. 301 directly, without crossing the Corsica River, north of Centreville; but in E. S. Smith's time (and earlier) it more sensibly would have gone directly into Centreville. Today this alignment would be what is called Watson Road, which, after it crosses the Corsica River, eventually reaches the current Spaniard Neck Road.

Visit to the Area in March 2007

Today, both the Three Bridges Branch area northeast of Centreville and part of the former William Watson property just west of Centreville are redeveloped into numerous single-home lots.

No older structures have been noticed in the Three Bridges Branch area.

The part of the William Watson property that was about at the crest of land just north of the shallow valley formed by the Corsica River now hosts a yellow structure set back several hundred feet west of Watson Road (the road that crosses the Corsica River). The original block of the structure matches approximately the size and dimensions of the brick house; but it is covered with yellow siding of some kind, and an addition has been attached on the side that faces the road. The window placements of the brick house are not seen in this structure; no chimneys like those of the brick house are noticed. If this happens to be the brick house—and there is no certain indication of this—it is unrecognizable today, having been modified and its brick walls hidden by newer siding.

Inasmuch as the brick house as seen in the photographs was somewhat worn about a century ago, it may have been razed since then.
